How often do we hear or see this expression used in describing a beautiful woman!

Denude that head of its hair and instead of a queenly, royal bearing we have a fright. The hair makes all the difference. To have that glorious abundance of radiant hair which always crowns "a regal head," one should use Newbro's Herpicide.

Herpicide represents the last word in scientific hair culture. It destroys the dandruff germ, checks falling hair and corrects generally, diseases of the hair and scalp.

The positive results and its delicate but refreshing odour, recommends Newbro's Herpicide to ladies of refinement everywhere.

BELMONT CLUB DANCE

The Belmont Club held their fourth annual dance in the Conservatory of Music Hall last evening when about two hundred and fifty of their guests danced through an enjoyable programme. It was easily one of the most successful events of the kind that the Club has ever held. The hall was beautifully decorated for the occasion, with flowers and the colours of the Club, and the music was supplied by Fralick's celebrated orchestra of Toronto. Refreshments were supplied by Hooper's in buffet style. The patronesses were Mrs. E. V. Frederick, Mrs. F. W. Trebilcock, Mrs. J. R. Stratton, Mrs. K. G. Lech, Mrs. W. H. Bradburn, and Mrs. W. Mellroy. The stewards were Mr. C. P. Fee, Mr. W. G. Cochrane, Mr. S. P. Ecclestone, Mr. W. T. Belleghem, Mr. F. J. Heaslip, Mr. H. F. Hall, Mr. C. K. Lech, Mr. G. E. Clarke, Mr. W. R. Hunter, Mr. A. W. Belleghem.

Miss Brock Is New Soloist

Miss Pearl Brock, formerly of Toronto, has accepted the position of contralto soloist in Charlotte street Methodist church of this city. Miss Brock is the possessor of a rich, deep contralto voice, full of sympathy, and her singing has been greatly enjoyed by those who have thus far had an opportunity of hearing her. Before coming to Peterborough, she was soloist in Jarvis street Baptist church, Toronto and prior to that held a similar position in the Metropolitan church of that city.

Miss Brock, who is a daughter of Mr. Ivan Brock, manager of the Brinton Carpet Works, will be welcomed by musical and social circles in Peterborough.

Fifth Anniversary

Last Sunday marked the reaching of the fifth anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev. J. R. Webb at the Murray street Baptist church. Mr. Webb occupied the pulpit at both services, and there were large congregations present both morning and evening. The morning text was Acts. II-6, "And when this sound was heard, the multitude came together."

It is interesting to note that since Rev. Mr. Webb came from Montreal to Peterborough, almost 200 people have been added to the membership of the Murray street church. Under his pastorate too, in addition to magnificent gifts to the building enterprise the church has in hand, between $23,000 and $24,000 has been contributed for local expenses and mission work. This of course does not include the large personal gifts made by different members of the congregation to the various Mission Boards. In spite of the fact that special obligations had to be met in connection with the new church, etc., during the past year, the givings to missions were considerably greater than in the year proceeding.

The new church, which will cost in the neighbourhood of $60,000, will be opened in the spring and will prove none too large, so rapidly is the church growing under Mr. Webb's pastorate. It will be an ideal structure in location and equipment.

The annual meeting of the church is announced for next Wednesday evening, when the reports will show every department in a flourishing condition.

DEATH OF DR. J. OSWALD DYKES

DISTINGUISHED NATIVE OF PORT-GLASGOW, SCOTLAND

The Rev. Dr. J. Oswald Dykes, Principal-Emeritus of Westminster College, Cambridge, died suddenly at the residence of his son in Edinburgh on the 2nd inst.

On his retirement from the premier position in the Presbyterian Church in England, Dr. Dykes came to reside in Edinburgh, but owing to the state of his health, he took little part in public work. He attended church on the Sunday, to all appearance in his usual health: and the announcement of his death from heart fail- will be received as a shock by his many friends in Edinburgh and throughout the world.

Dr. Dykes was born in 1835 at Port-Glasgow, where his father was the town clerk. He was educated at Dumfries Academy and at Edinburgh University, where he graduated in 1854. He took his Divinity course at the New College, Edinburgh, and afterwards studied at the Universities of Heidelberg and Erlangen. In 1859 he was ordained a minister of the Free Church of Scotland at East Kilbride, where he built up a reputation as an accomplished preacher. His fame spread beyond the west of Scotland; and it reached the congregation of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, who selected him to be colleague to the late Principal Candlish. He contributed largely to theological literature, his publications including "On the written Word" (1868); "Beatitudes of the Kingdom" (1874); "From Jerusalem to Antioch; Sketches of the Primitive Church" (1874); "Abraham, the Friend of God" (1877); "Daily Prayers for the Household" (1881); Sermons (1882); "Laws of the Ten Words" (1884); and "The Gospel according to St. Paul: Studies in the Epistles to the Romans" (1889).

SCOTTISH "WEE FREE" MINISTER DEAD

REV. M. MACQUEEN, KILTEARN

Rev. Murdoch Macqueen, minister of Kiltearn Free Church, Ross-shire, died on 2nd inst. He was about 68 years of age and till the last was able to carry on his usual ministerial duties.

Mr. Macqueen was born in the Free Church manse at Strontian, Argyllshire, where his father, a greatly respected Highland minister of the Disruption—the Rev. John Macqueen—was minister of the famous floating church. He ministered at Tarbert for several years, and over thirty years ago was translated to Kiltearn in succession to the Rev. Dugald Mathieson. Those who only knew him through reading speeches delivered by him in the height of controversy were likely to form a totally wrong conception alike of the man and of his message. He was a persuasive and winning preacher, and in that respect he followed in the footsteps of his father. Mr. Macqueen throughout his life was closely identified with what was known as the Constitutional party, led by Dr. Begg and Dr. Kennedy in the Free Church.

During the strenuous days which followed on the union between the United Presbyterian Church and the majority of the Free Church in 1900, Mr. Macqueen was brought prominently to the front by his firm stand for the "Wee Frees." Along with other gifts he possessed a keen sense of humour, and was at his best in replying to the Church leaders, whose policy he disliked. He was appointed Moderator of the Free Church General Assembly in May, 1904.

ANNUAL MEETING ST. LUKE'S BIBLE CLASS

The annual meeting of St. Luke's Bible Class was held in St. Luke's Rectory last evening, with a large attendance.

The report was presented by the Recording Secretary, Miss Lucy Baxter, as to membership and average attendance. The financial statement was presented by Miss Violet Whittaker, covering receipts and expenditures for the year, and showing a surplus of $13.00 on hand.

The following officers were selected for the ensuing year:

Hon. President—Rev. F. J. Sawers.
Hon. Vice-President—J. J. Turner, Jr.
President—Sam Whittaker.
Vice-President—Miss B. Hartley.
Recording-Secretary — Miss May Curtis.
Treasurer—Miss Lillian Scott.

It was decided to continue the annual excursion on July 1st, and the Committee was appointed to look into the matter and make the necessary arrangements.

NO SLIDING ON SUNDAY

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., JAN. 19.—By a vote of three to one, the Toronto Board of Control has instructed the City Solicitor to prepare a by-law prohibiting tobogganning in the city parks, on Sunday. There will likely be a warm fight in the City Council about it.

Here is a remedy that will cure your cold. Why waste time and money experimenting when you can get a preparation that has won a world-wide reputation by its cures of this disease and can always be depended upon? It is known everywhere as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and is a medicine of real merit. For sale by all dealers.

British Films

(Lindsay Warder.)

It is a well known fact that American pictures (films) are flooding Canada. It is also a well-known fact that these pictures, at least a large number of them, although good in their place, do not help to promote patriotism in the hearts of young Canadians, especially when they depict a few American soldiers routing a large number of English soldiers.

For some time past Mr. Edmonds, the proprietor of Wonderland, has been in communication with a view to have English firms enter into Canada. The chief drawback, besides the matter of transport, is the high duty on the English films. In order to start the ball rolling in the right direction, Mr. Edmonds communicated with Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, and this morning received the following reply:

Dear Mr. Edmunds,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 9th instant relative to films for your moving picture show. I shall be very pleased indeed to take this matter up with the Minister of Customs at once and do all that I can to assist you in the matter. I agree with you that it certainly is most important to show more English pictures than they are doing at the present time. American pictures are simply flooding the country.

Faithfully,
SAM HUGHES.

PELL IN A FAINT

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I could fall to the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

Female Help Is In Demand

There seems to be a great demand in Peterborough for feminine labour. In the advertising section of the Examiner to-day will be found an advertisement from the Brinton Carpet Co. who are anxious to secure twelve women and girls at good wages to sew carpets. Other factories are also after feminine assistance.

"The Apostolic Faith Mission" will occupy the Princess Theatre on Sunday, 21st inst. Meetings at 3 o'clock p.m. and in the evening at half-past Seven. All will be welcome. 2d

Italian Officers Seize Another Vessel Near Tunis

FRANCE'S IRE IS ROUSED

Tunis, Jan. 20.—Some Italian destroyers yesterday seized the French steamer Manouba, bound to Tunis from Marseilles. The Manouba is a mail boat belonging to the French line.

Marseilles, Jan. 20.—The steamer Manouba, which is the regular Tunis mail boat, carried when she was seized by the Italian warships a Turkish medical mission, consisting of 27 members of the Red Crescent, headed by Drs. Enymin Bey and Rifki Effendi. She also had on board 67 sacks of mail for Tunis and one for Tripoli.

Searched for Turks.

Tunis, Jan. 20.—The Italian officers who effected the seizure of the Manouba declared that the reason for her arrest was that it was believed Turkish officers were on board disguised as nurses.

Italian destroyers also stopped and searched the German steamer Schleswig of the North German Lloyd, which left Marseilles on Wednesday and reached here Thursday, and is due at Alexandria on Jan. 29.

Intense Feeling Aroused.

Paris, Jan. 20.—The seizure of the French steamer Manouba by the Italian cruiser yesterday has aroused intense feelings in political and commercial circles. Premier Poincare has instructed the French Ambassador at Rome to protest against the seizure and several members of the Chamber of Deputies declare they will interpellate Premier Poincare about it. The Premier, however, has announced that he will make a declaration on the subject Monday.

The Association of Ship Workers of France has written a letter to M. Poincare pointing out the injury to neutral shipping caused by the Turco-Italian war, as clearly demonstrating the urgent necessity for the establishment of an international prize court, and asking him to do his utmost to hasten the ratification by Parliament of The Hague convention of 1907, the Declaration of London of 1909 and an additional protocol thereto of 1910.

Will Release Steamers.

Rome, Jan. 20.—The Italian Government last night telegraphed the authorities at Cagliari to immediately release the steamer Carthage, which recently was seized by the Italians and her cargo. It is said that the steamer Manouba, a French line mail boat, which was captured by Italian destroyers, also will be released after a number of Turks, who were on board her, were landed.

The order for the release of the Carthage was sent after the French charge d'affaires here had assured Foreign Minister San Guiliano that Aviator Duval, who was a passenger on the steamer, had announced to the French Government a formal undertaking to place neither himself nor his aeroplane at the service of either the Italians or the Turks in Tripoli, whither the Carthage was bound when she was captured. The charge d'affaires told Marquis San Guiliano that the French Government would see to it that Duval strictly observed his promise.

Bombarded Zoara.

Tripoli, Jan. 20.—As punishment to the inhabitants of Zoara, who fired on Italian boats, the warships Carlo Alberto, Iride, Futmin and Ciprio Castope yesterday bombarded that locality, destroying the barracks, the residence of Kaimakan, of administrator, and sweeping the Turkish trenches. A number of Turks were seen fleeing in disorder. Many of them were struck by Italian shells.

Turks Fought Bulgarians.

London, Jan. 20.—Turkish troops have had a sharp fight with a Bulgarian band near Kratovo, a town of 6,000 in habitants in the Vilayet of Kosova, a short distance east of Uskup, says a despatch to a news agency from Saloniki. Five of the Bulgarians, including their leader, were killed, while the Turks lost one man. It is said that bombs and a number of important documents were found on the dead Bulgarians.

To Talk Peace

Rome, Jan. 20.—Although it is announced officially that the object of the visit of Herr Von Kiderlin-Waechter, the German Foreign Secretary, is to meet Foreign Minister San Giuliano, the real reason for his coming is to discuss possible conditions of peace between Italy and Turkey and the amount Italy is ready to pay as indemnity to Turkey for the loss of Tripoli.

During the visit of Herr Von Kiderlin-Waechter, the basis for a renewal of the triple alliance between Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy will be discussed.

South Waterloo Agriculturists.

Galt, Jan. 20.—The annual meeting of the South Waterloo Agricultural Society was held here yesterday afternoon. Reports were all satisfactory, showing the society to be doing good work. John Orr was elected president.

The annual spring seed fair and stallion show will be held on April 9, and the annual fall fair on Sept. 20 and 21.

WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mothers who have once used Baby's Own Tablets for their little ones always keep them in the house. They realize the value of the Tablets in banishing baby's illness when it comes, or better still, in warding off illness by giving him an occasional dose of the Tablets to keep his stomach and bowels regular. Concerning them Mrs. Isaac McDonald, Nappan Station, writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets and would not now be without them as they are the very best medicine I know of for little ones." The Tablets are sold at 25 cents a box by medicine dealers or by mail from The Dr Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BAD FIRE IN TORONTO.

Damage Is $125,000 and Three Firemen Are Hurt.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Damage roughly estimated at $125,000; three firemen injured by a loose lay of hose carrying a high pressure stream, the partial demoralization of the street car services, affecting the lines serving two of the big theatres, and one more demonstration of the crippling effect of overhead wires upon fire fighting, were the results of a blaze which broke out in the Allan Manufacturing Co.'s five-storey brick building at the southeast corner of Simcoe and Pearl streets at 7.50 last night.

Those who lose are the Allan Manufacturing Co., who own the building and occupy the three lower floors and basement, where they manufacture whitewear, blouses and umbrellas, and operate the Swiss Laundry, and R. D. Fairbairn, who manufactures whitewear and blouses in the two top floors. The estimate of the damage sets it at $25,000 to building, and $100,000 to contents by fire and water.

The fire broke out in either the third or top floor, and was seen by A. J. Phillips of the Toronto General Electric office on Simcoe street, who says he heard something which sounded like an explosion and ran into the street to find flames bursting from the windows of both floors at the middle of the building on Pearl street. He turned in an alarm at once and says that the firemen were there almost immediately.

A clear or accurate estimate of the damage could not be had. Mr. Fairbairn was not in the city, being on his way here from Montreal on the train, and did not learn of the fire until his arrival in Toronto this morning. None of the Allan firm could be seen.

There was one fortunate feature of the fire and that was that the section of the Fairbairn premises lying to the east of the firewall and being untouched either by fire or water contained the factory, where more than three hundred girls are employed. This will save these employes from loss of occupation. A number will be out of work in the laundry and Allan factory.

There will be a lot of folk whose laundry will be like a purchase at a fire sale, only wetter. The firemen were kept on the job until morning, and the car service did not settle down to normal routes and conditions until after midnight.

In Race With Ice Floes.

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 20.—All of the Gloucester fishing vessels, comprising the fleet in Newfoundland waters have started for home, according to information received here yesterday. Following the news received Thursday and the day before regarding the successful dash for liberty made by the eighteen schooners, which had been imprisoned by ice in Bay of Islands, despatches from Newfoundland yesterday stated that the seven vessels which had been shut up in Bonne Bay struck out into the open sometime Thursday and began a hazardous race with the ice down the west coast of Newfoundland.

Say Commissioners Must Go.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—At a largely attended meeting of the Club Cartier, held last evening, a resolution was adopted asking the Federal Ministers to demand the resignation of the three Montreal harbor commissioners Mr. Charles Bellemare, M.P. for Maskinonge, spoke briefly, declaring that as far as he was able to judge opinion at the capital the commissioners would soon be replaced.

J. P. O. Guilbault, M.P. for Joliette, also spoke, declaring that although he did not speak for the Cabinet he was sure the commission would soon give place to one more in harmony with the powers that be.

Cotton Strike Settled.

Manchester, Eng., Jan. 20.—The dispute in the cotton trade, which culminated in a lockout affecting about 300,000 men on Dec. 27, has been settled.

The question at issue between employers and workers was the employment of non-unionist labor.

All the mills will be re-opened on Monday.

SITUATION IN PEKIN

President Sends an Ultimatum to Yuan Shi Kai

EXCITEMENT IN CAPITAL

Nanking, Jan. 20.—A most important step was taken by the Republican Government yesterday when it telegraphed an ultimatum to Premier Yuan Shi Kai at Pekin. The terms of the document are very drastic and are substantially as follows:

"In the first place the abdication of the throne and the surrender of the sovereign powers are demanded.

"In the second place no Manchu may participate in the Provisional Government of China.

"In the third place the capital of the Provisional Government cannot be established at Pekin.

"In the fourth place Premier Yuan Shi Kai cannot participate in the Provisional Government of China until the republic has been recognised by the foreign powers and the country has been restored to peace and harmony."

Yesterday's decided action by the Republican Government is due to Premier Yuan Shi Kais demand that Dr. Sun Yet Sen resign the Presidency.

The ultimatum telegraphed to Premier Yuan Shi Kai by the Republican Government yesterday, contains, according to the Republican leaders, the last word of the Republicans.

President Sun Yet Sen said yesterday to the Canadian Press:

"I have taken an oath to oust the Manchu rulers and restore peace to the country before resigning. I have taken an oath to establish a republic in China and if I consented to the propositions laid down by Yuan Shi Kai, I should be foresworn.

"I am convinced that a republic is not only practicable, but that it would be the best thing for China. Those asserting otherwise know nothing about the Chinese.

"China cannot permit outsiders to dictate her form of government. This republic is now an established fact. Nothing can swerve me from what I consider my duty to my fellow countrymen.

"Undoubtedly the best thought of China unanimously supports the republic. There is no question of north and south. I am firmly convinced that the people of eighteen provinces are in favor of a republic.

"We are now confident of the righteousness of our cause and of the superiority of our military strength. If Yuan Shi Kai persists in obstructing, our armies will be ordered to march northward."

Situation in Pekin.

Pekin, Jan. 20.—There has been considerable effervescence in Pekin throughout the day among both foreign residents and the Chinese. There were many rumors of the possibility of a Manchurian outbreak, which, however, appears unlikely at present.

The ex-regent, Prince Chun, and the former Premier, Prince Ching, visited Premier Yuan Shi Kai yesterday afternoon, and had a long conference with him. It appears that the court has not produced the gold it promised to provide, and the Imperial soldiers do not show any anxiety to fight for glory.

The Mongol princes who most strenuously oppose abdication, are those of Iuner Mongolia from the districts south of the desert. Their opposition is strengthened by the fear that the Republicans will confiscate their estates.

Premier Yuan Shi Kai was invited several times to participate in the conference of the princes, but he steadfastly refused, as he desired to leave the decision entirely to the court.

The situation continues tense. It seems impossible that Pekin can escape a Manchu outbreak. Soldiers belonging to the Imperial bodyguard yesterday openly distributed leaflets summoning the people to defend the constitutional monarchy unto death, but it is unlikely that any persons except the Manchus will fight for the monarchy.

It is currently reported that the irreconcilable Prince Tsaitao, brother of the ex-Regent, is inciting the Manchu troops to cause trouble.

Ask Foreign Negotiation.

Nanking, Jan. 20.—The Republican Government yesterday sent an appeal to the powers for recognition. This took the form of a circular, which was sent to London, Washington, Tokio, Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg, and was signed by Wang Chung Wei, the Foreign Minister of the Republican Cabinet.

The terms of the circular are as follows:

"The Manchu Government having entered into negotiations with the Republic of China for the purpose of abdicating its entire sovereign rights powers, and privileges, we reverently pray for recognition in order to avoid a disastrous interregnum.

(Signed) "Wang Chung Wei,
"Foreign Minister."

Clerical Riots of Spain.

Lisbon, Jan. 20.—Many persons were injured yesterday at Sao Bartholomeu during a conflict with the militia. A priest attacked from the pulpit the separation law and announced that he would close the church.

Republicans among his auditors protested, and a fight between them and the clericals ensued. The military was called out and drove the warring factions from the church, but in doing so many persons were injured.

Steamer Blew Up.

Portland, Ore., Jan. 20.—The river steamer Sarah Dixon blew up early yesterday at Kalama, Wash. The captain, mate and two other men were killed.

Will Be Buried in Toronto.

London, Jan. 20.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The body of G. R. R. Cockburn, who died Thursday night at the Rembrandt Hotel, will be conveyed to Toronto on the Empress of Britain a week from yesterday. Mrs. Cockburn and maid will accompany it.

YOUR GRAY HAIRS QUICKLY VANISH

A Harmless Remedy, Made From Garden Sage, Restores Colour to Gray Hair

A feeling of sadness accompanies the discovery of the first gray hairs, which, unfortunately, are looked upon as heralds of advancing age. Gray hairs, however, are not always an indication of advancing age, for many people have gray hairs quite early in life. Of course, it is unnatural, and indicates that there is something wrong with the individual and that Nature needs assistance in correcting the trouble. The same is true of hair that is constantly falling out and becoming thinner every day. If everything is right with Nature, the hair, even in comparatively elderly people, should be long, thick and glossy, without even a streak of gray.

The ideal assistant to Nature in restoring and preserving the hair is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a clean and wholesome dressing for daily use. It not only removes dandruff, but strengthens weak, thin and falling hair and promotes its growth. A few applications will restore faded or gray hair to its natural colour.

Get a bottle to-day, and let it do for you what it has done for thousands of others.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.—Special agents, Warne Drug Co.

Church Annuls Marriage.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—The marriage case of Dame Anne Meunier vs. F. X. Blanchet comes again before the court. A month ago she made application to have the marriage annulled. The two were Catholics and married by a Catholic priest, but it is claimed they are cousins and of the third degree in collateral line of consanguinity, and therefore that the marriage was illegal, owing to the prohibitory rules of the Catholic Church. The judge had dismissed the application, as there was no ruling by the church and the case could not be considered by the civil court till there was.

Yesterday Mrs. Blanchet presented the following letter from the bishop's palace:

"Madame: I am instructed to announce to you that his grace, the Archbishop of Montreal, has pronounced a sentence of nullity of marriage in the case you have submitted. (Signed) Emile Roy, chancellor."

The judge now takes the case on delibre, but it will go in favor of the woman by default, as the man did not appear.

Duke To Omit Washington.

London, Jan. 20.—The fact that the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, with their daughter, Princess Patricia, are not to visit Washington while they are in the United States, is causing comment here, although it is believed there must be some good explanation for their decision.

It is usual when royal personages are on a visit to a foreign country, even if semi-official, for them to pay their respects to the head of the nation in which they are guests. The Duke of Connaught has the reputation of always doing the right thing, and people here refuse to believe that he is now making any mistake.

The visit to Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid was arranged before the duke went to Canada and follows the farewell dinner given to the Duke and duchess at Dorchester House. They, in fact, have been frequently guests of the U. S. Ambassador.

Nunnery Burned.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—Fire destroyed St. Ann's Nunnery, at St. Jacques L'Archigan near here yesterday morning, with a loss of $50,000, partly covered by insurance.

Hon. Mr. Oliver Urges Government to Take Action

WATERED STOCK THE EVIL

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—Hon. Frank Oliver declared in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon that the main question in regard to combines was over-capitalization.

He was welcomed by W. F. Maclean (S. York) as a recruit to the number of those who were making an effort to get this abuse dealt with.

J. H. Burnham also spoke in denunciation of over-capitalization, and Hon. Robert Rogers declared that the Government had been seriously considering the question.

When the House went into supply on the estimates of the Department of Labor, E. M. Macdonald (Pictou) proceeded to throw a few bouquets to Hon. T. W. Crothers for his announcement that the Combines Investigation Act would not be amended at the present session. The Minister now sat with hands folded, unable to act, though, while in opposition, he had been impatient for action.

J. H. Sinclair (Guysboro): "Would the Minister appoint a board of conciliation at the instance of a union having its headquarters in the United States?" He himself would favor the Canadian union.

Hon. T. W. Crothers declared that the Department established boards of conciliation without reference to whether the men were members of an international or any kind of union. No such question had arisen since he had assumed charge of the Department.

Hon. Frank Oliver declared that, when a combine had been formed in the baking of bread, the time was ripe for a new view to be taken in regard to combines. The main question today was the over-capitalization of companies, which took a double toll of both producer and consumer, on one of the most intimate necessities of life.

W. F. Maclean (S. York): "I can see now that I and some other members of this House are likely to get more support than in the past in dealing with the capitalization of companies of all kinds."

"Our Combines Act to-day is left to the initiative of private individuals, but, as in the combines law of the United States, there is a clause stating that it is the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to enforce it, and there is provision made for the appropriation of a large sum of money to enforce that law.

"We have combines in Canada, it is true, and I assert boldly here that these combines must be regulated by the law of this Parliament, and that law must be put in operation against them by the federal authority."

J. H. Burnham (W. Peterboro) declared that the people of the country would not submit to their bread being taken away [illegible] over-capitalized combines, and [illegible] Government could not deal [illegible]m, then the people would take over the means of production and transportation.

W. E. Knowles (Moosejaw) commended the cement merger to the Minister of Labor as a question to be grappled with.

Hon. Robert Rogers agreed with much that Hon. Frank Oliver and W. F. Maclean had said. The Government had been seriously considering the question. He taunted the Opposition with their new-found zeal against combines.

E. B. Devlin (Wright) thought the meat combine was even worse than the cement combine.

Hon. Charles Murphy declared that the bread combine was a creation of the Ontario Government. He would like to know if the Toronto correspondents of The Labor Gazette had drawn attention to it.

Hon. T. W. Crothers: "No, they have not."

Dr. Clark (Red Deer) took his free trade hobby out for a canter. It was the tariff, he declared, that artificially protected combines, which only became dangerous when they got the field to themselves.

The evening session was taken up with charges about the dismissal of civil servants and counter charges from the right of the Speaker as to the iniquities of the preceding Liberal regime.

Found Coffins Waiting.

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—To have the story of his tragic death by freezing spread about and currently believed, and to come out of the bush and find coffins waiting for the bodies of himself and his companion, was the somewhat unique experience of Wm. A. Muir, formerly of this city, who was reported last week as having lost his life with a companion named Joseph Legault, on Night Hawk Lake, in the Porcupine country.

Muir has joined his wife and children at their home in Haileybury, and his relatives in Ottawa yesterday received a letter from him and tells how the story originated.

More Dynamiters Involved.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 20.—That at least five men other than those who already have been indicted or convicted in the dynamite conspiracy participated in a plot to blow up an ironworks at Akron, Ohio, on July 4, 1910, was part of the testimony which it is believed was presented to the federal grand jury yesterday through witnesses called from Ohio.

The names of three of the alleged participants were given by Ortie E. McManigal, who says he met them at Cleveland. Two days before the explosion, according to McManigal, he left Indianapolis with one of the men, who had received instructions from J. J. McNamara, in the office of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, and went to Rochester, Pa., where they secured twelve quarts of nitro-glycerine which they packed in a suitcase. Fifty-eight quarters of the explosive, he said, was left at Rochester for future use.

At Cleveland, the next day, they met two other men, and all discussed the Akron job, which was to be directed against an employer who maintained an "open shop."

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

FANS ARE EXCITED OVER TUESDAY'S TRENTON GAME

Trenton will be here for an O. H. A. game on Tuesday night with the Peterborough intermediates, and the biggest crowd of the season will be on hand to greet the Easterners. Local fans have been talking about this game ever since the season opened, and they will all be out for the meeting of the old rivals. The Peterborough team had a lively practice last night, the players showing great form. Trainer Dillon has them in the best of shape and they will be able to go the hour at top speed next Tuesday. It will be the game of the season all right.

BEAR CATS TO TAKE A BIG CROWD TO COBOURG

Indications point to the biggest hockey excursion of the season on Monday night when the Bear Cats go to Cooburg for the decisive game of this district. The local youngsters are in the best of shape, having finished their training with a lively practice at Brock street rink this afternoon and they will go into Monday night's game with the determination of beating Freeman and company on their own ice. Already a large number of fans have signified their intention of going down with the team and giving the Bear Cats the assistance of their vocal support. A special train will leave Peterborough sharp at 7 o'clock, returning after the game. The round trip fare is $1.25, with 65c. for children.

Britain's Desperate Effort To Win Olympic Games

LONDON, Jan. 19.— English sportsmen are still sore over America's victory at the Olympic Games in London in 1908, and the governing bodies are making every effort to perfect an Olympic team for Stockholm in the departments where they were beaten three years ago.

"The Athletics' adivsory club has been formed to patch up quarrels between the various governing bodies, find gymnasiums, tracks, and training quarters, employ coaches, and prepare to avenge the defeat in London.

"We have to admit," said the chairman, "that American athletes have improved in events where they were weak, and we have been left behind. We must search for talent, and must bring training methods up to date."

U.S. Trainers.

S. S. Abrahams, who holds the Swedish record for the broad jump, and is one of England's best all-round athletes, said: "We ought to send to America for trainers, as the Swedes have done. We have felt satisfied that we led the world in sports and have sat still, while other countries forged ahead."

Charles Otway, of Sporting Life, said. "In America the training of amateur athletes begins when they are young. The interscholastic records there equal the 'varsity records here. We will have to train our boys or we will never equal the Americans."

While it is too early to name the principal English entrants, there will be among them probably a Marathon runner who will extend the fastest long distance men; this is Harry Green, of London, who sprung a surprise by beating M. J. Ryan, of New York, in the Sporting Life Marathon from Windsor to Putney.

A Good Marathoner.

Englishmen believe Green could have defeated both Johnny Hayes and Dorando over the Marathon.

Other good men upon whom England is depending are:

D. H. Jacobs, who has run 300 yards in 31 3-5 seconds, and is the best short distance man Cambridge ever produced; D. F. McNichol, a miler, who holds the British Amateur Athletic Association championship; though undersized, he is speedy and won five championships in three weeks—the London mile, the Midland mile, the Scottish mile and half-mile, and the International mile; A. Scott, holder of the A.A.A. two-mile championship; P. J. Baker, miler and winner of the Oxford-Cambridge versus Yale-Harvard meet; D. MacMillan, a Cambridge man who won the sprint on the same occasion; S. S. Abrahams, jumper.

Lou Marsh's Version Of The Bear Cats' Victory

Here is what Referee Lou Marsh has to say in the Toronto Star of yesterday anent Thursday's game at Port Hope:

It begins to look as if Peterborough's good junior team are going to clean up the O.H.A. district. They came here last night and beat the strengthened local team by 8 to 4 in twenty minutes overtime. If they win in Cobourg Monday night they have the district cinched. Peterborough walked in and grabbed off the first four goals last night before the Port Hopers got their bearings. Then Port Hope garnered two and the score stood 4 to 2 at half-time.

In the second half the local team continued to come from behind and at full time had the score tied up at four all. Peterborough claimed a goal in this half. The goal umpire put up his hand claiming the puck had gone through the net. There were no holes in the net, and as the referee was up with the play and thought that the puck had caromed off a post he refused to allow it.

In the first ten minutes of overtime there was a merry battle, but the local boys tired under the strain, and in the second ten minute period Peterborough came strong and scored four goals.

Peterborough showed up with a well-balanced little team. Cook and Clancy on the wings were always in their places and shot well, and Weir and Keneally backed them up well. Hall at centre is a good stick handler, but he loafed offside a lot.

When Port Hope lined up the referee failed to locate their goalkeeper. The captain insisted that he was there and in his place, and he was finally found standing behind the nigh post. He is young Rowden, a fifteen-year-old youngster, whose head scarcely tops the bar, and he handled himself well all through the session.

Dundas at cover played a whirlwind game all night. He tore after the puck like a cyclone, and earned a couple of penalties for trying to take player, puck, and all up the ice with him in his rushes. Forsythe, Savage, and Dow were the pick of the forwards. Dow is a speedy boy and a grand shot, but he cost Port Hope several grand chances to win out by neglecting to pass the puck after he got inside.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., JAN. 20.— In a race between Alf. Shrubb of Toronto, and Billy Queal of Alexander Bay, last night, Shrubb took the lead at the start and gained one lap in the first two miles. The distance was 9¼ miles.

Ray On The McGill Team

Charlie Ray, captain of last year's Peterborough intermediate O. H. A. team played centre for McGill University against Varsity in Toronto last night. The Eastern Collegians surprised the hockey talent by defeating the Blue and White team in an overtime game by 12 goals to 10. It was felt all along by Peterborough fans that Ray could not be kept off that McGill team as soon as he got his bearings.

WEDDING BELLS

MACKENZIE—HOWLETT.

One of the prettiest weddings that has taken place in this city was solemnized in Dundas Centre Methodist church on Tuesday evening, when Roselle, only daughter of Joseph Howlett, of Lambeth, was united in marriage to Mr. Colin Murray Mackenzie, only son of William Lyon Mackenzie, of the Canadian Northern Railway, Winnipeg. Promptly at 7 o'clock, as the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march were being played by Mr. Parnell Morris, the bride, leaning on the arm of her father, entered the church and proceeded to the altar, where the ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. B. Lanceley, of Hamilton, a former pastor of Dundas Centre Methodist church, assisted by the Rev. R. H. Barnby of Lambeth.

The bride looked charming in an elaborate imported overdress of pearls, worn over cream duchesse satin, with long square trains, a bridal wreath with bandeau of orange blossoms, and carrying a shower bouquet of lily of the valley, with knotted tulle hanging to the bottom of the skirt. The bridesmaid, Miss Edith Godfrey of Vancouver, niece of Mrs. Gordon Wright, South London, was most becomingly attired in old rose satin, with old lace and silver trimmings, a picture hat of old rose satin and black velvet, and carried a bouquet of cream roses. Mr. D. McLean, of Edmonton, Alta., son of Dr. McLean, of Barnia, assisted the groom. After the first part of the ceremony, Miss Kathleen Lanceley of Hamilton, sang most beautifully, "Beloved, It is Morn." The church was beautifully decorated with palms and yellow chrysanthemums.

The groom's present to the bride was a magnificently designed necklace of pearls and diamonds; to the bridesmaid, a solid gold pendant with amethysts; to the soloist, a pretty twin pearl ring; and to the groomsman a solid gold watch fob. The presents received were very select, showing the high esteem in which the young lady is held. She will be greatly missed among her many young friends here.

Mr. Mackenzie, since completing his course as a civil engineer in Toronto University, has assisted his father in the advancement of the Canadian Northern Railway, and has been the means of mapping out a large part of the north western country. The happy couple left on the 8.20 train for Los Angeles, California, where they purpose spending the winter, and on their return they will reside in Winnipeg.

The groom is a nephew of Mrs. Goodfellow of this city.

Daily Stock Quotations

Supplied by the office of the Peterborough Stock Brokers:

S. Pearson Hammill and Co.—We would buy wheat. We think the market a sale on bulges in wheat. Sentiment is bullish on corn, but it will take continued buying to head the level.

Harris Winthrop says—We would purchase on the way down in wheat. Would buy corn on reactions.

Finley Barrell and Co. says—We are disappointed in the action of wheat. Our position. We would buy both wheat and corn on setbacks for turns for the present.

We note that the company is working hard tunnelling toward the vaults and believe it will be but a few days until the safes are brought out. We are hopeful that the contents will be uninjured. We think the cold weather has been sufficient to cool off the vaults amply since the fire and it will be safe next week to open them when they are reached by the tunnelling. G.W. Pfd. is expected to work higher. Un. Pac. is oversold. Edg. meets stock on rallies. L.V. may be bought for turns when weak.—Ny. Fin. Bulletin.

New York—To-day promises a continuance of the dullness in the stock market. It is probable that some special movements will be seen, as during the other days of the week some of the leaders are oversold. Aside from these, however, it seems likely that the general list will continue to back and fill for the time being. This rut will be emerged from a little. This are confident of that. The Morgan Hill group should be watched.

New financing rumours are thick. Latest developments are such as to encourage the belief that more activity will be witnessed whenever the securities now buried under the Equitable fire ruins shall have been rescued.

Curling Notes

The ice is in grand condition at the Charlotte Street Curling Rink, and, with favourable weather conditions, the local curlers may be looked upon to give a good account of themselves in their match with the Scottish curlers on Monday.

The Scotchmen beat the Glebes of Ottawa by 102 to 81, in a six-rink match yesterday morning, but in the afternoon the Scotchmen were less successful, winning from Almonte and a rink from the Yukon, and losing to Renfrew, Perth and Carleton Place.

To-day the Scotch curlers are the guests of the Kingston Club, and will remain so until this evening, when they will entrain for Peterborough.

The following schedule games were pulled off at the rink last night.

Baseball News

In a letter to the sporting editor of the Examiner, Abbie Johnston, the former Guleph manager, who has been interesting the baseball fans of Peterborough in a team for this city in the Canadian Baseball League, says:

"I am going to Hamilton about the first of the month to represent Peterborough at the League meeting and put up the protection money. Then I'll go on to Peterborough and stay there until I get the stock company organized. I have seven players signed up for Peterborough already, a hard-hitting catcher, two pitchers, a left and right hander respectively, two infielders and two outfielders. I can't give out any names yet until I have the men signed to regular contracts and I cannot get the contracts until after the meeting, but I am not going to get left, as now is the time to get players. I know just how strong all the other teams are and you bet I'll have my team up one, two three from the start. Most of the men I'm signing are fellows I've played with and know what they can do, as I know Peterborough wants a winning team and we can't do too much experimenting with young players, as there's nothing like getting off to a good start."

List Of Players

The following is the list of players of the Royal Caledonian Curling Club of Scotland, who are due to arrive in the city to-morrow morning:

Rink 1—Captain rink—Col. Robertson, Aikman, captain of the team of the Hamilton Club the Rev. Brown of Hamilton, Major Campbell Buxton James of the Hamilton Kilmaurs and James Telford of Newcastle.

Rink 2—Secretaries Andrew Blair, of Abertoyle, William Brown, of Crossmyloof, John Hewetson of Penninghame, Andrew Mitchell, of Crossmyloof, and Hpgh Solomon of Penninghame.

Rink 3—Lanarkshire—James Cameron of Lundin, J. Guthrie Kennedy of Patrick, T. B. Murray of Biggar, John F. Ross of Lochsloy and Jas. T. Ward of Patrick.

Rink 4—Glasgow—James E. Bett, of Glenfarg, J. Fulton Lawrie, of St. Moritz, A. C. Riddall of Glasgow Northern and Robert Wardrop of Cambusnethan.

Rink 5—West Lothian—Robert Allan of Whitburn, Alex. Dougal of Bathgate, W. J. Brewster Grant of Blairgowrie and George Wolfe of Bathgate.

Rink 6—Rentrewshire—A. Aikenhead of Greenock, Baillie Bennett of Greenock, R. Connell of Lochwinnoch. John MacLeod of Bride-of-Weir, and James Y. Keanie of Lochwinnoch.

Each rink will wear a distinguishing tartan. Rink 1, the Robertson; rink 2, the Buchanan; rink 3, the Murray; rink 4, the Mackenzie; rink 5, the Gordon; rink 6, the MacLeod.

Emigration Figures Show An Increase

There has been a big drop in the number of emigrants arriving in the city this month, as compared with the same period last year. So far there has been only one new arrival; for the same period last year there were twenty. Mr. Howson, the local emigration agent, is at a loss to explain the cause of the decrease, but he believes that another month or so will see a decided change. He has already secured forty or fifty advices concerning parties who will sail about the last week in February, and one party wrote to say that he could arrange to bring a party of forty or fifty people if he were assured that suitable homes could be secured for them. Mr. Howson has already forwarded the necessary assurance in this respect, and at the same time will endeavour to persuade the party in question to increase the number to one hundred.

Mr. Howson states that the year just concluded was a very successful one in every respect, there being an increase of about one hundred more emigrants to this district than in any previous year.

DONATION IS APPRECIATED

Mr. Peter Campbell, treasurer of the Children's Aid Society to-day received a cheque for $25 from the executors of the estate of the late A. E. Mosley, the donation being accompanied by a letter which referred to the fact that Mr. Mosley in his life time had been a contributor to the Society in the work of which he took a kindly interest. His relatives felt that by remembering the Children's Aid Society they were carrying out what would be their late brother's wish, in reference to it.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS

John Howard Truesdell, four-year-old son of E. J. Truesdell, editor of the Quesnemo News, is declared to be the youngest printer in Kansas. Two weeks ago he set up six lines of type for his father's paper and last week he succeeded in setting up 17 lines. The child reads his own copy and does his own spacing.

The increase in population during recent years has been due to the decreased death rate. This has resulted directly from the application of science to medicine and hygiene and indirectly from the improved conditions of living which science has made possible. In all civilized countries the birth rate is now smaller than the death rate was formerly. — Popular Science Monthly.

FAMINE IN CHINA

War and Bad Crops Have Resulted in Widespread Suffering

RELIEF MEASURES

Shanghai, Jan. 22.—The exciting news of war and diplomacy has caused the world to forget the terrible destitution which now prevails in China. It is a side issue, but one which may have a vital effect on the settlement of the revolution. In July and August last the Yangtse rose to an almost unprecedented height and the resulting destruction has caused famine areas now accurately defined. There is the great Hwai Valley region, measuring about 100 by 300 miles where the farmers have had only one good crop since 1906. Not only is there no reserve to meet present conditions, but the people have lost heart and will not try to help themselves.

The second area is about Wuhu, where for some weeks the Yangtse formed an inland sea from 80 to 100 miles long and varying in width from 35 to 40 miles.

The last district is Hunan, where the floods are local. One section 30 miles square and containing at least 10,000 people was completely submerged. An estimate of 100,000 people facing absolute starvation in Hunan alone is considered conservative, while in the three areas the lowest estimate of the destitute is 3,750,000. Destitution such as is experienced in China is undreamed of in more progressive countries. There are almost no charitable institutions and many families are left shelterless and nearly unclothed to endure the pains. Pillage and destruction have commenced in the country where the revolutionists are unable to keep order. In the towns which they have taken the rebels keep fair order, but their organization of government does not extend to the country districts.

The Central China relief committee with headquarters in Shanghai is making an appeal in all countries for funds to carry on relief work. The committee is thoroughly representative of the best foreign and Chinese communities here and it is working in a businesslike manner. In return for relief the committee is exacting work from the recipients, who are required to deepen the water courses and strengthen dykes and guard against a recurrence of the floods. Every effort is being made to avoid pauperising the people and much of the work is planned to tide the farmers over until they can get in a crop.

China Is Insolvent.

London, Jan. 22.—The Daily Telegraph's Pekin correspondent says he is officially informed that the Pekin Government will be obliged openly to declare China's bankruptcy at the Chinese New Year, Feb. 18.

He understands further that Wi Ting Fang, Minister of Justice in the Republican Cabinet, has telegraphed demanding the immediate resumption of hostilities in consequence of accusations of trickery leveled at the Republicans.

Ready to Flee.

Pekin, Jan. 22.—A special train has been held in readiness since Friday to take Yuan Shi Kai to Tientsin. It was evidently the Premier's plan to transfer the provisional capital to that city, where the danger from the Manchus was slight. Apparently Yuan Shi Kai intended to escape from Pekin as soon as the edict of abdication was signed, but the reactionary princes gained the upper hand temporarily and prevented the issuance of the edict.

DEMOCRATS IN LINE.

Connaught Visit Causes a Flutter In Land of the Free.

New York, Jan. 22.—The arrival here to-day of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught will mark the first visit of British royalty to New York city since fifty-two years ago, when the then Prince of Wales, who was the late King Edward VII., came here and traveled from New York to the far west, where he hunted buffalo. The leaders of society here have prepared to extend a welcome befitting such royal guests.

Whitelaw Reid, ambassador to the Court of St. James, who, with Mrs. Reid, will act as host and hostess of the royal visitors, will be at the Grand Central station to meet the party, which will arrive aboard the duke's private car, attached to the regular train. The party will be driven directly to Ambassador Reid's home at No. 451 Madison avenue, and remain there until Thursday afternoon.

The program is altogether a social one, as the royal visitors desire to avoid the round of public functions which would be necessary on an official visit to the United States.

Ambassador Reid made it known that both he and Mrs. Reid felt keenly the public reports that they are intended to "weed out" certain elements in society in the matter of invitations. It was said there was no attempt to discriminate. It has been decided that no general list of those invited will be made public.

In none of the arrangements has any particular reference been made to the entertainment of Princess Patricia. She is the first princess of the blood royal of England ever to set foot on the soil of the United States. She has a number of close friends in New York, and it is expected that during her stay here she will visit a number of them.

Washington, Jan. 22.—In confining his visit to the United States to a short stay in New York, the Duke of Connaught has not offended President Taft, nor has the fact that he would not come to Washington, caused any great surprise in official circles here. The White House knew several weeks ago that the duke would not come to Washington.

Whitelaw Reid, U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain, when he was a luncheon guest at the White House early in the month, explained to officials that the duke wished to pay only an unofficial visit to the United States, and that he desired to avoid all the official "pomp and circumstance" that would necessarily accompany a trip to the capital.

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—Canada's Governor-General, His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, accompanied by the Duchess and Princess Patricia, left yesterday afternoon for New York, to be the guests for five days of Ambassador Whitelaw Reid and Mrs. Reid. Their Royal Highnesses travelled in the Governor-General's private car "Canada," and were attended by Lieut.-Col. Lowther, military secretary; Capt. Rivers-Bulkeley, A.D.C., comptroller of the household; Miss Pelly, lady-in-waiting, and several servants.

Statesmen Confer.

Rome, Jan. 22.—Herr von Kiderlin-Waechter, the German Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, arrived here Saturday and immediately paid a visit to Marquis Antino di San Guiliano, the Italian Foreign Minister. The two statemen held a long and cordial conference, during which the relations of Italy and Germany as well as those with Austria-Hungary, were discussed with reciprocal satisfaction.

After Harvester Company.

Washington, Jan. 22.—Attorney-General Wickersham Saturday assured the House committee on rules that the Government would take action against the International Harvester Co., Congressional investigation of which is under consideration by the committee.

TRAIN IS WRECKED

Head-on Collision Occurs on the Canadian Northern

ONE MAN KILLED

Toronto, Jan. 22.—A head-on collision between a passenger and a freight train on the C. N. O., two miles south of Lake Joseph, at mileage 128 1-2, on Saturday afternoon, caused the death of one trainman and the serious injury of three others.

A repair train southbound to clear the track of a freight wreck, disregarded orders and collided with passenger train No. 1 from Toronto. W. Hudson, fireman on the passenger train, was killed, and Engineer Johnstone of the auxiliary. Engineer John Napier of the passenger, and Fireman Awde of the auxiliary were injured. The injured traumen, who are suffering chiefly from scalp wounds, are reported to be resting easily.

A. J. Hills, superintendent of the C.N.O., stated yesterday that although it is customary to give an auxiliary train right of way in the case of a very bad blockade, in this particular instance the blockade was not of sufficient importance to warrant a step of this kind. The auxiliary, stated the superintendent, should have sidetracked when it received orders to do so, in order to let the passenger train by, but had evidently not done so, thereby causing the collision.

The superintendent yesterday issued the following statement:

"Extra 279, southbound, collided head-on with train No. 1, at mileage 128 1-2, at 4.12 p.m., 20th, due to the crew of the extra train disregarding running order of train No. 1. Fireman W. Hudson was caught between the engine and tender of the northbound train and died within ten minutes; the engineer escaped unhurt The men riding in the southbound engine escaped with scalp wounds and bruises. No passengers were injured. A relief train was rushed to the scene from Parry Sound and the injured transferred to that point. The steam crane is working clearing the line, and has made good progress."

It is further stated that the passenger train was late, but had made up some of the time lost. The auxiliary train crew, not knowing this, had continued on their way, and had expected to make the next siding before its arrival.

Notwithstanding the fact that the passenger train was traveling at 35 miles an hour, and the auxiliary train at 20 miles an hour, none of the passengers were injured, and none of the coaches left the track. This was a very extraordinary, but fortunate, occurrence. Fireman Hudson, the man killed, was caught between the engine and the tender, and badly crushed. He died within ten minutes of being released.

A relief train was rushed to the scene from Parry Sound, which is 20 miles north of the scene of the accident, and the injured removed to that point. They are reported to be doing very well. The steam crane of the auxiliary, which was not damaged, was immediately got to work and the track cleared. Both engines are very badly damaged and will require considerable repairs, but none of the coaches were damaged to any extent.

Justice for Canadian.

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—After languishing in prison in Mexico City for over two years without being able to force an issue in the Mexican courts as to his guilt or innocence, George I. Hamm, a Canadian citizen, and president of the defunct Mexico City Banking Co., will now either have to be promptly released and given a fair trial in the civil courts or else the Canadian and British State Departments will know the reason why. Final action has been taken by the State Department to prevent any further subterfuges and delays on the part of the Mexican authorities, and if Mr. Hamm, as a British subject, does not forthwith get justice in the Mexican courts the Government of the Republic will be called to task by Great Britain in an unmistakable manner. That is the ultimatum delivered through the British Ambassador at Washington.

Five Killed In Mine.

Kemmered, Wyo., Jan. 22.—The cause of the dust explosion in mine No. 4 of the Kemmered Coal Co. on Saturday, which caused the death of five men and the injury of 18 others, has not yet been determined.

The dead are: James Smith, James Hansen, James Ward, Peter London and Thomas Dixon, all Americans. Nine of the more seriously injured were removed to a hospital at Rock Springs, Wyo.

The explosion occurred in what is known as the "second north" entry, 100 feet from the main slope and 1,000 feet from the surface. The force of the explosion was confined closely and those working in the immediate vicinity were the only ones injured. Miners working in other portions of the mine made their way to the surface uninjured.

Lambs For Pope.

Rome, Jan. 22.—The Pope, who appeared to be in excellent health, yesterday received a large delegation, which brought to him a number of lambs, following the custom of years. This being the feast of St. Agnes, the church bearing her name pays a tribute of lambs to St. John Lateran. They are first brought to the Pope for his benediction.

The Pope caressed the lambs, which were bedecked with ribbons. They will be kept alive until Easter, their wool being used for the pallia conferred upon archbishops.

SOCIALISTS LOSING.

They Only Capture Eight Seats on Reballot In Germany.

Berlin, Jan. 22.—Seventy-eight reballots in the Reichstag elections were held Saturday. The returns indicate that the Socialists are not gaining as expected. The Socialists participated in forty-six reballots, of which they carried only eight. At this rate they will hardly reach ninety seats in the Reichstag. They were ousted from five constituencies, losing among others Bielefield to Count von Posadowsky-Wehner, the formere Secretary of State for the Interior, who was the candidate of all the other parties. The Radicals put up a stout defence and elected 17 members, winning eight districts, chiefly from the Conservatives, and losing one.

The various Conservative groups elected 21 in the reballots, the Clericals seven, the National Liberals 21, Socialists eight, Radicals 17, and Irregulars 4.

The Conservatives had a net loss of 3, and the Clericals a net loss of 3, the National Liberals a net gain of 5, Radicals 7, and Socialists 3. The result of Saturday's voting renders it improbable that the opposition parties will have a majority. The Government now has a total of 160 seats, including the Poles. The National Liberals, Radicals and Socialists membership numbers 114, minor parties and Irregulars 11.

It is hardly possible that the opposition will overcome the Government's majority in the remaining 112 contests. The next three ballots will be held on Monday.

Among the best known candidates returned Saturday are Herr Bassermann, Dr. Mueller (Meiningen), Dr. Otta Arendt, Lieut.-Gen. von Liebert and Count von Posadolsky-Wehner. The Radical candidate defeated Frederick von Moltke, ex-Prussian Minister of the Interior, in East Prussia.

The Radicals captured the Karlsrube district, which is an old Socialist stronghold, and also Freiburg, electing Prof. Gerhart von Schulze-Gaevernits over the Clerical candidate.

The chief cause of the failure of the Socialists to make a better showing was the refusal of the Liberal voters to support them. Many of the Liberals cast their votes for the Conservative candidates in the North German districts.

Believe Scott Reached Pole.

New York, Jan. 22.—Officials of the Geographical Society and various similar organizations interested in polar explorations are eagerly awaiting word from Capt. Robert Falcon Scott, who expected to reach the South Pole on Christmas Day, and they believe that when he announces the result of his British Antarctic expedition, it will be to say that his quest was successful.

Lieut. Shackleton of the British navy, reached the farthest south on Jan 9, 1909, ninety-seven geographical miles away from his objective point, and then turned back only because he ran short of provisions.

Capt Scott had 750 miles to cover from his winter quarters to reach the South Pole. His journey consisted of a dash across the comparatively level ice to the ice barrier, then up the glacier side to the plateau, some ten thousand feet above sea level, and then to the pole.

The Scott expedition was outfitted as no other exploration party was equipped before. The British Government subscribed $100,000 to the fund, and the British public contributed an equal sum. Accompanying him, in addition to a picked crew, were five lieutenants of the royal navy, two surgeons and three biologists.

Three motor sledges were carried in the hold of his vessel, seventy tons of provisions, 120 dogs and 20 Siberian ponies.

ISLAM IS AROUSED

Persian Affair Has Caused a Serious Situation Says Shuster

ANARCHY REIGNS

Vienna, Jan. 22.—"The net result of the British and Russian action in Persia renders a nation, which was making progress towards peace and order and was building up its finances for the establishment of a constitutional government, a land of chaos and anarchy, without prestige among its own people, and, in addition, has meant the sacrifice of hundreds of innocent lives."

This statement was made yesterday by W. Morgan Shuster, the American who was dismissed from the office of treasurer-general of Persia recently and has just arrived here.

"The Mohammedan people," continued Mr. Shuster, "are further aroused against the Christian nations. Great Britain and Russia, far from being on a more solid basis of friendship, are now face to face on opposite sides of a disorganized territory.

"The Russian and British legations are the real governing forces in Persia. They are acting through a directory of seven Persians, in order to avoid international responsibility, but morally they are responsible for the destruction of Persian nationality, when it gave promise of establishing a stable constitutional government. The seven men who are nominally governing Persia are without character or reputation. They do not command the slightest respect of their countrymen and would not exist a day without the protection of the Russian and British legations.

"The Russian forces and influences are steadily advancing southwards and unless there is a break in the present trend of events, the realization of Russia's dream of a warm water port is a matter of only a few years. Great Britain will then be confronted with a living Russo-Indian frontier problem.

"The past year's action of the Europeans in Morocco, Tripoli and Persia does not encourage the hope of international peace. The fact that the Mohammedans have been driven to the wall renders future retaliation inevitable. The most regrettable feature of Persia's dismemberment is the fact that it might have been entirely prevented had Great Britain frankly objected at the beginning to Russia's flagrant violation of the Anglo-Russian agreement, commencing with her claim last summer of the rights to veto appointments of Persian officials, and culminating in the despatch of her army into Persia on the false pretext that a Persian official had printed a pamphlet criticising Russia's previous action in Persia."

Skipper Has Cold Feet.

Paris, Jan. 22.—The captain of the French steamer Manouba, which was seized by Italian destroyers Friday, on her voyage from Marseilles to Tunis, with 99 passengers, including 29 Turkish nurses of the Red Crescent Society, on board, disembarked the Turks on his own initiative at Cagliari, in Sardinia, and was then permitted to leave the port. This action of the captain is not in accordance with the wishes of the French Government, as the Turkish nurses must be considered as belonging to the Red Crescent Society until the contrary has been proved by the Italians, who assert that among them were some Turkish officers disguised as nurses.

Members of the Red Crescent are it is argued by the French authorities, entitled to the protection of the flag under which they are sailing. France will insist on a settlement of the question through the French ambassador at Rome.

Atlantic In Angry Mood.

New York, Jan. 22.—Considerable damage was done about the decks of the liner Cedric, which arrived yesterday from Liverpool in the severe storms through which she plowed on her passage. Building Trades Held Up.

Chicago, Jan. 22.—Out of 62,600 building trades workmen regularly employed in Chicago, 41,600 are now idle.

This is according to an estimate made Friday night by six heads of the leading crafts.

The cause for the great slump in building is the extreme cold weather which has prevailed since the first of the year. Plumbers are the only men not affected. The 1,800 members of this craft are all busy and there is work for many more, but they are not available.

Of the painters 80 per cent. are idle and only 7,200 carpenters out of 18,000 are working.

Irish No Tamere Case.

London, Jan. 22.—Usher, the Galway farmer, is appealing against Judge Kenny's decision, which declares his night marriage, with only one witness, to be valid.

Bourne Makes State Entry.

London, Jan. 22.—Cardinal Bourne made a state entry into Westminster Cathedral yesterday afternoon, the occasion being invested with much pomp.

"Wide Open" Candidate Quits.

Montreal, Jan. 22.—Nominations for the offices of mayor and aldermen took place at the City Hall yesterday. Only two candidates are in the field for mayor, and both are French-Canadians, Ald. George Marcil and L. A. Lavallee. Dr. Tasse, who expressed his intention of running on a novel platform, which proposed to make Montreal a "wide open" city, did not formally enter the field.

Eight aldermen were elected by acclamation: La Pointe, Ward, Boyd, Letourneau, N. LaPointe, G. Mayrand, S. DeGuire and Drummond.

In all the other wards there will be contests.

Milk Merger Abandoned.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 22.—Contrary to the partially completed plans of a number of dairymen, there will be no local milk combine, the local Board of Health members having refused to co-operate with the promoters when other dealers strenuously objected.

The local Board of Trade will shortly begin a campaign to double its membership. A similar campaign was successful several years ago.

"THE SECRET OF PAUL FARLEY"

By JOHN MARCH

"Oh ,we'll be here," Paul laughed; "I'm dead beat, glued to my chair. I could sit here ten hours."

"Paul," she whispered, as the Squire's tall form disappeared through the doorway, "how badly you have managed!"

"Execrable management it must seem to you. I must tell you the whole ghastly story, Agnes, and then you will see how I was cornered. I never intended to ask you again, but just this once I want you to meet me in your old summer house. I want to talk the situation over with you. I must publicly own or disown this engagement; I must do something soon, and I don't want to act entirely on my own responsibility."

"You saw Felix before you left the Larches; why didn't you tell him?"

"I meant to tell him, but I was bewildered, and after a spell decided to consult you first. It's easy to be wise after the event, with the result staring you in the face. You see, I reckoned without my host, or rather hostess. How was I to know that that fiend had sent the infernal announcement before the dance came off at all? Can you meet me tomorrow evening at eight? I am writhing, as it were ,on the horns of a dilemma, Agnes."

"I am going with Felix to the Horticultural show at Wystern, but we shall be home long before eight. I'll come, but had you not better go straight to the fountain head, direct to Felix?"

"I should like you to hear first," he persisted, "perhaps you may think I ought to keep back certain things I can tell Felix the same evening if you like. I'll wait till you have returned to the house and walk in as if I had come straight up from here."

"Very well," she said, rising as she saw the Squire advancing , "I'll be there at eight sharp."

CHAPTER XIII.

The Way of the Trangressors is Hard

Paul, with his cap on the back of his head, his Inverness thrown open, exposing a conspicuous expanse of shirt-front, stood in the rustic doorway of the Fleming's summer house waiting for Agnes. He looked at his watch, put it back in his fob, and was fumbling for his cigarette case, when he heard the fall of light, approaching footsteps.

Presently she stood before him, dressed in a blue velvet toque and a neat tweed coat and skirt, just as she had driven with the Squire to the Horticultural Show.

"Are you only just back?" he asked, surprised. "I heard wheels and a vehicle drive round to the front about ten minutes ago."

"Don't speak so loud," she said, in an undertone. "Felix is just over there in the stables. The mare had two shoes come loose, and we had to walk her several miles before we came across a blacksmith. Felix is rather put out at the animal being carelessly sent that distance without proper inspecion."

"I wonder ,how long he will say there?" he said, rather nettled.

"Till he's given Ralph a bit of his mind, which he can do to some purpose if he finds his easy-going, good-natured rule or authority imposed upon."

"Well, come in," he said, in the tone of one who was going to make the best of a tfying circumstance; "I can tell you all I want you to know in a quarter of an hour."

A touch of frost in the air combined with the dampness of the crazy bench prevented all idea of sitting to enjoy a whispered tete-a-tete. To a certain extent the little thatched summer house was secluded, so they felt fairly secure, and stood close together near the entrance facing one another. Paul with his left hand on her right shoulder. She clasped her sable collarette higher to her throat, for the wind came over from the plantation and caught the entry at the angle where she stood. Her feet were numb, and she chafed her blue fingers, hoping the energetic friction would circulate the blood.

"You should have brought your muff," he said, regretfully, taking one of her hands and holding it between his.

"How warm your hands are," she said, looking at him in the semi-darkness.

"I don't feel the cold a bit," he answered smiling, "and a few years ago, I used to have the most wretched chilblains. But you see, Agnes," he added seriously, "I am better housed and better fed than I've been in my life, and I drink a good deal of wine both at luncheon and dinner, and always a glass of whisky or other spirit before I go to bed. Well-nourished blood is thick and warm, and keeps out the cold."

"I've heard, Paul, an easy conscience is the best cosmetic there is," she said, with a clinging pressure on his hand; "but in your case, you naughty thing, I think it's the good living, the creature comforts, your general well-being, that's made such an improvement in you. It's rather unfortunate, taking Mrs. Wycherly and Judith into consideration, but you certainly grow better looking every day!"

He dropped the hand he was rubbing, caught her round the shoulders, laid her back upon his arm, and kissed her.

A boisterous gust of wind swept across the plantation, bending the pines and bringing with it the incense from the woods. It came into the shrubbery moaning a little and a shower of acorns fell with a rattle on the roof and sides of the summer house. Paul lifted his head at the unfamiliar sound, and his oark, amused eyes lighted upon the Squire's tall form standing a couple of yards from them, with his hands behind him, strong, lithe, and perfect as a young tree.

The sight seemed to paralyze him. Thunderstruck, and a roaring in his ears, he remained for a moment in a stooping posture, staring fixedly at the man's white face and fearless, blazing eyes. Agnes twisted herself round in his arms, lifting her face to his, wondering at his rigid stiff stillness. The movement snapped the tension, his arms released, gave a warning pressure as he stood he roughly on her feet and turned her so that she faced Felix.

"Go indoors, Agnes!" he commanded in a tone neither of them had ever heard before. "I have a word or two to say to Mr. Farley."

She came out with an averted face, but gave one glance at the suppressed rage and fury in his glittering eyes as she passed him and stopped.

"I am waiting for you to go in," he repeated, scarcely able to control his voice.

"What are you going to do?" she asked in a frightened way, her heart throbbing painfully.

"Go in," he shouted, "and don't dare to disobey me!"

She turned and ran. His eyes followed her retreating figure; he did not withdraw them till she was wholly out of sight, and then he turned to the young man standing a step above him, framed by the rustic ruined porch. The stars shone brightly, and the high riding moon sent a pencil of light on to the lower half of Paul's face, revealing the rigid line of upper lip drawn over the small even teeth. Felix raised a beckoning forefinger, and pointed to the ground in front of him, and with one long stride he obeyed the imperious gesture, and faced him closely.

"One question, if you please, and answer it as truthfully as you know how. Are you engaged to Mrs. Wycherly, or are you not?"

"Yes and no; I am not sure; but the ridiculous position I have been forced into towards her I can satisfactorily explain."

"And were you forced into the position in which I now saw you with my sister?"

Paul's great eyes opened to their widest; he was dumbfounded by the suggestion of impurity thrown over his foolish though innocent antics. He turned hot and cold, and shrank from meeting the Squire's bright, scornful eyes with the unfamiliar, knowing expression the subject under discussion had brought into them.

"Answer me instantly!" Felix shouted, taking a step towards him.

"No," he said quickly, "of course I was not forced, but I was not aware I was doing anything wrong or treating Miss Fleming in a way that a lady——"

The Squire seized him by the collar, jerked him round, and his startled eyes caught sight of the leather thong of his riding whip.

"One moment," he protested, struggling fruitlessly in the Squire's steel grip. "Don't strike me before you know the rights of the case, or you may be sorry for it afterwards."

"Sorry!" he mimicked, with a grim laugh, "sorry for thrashing a well-behaved suave reptile like you? I am going to protect my sister's good name, safeguard her reputation, and teach you how to control your lower nature, how to treat what you may style a 'good woman,' and punish you for tampering with a woman for whom you have assured me over and over again you had no other feeling than ordinary friendship, and to whom you would on no account bind yourself; also for holding, embracing, and caressing my sister as you might any draggle-tailed wench on the streets."

Paul struggled round to face him as best he could.

"How dare you impute such disgustingly dirty low motives to my actions?" he panted furiously, his face aflame, "I had no idea you had such a filthy mind!"

"Dare!" he breathed thickly. "Take that, you impertinent beggar!"

The hard, tightly-plaited leather lash curled round his slim supple body, he quivered from head to foot, and uttered a sharp astonished cry. The sound gratified the Squire and spurred him on to greater efforts. He shook him into a more convenient get-at-able position, and applied the whip with an effect that only a strong well-developed arm and a fierce determined will could accomplish. His unavailing struggles and protestations soon ceased, and not much beyond a low groan now and again escaped him. Presently Felix gave him another salutary shake, similar to a terrier's lusty frantic movement with a rat, and whirled him around.

His eyeglasses were off, swinging to and fro like a pendulum, and the Squire's energy had burst the studholes in his collar and shirt, exposing his dark, firm young throat. Felix looked into his white agonized face, into the wide strained eyes swimming in tears, beautiful, patient, mournful, and pure as the eyes of a gazelle, and then his whip arm dropped to his side.

"That's enough!" he said, in the tone of a man who had accomplished a set purpose and was satisfied with the efficient manner in which he had carried it through. "Get out of my sight, and don't stray near me or mine again!" And with a last upheaval of outraged wounded pride, he gave a sudden impetus to his left arm and sent him staggering backwards, waiting the while to watch his efforts to obtain a foothold. He witnessed him recover his equlibrium more than once, and finally fall with a crash, his head striking the hedge near a huge bush of Michaelmas daisies.

"I've branded him for many a day to come," he muttered, winding the lash around the whip-handle as he strode through the shrubbery over the garden grass and into the front entrance. He slammed the door, threw his whip into what he called the keeping room, at the back of the hall, and marched into the parlour where Agnes was shivering over the fire.

"Agnes," he said, closing the door carefully, and turning his full bright eyes on her, "it was only yesterday morning that you assured me there was nothing between you and Farley. I believed it, and if you still wish me to believe it you must tell me the reason why you laid back in that fellow's arms."

She lifted her eyes to his stern face for a moment, dropped them, and stared silently into the fire.

"I am ashamed," he said at last, seeing there was no prospect of her speaking, "utterly ashamed that a sister of mine should have so little self-respect(be so lost to all sense of right and wrong, so devoid of all chaste ,pure, womanly insincts. I've had my eyes opened with a shock, Agnes, that I shall not soon forget."

All trace of anger had left his voice —he spoke with a greived emotion that melted her throbbing heart, and she burst into a woman's passion of tears.

"How many times have you met him there before to-night?" he asked.

"Only once before, Felix," she said between her sobs, "only once, a long time ago."

"Why did you meet him this evening?"

"He asked me; he told me in the Hargraves' conservatory that he wanted to tell me about Mrs. Wycherly how she had managed to trap him into making her an offer."

"The idea of asking you to meet him there for such nonsense. Why didn't he come straight to the house and tell me, tell us both, for that matter. It seems to me a trumpery, paltry excuse to get you there. And the love-making, that's the part I can't understand. Even if you were silly and brazen enough to consent to a secret meeting with Sir Thomas Hargrave's secretary, why in the name of all bewildering creation did you let him kiss you?"

"I don't know," she said piteously.

"I don't comprehend you, Agnes," he said, looking at her puzzled and doubtfully, "you are clear enough about the altitude of all other nice points, but with regard to virtuous discretion, the crowning point where a woman is generally most sensitive, you appear utterly callous, you totally fail to see the enormity of your conduct. I've punished Farley, and if I knew how to set to work about it I would punish you."

"Punished him! How?" she asked, looking up suddenly with dry, bright, hard eyes.

"I thrashed him, if you very much want to know."

"You—thrashed—Mr. Farley!" she said with a gulp between each word.

"I thrashed him," he repeated loudly; "don't you understand me?"

"You coward! You—"

He stared at her white face, whiter than he had ever seen it. Her eyes shone almost black, and she crouched in the wicker chair as if she were the same tense voice.

"In the shrubbery where I left him, for all I know or care."

She gave one great sob and bounded across the room. Felix walked coolly to he door and leaned his back against it.

"I am going to him," she said wildly and recklessly rattling the door handle .

"You are not going to do anything of the kind," he said, quietly; "you will stay here until bedtime."

"Are you going to leave him there all night?" she asked, staring at him blankly.

"I leave him there? I have nothing whatever to do with it; he can go home or stay there; he can please himself."

"Felix," she said, pulling at the door, "you know there are night and morning frosts now. If he lies there in this bitter wind it will kill him!"

"And society will be rid of an arrant rascal! Sit down, Agnes, and let's have no more of it. In trying to emulate your friends you make yourself out worse than Judith and Mrs. Wycherly together. What on earth is the matter with the fellow, that you three women should completely lose your heads, go raving mad over him? In what way is he so vastly different and superior, so pre-eminently more desirable than all other men?"

"Felix," she implored, shaking his arm frantically, "oh, Felix, don't leave him in that lonesome place all night; I would rather be there myself. I am used to the darkness and solitude of the country, and he is not. I couldn't go to bed, .I couldn't sleep with him out there; the horror of it would almost kill me; I should never feel young again. Do what you like with me, but he's been punished enough. Do you hear, Felix?" she screamed hysterically. "Will you let me go to him? Will you let me go just to see if he is still there?"

"No, I will not," he said, resolutely, "you shall never go near him again so long as I can prevent it. If you cannot take care of yourself I must do it for you."

"You don't know what you are doing," she said, beginning to cry in a helpless, broken-hearted fashion; "you will be sorry you did this one day."

"So Farley told me," he answered, smiling a little.

She drifted her eyes and looked at him, lolling with his back against the door. The steel blue light in his eyes, the determined set of the firm, square jaw, the compressed lips, and above all the irritating cynical smile were decided signs of unflinching obduracy, and it began to dawn on her that all pleadings, prayers, tears, and supplications would be in vain, mere puny, feathery taps upon a steep, rock-like wall of adamant. She sank down in the basket-chair, moaning and strengthless, overcome with a terrible feeling of hopeless, helpless despair, and gazed at her powerful opponent transformed from a happy, easy-going, even-tempered, good fellow into a man of flint. For all he apparently cared about her, or Paul's or any outside suffering he might just as well have been hewn out of a solid block of granite.

"Felix," she said, changing her tactics, "I promise you I will stay here if you will go yourself or send somebody to see if Mr. Farley has gone home."

"I've not the slightest doubt but what you would," he returned, bluntly, "but Mr. Farley's affairs neither concern me nor my household. I should have some supper and get to bed if I were you, Agnes, and forget my worries in sleep. Most young bloods have sufficient gumption to take care of themselves, and there's not much fear but that Farley has cut his eye-teeth."

"I feel as if I hated you!" she said passionately.

"I am sorry for that," he answered gravely, "as you are the only person in the world from whom I have a right to expect some sort of affection."

Psoriasis Was Cured

After Five Years of Suffering —Three Doctors Failed and Said Case Was Incurable

Itching and Burning Was Terrible Until Relief and Cure Was Effected by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Psoriasis is another name for chronic eczema. It is the worst form of this dreadful itching skin disease. Once eczema has reached this stage it is usually considered incurable.

But here is a case which proves again the wonderful healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Not only does relief come quickly, but the resulting benefits are thorough and lasting.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "I thought it my duty to write you telling you the great benefit I received from using Dr. Chase's Ointment. For five years I suffered with what three doctors called Psoriasis. I doctored with three different doctors, with no good results, and one of our noted doctors told me if any one offered to guarantee me a cure for $50.00 to keep my money in my pocket, as I could not be cured.

"The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head. The itching and burning was hard to bear. At last my brother read in the paper about Dr. Chase's Ointment as a healer. I got 8 boxes, and I am glad to say I am entirely cured, not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise the ointment enough, and you are at liberty to use my testimony, as I hope thereby to induce other sufferers to try the same."

How many tasty dishes can you make with Rolled Oats?

In some homes this best of foods is used for only one dish—porridge. In others, it is also used for making delicious oatmeal bread, or those tasty oatmeal cookies that the children are so fond of.

In these advertisements we are going to print from time to time recipes for old dishes and new dishes made from rolled oats.

Most of them have been worked out and all of them officially approved by Miss Helen Graham Johnston, who understands the appetizing and dietetic qualities of rolled oats better than any other woman we know. Try these recipes and don't forget that each recipe was built with Tillson's Oats as the basis.

As Tillson's are prepared differently from any other rolled oats, both in the rolling process and the pan drying process, do not expect to get the most satisfactory results unless you are using

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet

For Schools, Hotels, Banks and Private Residences

Heretofore it has been impossible to install a Sanitary System of inside closet without water works and sewage, and you will agree with us when we say that the present outdoor system of closets are not only very insanitary, but are at the same time one of the most fruitful sources of both moral and physical ills.

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet is constructed principally for families and public bodies who live in a district where it is impossible to have waterworks and sewage. It can be placed in any part of a Residence, Store, School, Hotel, Bank, etc.

We have secured the Agency for this valuable Sanitary Closet, and invite investigation of its merits.

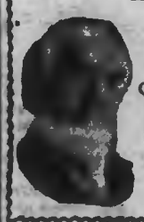
PEOPLE'S PULPIT.



Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle

EXAMPLES TO CHRISTENDOM

Pastor Russell Pays Warm Tribute to Patient Courtesy of the Chinese.

Hong Kong, China, Jan. 21.—The Foreign Missions Investigation Committee of the International Bible Students Association spent several days in Hong Kong, Canton and vicinity. For efficiency they divided, some giving more attention to one and others to another phase of missionary interest. They seemed well pleased with the treatment accorded them. Pastor Russell's address to the Chinese in their fine City Hall Auditorium was both helpful and encouraging. He declared that he came as a follower of Jesus and a friend to all humanity. He directed special attention to the words of St. Paul, applicable to humanity in general and at the present time specially to the Chinese: "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now—waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God." (Romans xiii. 22.) China's war experiences in recent years have been severe trials, particularly upon people of their temperament—peace-preferring, gentle, courteous to each other and to foreigners.

Pastor Russell feared for them terrible experiences with anarchy; but they will have it merely in advance of other peoples — to all of whom it is coming as a result of discontent, in some by greatly increased knowledge, combined with selfishness. The hope for all is in Messiah's Kingdom, now near at hand. Those who most quickly learn faith in God and justice and mercy toward others will soonest share the coming blessings. Some of us already share those coming blessings by the exercise of faith in the glorious promises of the Bible. The pastor had been told that their courtesy of manner arose, not from love and sympathy, but from law and custom centuries old. He could not judge the heart but had sincerely wished that some of the favored race of so-called Christendom possessed in a larger degree the admirable traits of the Chinese, their special demeanor, quiet courtesy, their civility and mercy.

It shall not be my mission, he said to urge you to become identified with any sects or parties of Christendom or to recommend to you any of those creeds. Nevertheless, in all of those creeds there is more or less of the most wonderful truth which ever came to the ears of humanity, but, alas! in a darker period it became so mixed with human tradition as to be to-day dishonoring to God, offensive to the intelligence of many, and thus an offense to those who still accept those creeds. I can readily see reasons why you have not been more influenced by Christianity. You felt that you had as good or better than [illegible] formerly you bended and bowed in reverence and worship to One whom you were told had fore-ordained whatever comes to pass, had fore-ordained the eternal torment of your ancestors and all mankind except a mere favored few. It is to your credit that you were not attracted by such a message, nor driven by such a fear.

I may never again have the opportunity of addressing you; let me therefore tell you now of another Christianity, of which probably you have never before heard, from the same Bible used by the missionaries here and confessed by us all to be God's Message—but at present a very different Message from that which my brethren confess. I call them "brethren" because I assume that they are sincere in their presentations. I once held similar views. I once preached also the damnation and eternal torture of all who do not accept Jesus in the present life and become His footstep followers. I should be sympathetic toward them, and I am. Nevertheless, this must not hinder me from using this opportunity to make known to you the clearer light that now shines upon God's Word.

I find that the darkness of error which beclouded my eyes of understanding came from the creeds and that the Bible most beautifully and most simply presents a God of all Grace, a Father of Mercies, from whom cometh every good and every perfect gift, and with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. (James i. 17.) I know from my examination of our religious books that the Bible alone presents this error of darkness, compassion and sympathy. All other gods are full of pride, anger, hatred, malice, and all need appeasement to avert their fury.

The God of the Bible, the true God of Christianity, is All-Loving, All-Kind, Ever-Merciful, and tells us so. It is a great fallacy which declares that He has damned humanity to a hell of torture at the hands of fire-proof demons. On the contrary, the Bible declares that the wage or penalty of sin is death, and that this is the explanation of the general prevalence of human weakness and frailty, mental, moral and physical—death. In our text St. Paul tells us that the whole creation — all mankind — are groaning and travailing in pain now because of sin and its death penalty. This has been in progress for six thousand years. It comes not through Divine persecution of His creatures, but by natural laws of heredity passing on the weakness, mental, moral and physical, from parent to child, from generation to generation, by a law of nature. God has simply permitted this Law to takes its course in disobedient man.

You may perhaps ask me if the God who is loving, generous and kind does not pity humanity in its present dying condition, even though we have come into this state through the violation of Divine law. Could not a God of Love do something for our aid?

That, my dear friends, is exactly what I wish to point out. The Bible declares that the Divine [illegible] sentence must stand unless in some manner justly satisfied. If a perfect man could be found, willing to sacrifice his life in reparation for father Adam's disobedience and forfeited life, then God could be just and accept the sacrifice and allow Adam and the remainder of his race to go free from the death sentence. But no such perfect man could be found. There is none righteous, no, not one. All were born in sin; none therefore could give to God a ransom for his brother, as the Scriptures declare. (Psalm xlix, 7.) What then? God figuratively represents His sympathy, saying that He looked down to see our condition and He hearkened to the groans of the prisoners of sin and death. He beheld that there was none that could pity or succor because all were under sentence. "Then His own eye pitied and His own Arm brought salvation." How bountiful the picture of Divine compassion hearkening to the groaning creation!

The Arm of God means, symbolically, Divine Power. He revealed this Arm in the arrangement which He made for the payment of our death penalty, in the sending of His Son, the Man Christ Jesus, who, "by the grace of God, tasted death for every man." As a perfect man had sinned, God provided a perfect man to be the Redeemer, "that as by man came death, by a Man also should come the resurrection of the dead; for as all in Adam die, even so shall all in Christ be made alive, every man in his own order.—I. Corinthians xv, 22.

Do you now catch a glimpse of the mercy, the compassion, the love of the Christian God to us, who appeals to the heart as being different from any other god of whom you have ever had knowledge! Think of a God, Infinite in Power, as being careful of His fallen creatures, and providing, even at self-sacrifice, for their recovery!

But you will say, Where is the recovery? Are we not still sick, mentally, morally and physically—a dying race? What has the death of Jesus accomplished for us? That is a good question; the answer to it will bring you much enlightenment respecting God's loving character and glorious Plan for humanity. The Bible teaches us that Jesus, who redeemed mankind, is to be made the great King, whose Kingdom shall dominate the whole world—"under the whole heavens." (Daniel vii. 27.) It will not be an earthly kingdom; nor will the King be visible to men, even as God is not visible, because He is a Spirit. The great Messiah will be invisible. He will be invisible because He is a Spirit, "the express Image of the Father's person." (Hebrews i, 3.) The Kingdom will be exercised through human agencies and it will increase and spread until all shall know God truly, and until "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" to Him—but all who will reject His grace shall perish totally in the Second Death.

My text declares that the relief for the groaning creation waits for the manifestation of the sons of God. We have already seen that Jesus, as the pre-eminent Son of God, died for our sins and ascended to the right hand of Divine Majesty, where He is waiting; and meantime the groaning creation must wait also, for the same thing for which He waits—for the sons of God. Here is a matter which seems to have been for a time hidden under the rubbish of the Dark Ages—the fact that God not only foreordained Jesus, the great Son of God, to be the world's Messiah, to deliver them from sin and death, but that He also foreordained the selection of a special class from amongst mankind, to be the Redeemer's associates and joint-heirs in His Kingdom of glory, honor and immortality. (Romans ii, 7.) It has required the entire period from the time of Jesus' death until now to call, to sanctify, to prepare these subordinate sons of God.

We might have supposed that our great, loving Creator would have called upon certain of the holy angels to be associates with the Redeemer in the glorious work of His Kingdom, the uplift of humanity. But not so; He has sent the invitation to this high, glorious station to our poor, fallen race. Thus, additionally, has the God of Love manifested the exceeding riches of His grace and His loving-kindness toward us in Christ Jesus. (Ephesians ii, 7.) How wondertully condescending!

Surely all will admit with me that no God of any people has ever manifested such a love and interest in His creatures as has the God of the Bible—the God of Christianity. It is the Love of God which constrains us—draws us. And His exceeding great and previous promises work in our hearts "both to will and to do His good pleasure." And this is the test His wisdom has provided. Although Messiah will use coercion to some extent during His reign of a thousand years, yet the Heavenly Father will not use coercion in respect to any of these sons whom He is now inviting. He seeketh such to worship Him as worship Him in spirit and in truth—such as need no coercion—such as delight to know and to do the will of the Father in Heaven—such as in these respects are copies of His Son, the Redeemer.

But, although God will not urge, force or compel any to be sons on this high plane of the divine nature, He does, to the contrary, set obstacles in the way and make the way "narrow" in which He invites these to follow their Leader. He does this for the very purpose of hindering any from coming except the class which He specially desires. His Message is through Jesus, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me." And again the Apostle expresses the Father's terms saying, "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, your reasonable service." Again says the Master, "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Surely we cannot say that these stringent restrictions are unreasonable. How could we expect our gracious Creator to want any except the most loyal of heart and most faithful and obedient to be associated with the Lord of Life and Glory in His glorious Kingdom work? This is the only calling which God has yet opened to humanity, and not until this elect class shall have been completed will the world's blessing be due to begin. It is my understanding of the Scriptures that the time for making our calling and election sure to this Kingdom class is now very short. It therefore behooves all who desire this glorious relationship with Messiah to "give all diligence" and to "run with patience the race set before us" in the Gospel, looking upon Jesus, the Author of our faith, until He become the finisher.

The wonderful blessings of our day, which make it so different from any other Epoch in the world's history, have reached even here to China, and we now see what already appear to be the beginnings of wonderful things. Evidently Divine Power, within the past century, has been lifting the veil, because we are just on the threshold of the New Dispensation—because the Church (the elect sons of God) is about complete—because "the manifestation of the sons of God" for the aid of the "groaning creation" is at hand—because Messiah's Kingdom glory is about to be ushered in. The blessings of the present are only a foretaste of those glorious blessings for the world of mankind. Oh, what compensations our loving God has provided for all the lessons of sin and sorrow, pain and death! He has promised that the former things shall be removed, nor can the mind comprehend what the glory of the future things will be!

So then, to the patient, persevering, civil Chinese, my message is an assurance that God's blessing is nigh at hand. For eighteen centuries He has been pouring out His Holy Spirit upon these saintly ones, His servants and handmaidens, for their comfort and joy and preparation for the Kingdom glory. The next thing in order is the pouring out of His spirit upon all flesh; that will include your race and all the families of the earth.

I cannot hope that many of you will feel drawn to become footstep followers of the lowly Nazarene, and even if many of you should so desire, we have the assurance of the Scriptures that the entire number will be but a "little flock"; but I do set before you the glorious prospects of human Restitution to all that was lost by Adam, to all that was redeemed by Calvary. I admonish you that all development of character you may make at the present time means so much of preparation and advancement for the future, and that all violation of conscience and antagonism to the principles of righteousness will work to your disadvantage in the future.

Therefore, as the Scriptures enjoin, "Seek meekness, seek righteousness; it may be that ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." (Zephaniah ii, 3.) The day of Divine anger and special retribution is in the close of this Age, at the inauguration of the Kingdom.

The whole world of mankind will then be transferred into the hands of Messiah, who will take them just as they are. They will be in various conditions. Some will be more depraved, others less depraved; some will be more seared in their consciences and some less; and these deficiencies of character will depend upon the way in which each one accepted or rejected light and opportunity in the present time.

The selfishness which has marked the world's experience, particularly within the last half century, is very reprehensible in God's sight, and Christendom, so highly favored of God, is to be held proportionately responsible. Hence the great time of trouble will fall with special severity upon Christendom. When you shall perceive this, rail not against Christianity, but realize that the Scriptures are being fulfilled, and that the dark cloud will be but temporary, and that behind it is hidden the most glorious vista of human blessing possible for the human mind to conceive! Prepare for it and especially seek to know the God of All Grace.

Ruskin's Boyhood.

Ruskin's mother was an extraordinary woman. She was an evangelical Puritan of the straitest type and held strong views even on the sinfulness of toys. An aunt once bought the boy a Punch and Judy, but his mother immediately put them away, and he never saw them again. "My parents," Ruskin once said, "debarred me from all exercises but walking. They would not let me ride lest I should be thrown; boating was dangerous because I might be drowned, and boxing my mother thought vulgar exercise.

Venture Was Profitable.

C. Arthur Pearson, editor and owner of The London Express, wealthy beyond the dreams of avarice, and reported suffering a complete breakdown from overwork, was a poor lad twenty-five years ago, but full of force and ambition. At nineteen he became editor of Tit-Bits and made good. After the first year, refused an increase in salary, he borrowed a small sum and started Pearson's Weekly, which in a few years poured a golden stream into his lap.

Here are two notices copied from the church door in a small village in Wales: "This is to give notice that no person is to be buried in this churchyard but those living in the parish. These Sea Yarns.

A worthy old dame of New England once invited her husband's attention to what seemed to her a curious item in the journal she was looking at. "Listen to this," said she, reading:

"The Mary H. Barker of Gloucester reports that she saw two whales, a cow and a calf, floating off Cape Cod the day before yesterday."

"Well, what about it?" asked the husband.

"Only this," replied the spouse. "I can understand about the two whales, but what beats me is how the cow and the calf got way out there."—St. Paul Dispatch.

WRINGING CONFESSIONS from CRIMINALS

W. J. Burns Recounts the Dramatic Process by Which the Nerve of Abe Ruef, the San Francisco Boss, and Others Has Been Broken Down

(Copyright, 1912, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

It is one thing to catch a criminal and another to convict him. The most noted thief takers in the world will tell you that often men are brought to trial, and seemingly with overwhelming evidence of their guilt at hand, yet they escape on some technicality. That's why William J. Burns, the detective, deems it absolutely essential to good detective work to wring a confession from his prisoner before the man is placed in the dock. Follow the history of the majority of the noted cases Burns has solved and it will be found that he invariably "clinched" his case with a confession.

"Juries are often made up of mighty queer critters," Burns remarked as he plunged his hands in his pockets and paced the floor of his apartment in New York city. "Frequently you sit through a trial and hear an avalanche of testimony bearing on the defendant's guilt, and the jury retires only to return with a verdict of acquittal. I have suffered along these lines more than once. Then very often the counsel employed by the defence are far cleverer than those for the State, or else through some slight technicality the prisoner gains his freedom. That's why I rely, insofar upon a confession wherever possible. It saves time, trouble and expense. What methods do I employ to get these confessions? That, I am afraid, would be giving away the innermost secrets of my profession."

Never Resorted to 'Third Degree.'

Burns stoutly declares he never resorts to the rigors of the "third degree." "Sweating" a suspected man he deems thoroughly unfitting, and if by adroit questioning and when questioning he can worm a confession from the person under inquisition he considers unfair to do so. But as for threats of physical violence, he says these are tactics that smack of brutality, and he never employs them.

"Without 'G.' Burns, had he not elected early in life to become a detective, would have made a good actor. There is strong dramatic instinct in his composition, and many of his cases, especially their climaxes, are apparently prepared with all the skill of a finished stage manager. For instance, nothing could have been more dramatic than the confessions of the McNamaras, coming as they did at a time when interest in the case was at high pitch. The public had not had time to grow weary of the routine of trial before the end came, and as suddenly as a bolt from a clear sky.

Burns only smiles when reminded of this strong trait in his character and replies:—"I don't believe in pulling my best stuff until the time is ripe." Which, to say the least, smacks of the vernacular of the stage. But it would be doing the detective a gross injustice to intimate that he is a stage detective. He works by methods all his own. There is nothing in these methods to suggest the detective of fiction, such as Sherlock Holmes. Take, for instance, the conviction of Abe Ruef, the San Francisco boss, who was sent to prison for a long term as the arch conspirator in one of the most gigantic games of graft that ever startled this country. Just how Ruef's confession was got is best told in Burns' own words:—

"After landing Ruef in jail we appreciated that the hardest task in our career, that of convicting him, lay before us. That we had the goods on him there was no doubt. We knew this, and so did he. But he was so powerful in 'Frisco that he owned many city officials body and soul. The Chief of Police was one of Ruef's creatures, and for this reason, following his arrest, I induced Judge Dunn to remand the prisoner in the custody of elisors of our choosing. You better believe we investigated these men as thoroughly as possible before placing them in charge of Boss Ruef.

Confession of Ruef.

"I made it a practice to visit Ruef every day in his cell. At first I talked with him about his case and used every available and legitimate means to make him confess. When the subject of his guilt was broached he'd shut up like a clam. Then I resorted to other tactics. I continued my daily visits, but studiously avoided talking about the 'Frisco graft cases. If he veered the conversation around that way I'd change the subject. We talked of everything else under the sun, and it was not long before he eagerly looked forward to my visits, and, as he often said, they went far toward varying the monotony of prison routine.

"His night guard was a man named McCarthy, whom I learned I could trust implicitly. I instructed McCarthy to pace silently before the prisoner's cell every night, and promptly at two o'clock to manage to awaken him. As Ruef would start up from a sound slumber he would peer out of his cell and gaze upon McCarthy dozing in his chair before his cell door. This routine was followed every night for three weeks, until it finally got on the prisoner's nerves.

"'What was that?' he would cry out, as he would spring from his cot.

"'I didn't hear anything,' McCarthy would unemotionally reply.

"'Didn't you hear a noise?' Ruef would anxiously inquire.

"'I didn't hear a sound,' was McCarthy's invariable reply.

"This kept up for some time, until one night, more thoroughly alarmed than ever, Ruef asked his guard if he had heard the noise which had just awakened him.

"'All I heard was you talking in your sleep,' McCarthy answered.

"'What was I talking about?' Ruef asked.

"'Talking about this graft case,' McCarthy told him.

"That settled it. Ruef was in a panic of fear. He was afraid to go to sleep at night, for fear he would divulge some further secrets, and the loss of sleep played such havoc with his nerves that he was in a pitiable condition. I could see the sad change in his condition, for all the while I was still calling on him. Early one morning I received a message from McCarthy telling me that Ruef would like to see me as soon as possible. Instead of complying with his request I postponed a visit until the latest possible moment.

"What Was That?" He Would Cry Out, as He Would Spring from His Couch.

"Of course Ruef wanted to talk about his case. I, however, wasn't in the least interested and changed the subject. Finally, in desperation, wild eyed and haggard from the loss of sleep, he turned to me and said:—

"'There is no use in postponing this thing, Bill, and I might as well tell you now as later. You've got the goods on me, and I want to make a clean breast of the whole thing and get it off my mind and conscience.'

"As he rattled along and told all of which I already knew, there was a stenographer stationed near who took down every word he said. I let him tell his own story, not interrupting him until he reached its close. When he finished I remained with him an hour or two, chatting with him on other topics, thus giving my stenographer time to transcribe his notes. Finally the finished manuscript was returned to me, and before I left Ruef that night he had read and affirmed all contained in his written confession and his signature was duly affixed and witnessed.

"Had Ruef stood by this confession I would have aided him. I would have exerted what influence I had to have some clemency shown him. But he was ill advised. Some of his friends told him a plot was hatching whereby he was to be kidnapped and taken to a remote spot in the mountains. He well knew that his confession had involved many another, and he also knew that death is sometimes visited upon an informer. Fearing what might happen to him in the fastnesses of the mountains, he repudiated his confession. Naturally I never let up on him from that moment. He lied to me, and I never forgive a man who wilfully lies. Ruef got a far more severe sentence than he would have suffered had he stood by his confession."

"Sometimes," Burns continued after a long pause, "other means are necessary. Take the dyed-in-the-wool crooks, counterfeiters or confidence men with a long criminal record. They readily realise that denials of guilt are useless after I have had several talks with them and revealed to them my knowledge of secrets they thought were securely locked in their bosoms. Spring some such surprise as this on them and they will generally cave under and plead for mercy. Understand me now. It's not the purpose of unburdening their consciences that prompts them to confess, but rather the hope that when they are placed on trial and the confession is passed up to the Court it will serve to beget clemency. Sometimes it does. Frequently I have told my prisoners I would exert all my influence with the Court to have their punishment mitigated if they aid the cause by a confession. The wise ones seize the chance with avidity. There are others who sullenly hold out, but they are always the losers."

Trains His Assistants.

When Burns severed his connection with the Secret Service and established a detective agency of his own he not only procured the best available men as assistants, but he trained them in his own methods. He had no more apt pupil than Mr. Schindler, manager of the New York agency. Schindler, it will be recalled, was the sleuth designated to run down Helderman, the murderer of a little girl at Asbury Park, after the New Jersey police had failed.

Suspicion strongly rested on Helderman, but he was employed by a florist who stoutly believed in his innocence, and even went out of his way to protect and shield him. Helderman slept in one of the greenhouses and it was next to impossible to get access to him. There was nothing tangible on which he could be arrested, so the only hope lay in getting some strong clew, and this he alone could supply.

Schindler knew that he must employ Burns tactics to cope with the case, and this he promptly did. He knew that a big dog slept in the greenhouse with Helderman. He also knew that, after protracted fits of barking this dog, once aroused, would howl and bay by the hour. So every night promptly at midnight Schindler would arouse the dog. The beast would bark itself hoarse and round out the night by its plaintive howls. This programme was repeated every night for a fortnight, until the dog's howls so worked upon Helderman's nerves that he fled from his place of employment.

Once he was smoked out the rest was easy. Schindler was after him, and joining him on a train, soon so ingratiated himself that he made a friend and confidant of him. They travelled together for several days and then, almost without suggestion, Helderman confessed the whole crime. He was arrested and convicted and his electrocution followed.

Burns recalls a case which he regards as one of the simplest in his career, yet one which threw the entire South in a panic for a time. It is needless to add that the detective secured [illegible] for the murder.

"What Johnson Carlisle was Secretary of the Treasury, during Cleveland's second term," Burns said, "it transpired that the State of Mississippi had issued debt warrants or notes that strongly resembled legal currency, and they were being passed for cash. I was detailed on the case, and I soon learned there were a score of persons who readily owned they had been imposed upon in this manner, but it was difficult to trace those who passed the notes. I learned that the paper which had been circulated as currency was being printed from the original debt warrant plates, but with a slight alteration. The original makers of the plates swore the plates had been destroyed when the warrants were run off, and they had many reasons to corroborate this contention.

"For a time I was up against it good and hard, so I determined to resort to heroic tactics. I visited the United States District Attorney and requested him to issue warrants for the arrest of the Governor, Treasurer and Auditor of the State of Mississippi. At first he thought I was crazy, and he didn't hesitate to tell me so. He curtly declined my request and practically ordered me from his office. Later that day he received an order from Washington curtly telling him to obey the Secret Service agent.

"The warrants were issued all right, and although I won't tell you previously all that happened, nevertheless before the sun set I was not only in possession of those plates, but I had a confession from the firm which was printing the bogus notes from them. Of course the State officials were in no way involved, but the scare I threw into them set wheels in motion which I had found clogged.

"The brazen effrontery of some crooks is amazing. I honestly believe that had I accepted all the hush and bribe money offered me in my twenty-five years as a detective I would be a millionaire. These offers have come to me in all sorts of forms. For instance, when I was at work on the Oregon land frauds a big railroad official suggested that I leave the coast, come East and take charge of some investigations they wished started. I was offered $100,000 for the job.

"'But that would necessitate my leaving Oregon,' I replied.

"'Oh, yes; that's understood,' said the official.

"'Well, you and your railroad, in fact all the railroads in this country, haven't money enough to call me away from this State until I have the band of crooks who have been robbing the government behind the bars,' I told him. He was manifestly disappointed and disgusted, I imagine, for he told me I was the biggest fool he ever met.

"Counterfeiters are always well supplied with funds, and when one of their clique gets into trouble there is ample means with which to buy him off. Taylor and Brodell, two of the most notorious and dangerous counterfeiters this country ever knew, whom I rounded up and sent away for long terms, would have paid any price to get away. They were at the head of a big band which had flooded the country with bogus hundred-dollar bills, and money was no object to them. These were the men who, after being incarcerated in jail, continued their counterfeiting operations and actually turned out from their cells plates that were marvels for skill and beauty.

"I could have had $50,000 in one lump from this bunch, but what's the use? That sort of money doesn't do a man any good, and for my part I prefer to work for it. Aside from that, look at the fun I'd miss? There is no other calling in the world so interesting and thrilling as mine, and if they don't finally 'get me' I expect to keep hammering away at the same old trade and in the same old way. No easy money for me, if you please. I am paid to catch the fellows who go after that kind of coin, and I like my job."

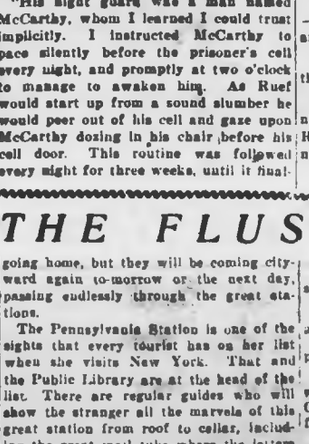
THE FLUSTERED TRAVELLERS' PASSING SHOW

TRAVELLERS pour into New York from all quarters through two great railroad gateways, the splendid new Pennsylvania station and the Grand Central, which is rearing its promise of grandeur amid vast chaos. Here rush the commuting population, pressing to work in the morning and feverishly hastening for homeward trains at night. Here die the prosperous tourists from luxurious trains, and all day long, even in the middle of the day, there is a trickle of humanity going to and fro. Never are the stations empty. Only here, even more than elsewhere in New York, reminded of the aged negress' question "Ain't you all got any homes to go to?" Of course some are going home, but they will be coming cityward again to-morrow or the next day, passing endlessly through the great stations.

The Pennsylvania Station is one of the sights that every tourist has on her list when she visits New York. That and the Public Library are at the head of the list. There are regular guides who will show the stranger all the marvels of this great station from roof to cellar, including the great mail tube where the letters are shot in over a distance of many blocks.

The great mass of visitors, however, are without guidance other than that obtained from their guide books or from friendly officials.

A woman was sitting in the waiting room the other morning; at night she was still sitting there. "I've had such a pleasant day," she informed one with whom she started a conversation. "I've just spent the day here. I had my luncheon in the restaurant, had my hands manicured and my shoes blacked, bought some flowers at one shop, a book at another and watched people. It's better than going to a show."



HORRID GATEMAN WILL NOT LET HER PASS

The Information Bureau never rests. All day long the attendants must turn an open ear and give a ready answer to remarks pertinent and otherwise.

At the Grand Central:—

"Yes, madam, the train for Poughkeepsie leaves on time."

"Fare to Albany? Three ten."

"No, the 4:20 for Albany does not stop at Fishkill."

"No, madam: dogs are positively not permitted on passenger cars."

A fussy little man comes along and wants to know if the boat between Garrison and West Point stops at the foot of the hill.

"It always has," vouchsafes the Information Man, with a growing wonder if a mere boat could be expected to climb a hill.

Along comes a man now with a telegram from his wife. She is in Montana and she says:—"Start East tonight. Meet me."

Says he to the Information Man, "Can you help me out?"

"Do you know what road she is coming on?"

"No. That's it."

"I'm afraid you're up against it if you don't know that."

"Well, that's my wife all right," says the man in the impartial tone of one who concedes even the devil his due, and adds, as a parting shaft, "It's a wonder she didn't ask me to meet her in the middle of the North River."

Then there comes a telephone call.

"Information Bureau?"

"Yes, madam."

"Are you the Information Man?"

"Yes, madam."

"Can I get a cab through you?"

This is a form of inquiry so often repeated that the other day when things had been especially trying the always polite official permitted himself to say:—

"Well, not exactly, madam." Which reply, falling happily upon the ears of a lady not devoid of a sense of humor provoked only mirth and not wrath.

Up steps an embittered feminine.

"I want a time table," says she.

"Where are you going?"

"I said I wanted a time table." Marked accent on alternate words.

"Yes, but where do you want to go?"

"Is that any of your affair? Come, give me a time table, my good man, and attend to your own business; it will keep you engaged."

"I guess that's right, too," he says, almost audibly, as he hands her a time table, which does not prove to be the one she wants and which she returns with heightened color and a sibilant whisper which sounds like the word "stupid."

Then there is the middle aged couple of sincere and obvious respectability. The woman is the keener, in token of which she walks two paces ahead of her husband. You can see that in every way she has always kept two paces ahead of him. Anyhow, she thinks now that they may go to California and if they decide to go, she wants to know which route they had best take to avoid heavy snows. And if they want the scenic line the dust and [illegible] to encounter heavy snow, what provision will the road make for their comfort? Will the cars be properly heated? Will they be sumptuously provisioned? What would the delay be?

I'VE GOT HIM HERE.

"Humph!" busily comments this catechist. If there isn't any satisfactory information to be got out of an information bureau, I'd better go to Lakewood for a couple of weeks; it wouldn't be so much of a risk, and off she goes in a righteous huff, dragging her accustomed bit behind in the recession.

So it goes from morning till night—the whole range of questions.

But the other night there was a real fuss.

A woman, whose chin denoted a certain strength of purpose, put down a nickel and demanded chewing gum. They told her gently that they did not handle that article there and politely added the information that she might find it at the news stand. Of course she had to be shown exactly the spot where the news stand stood.

It so happens that the news stand does not sell chewing gum, but the courteous attendant suggested the candy stand. Walking the length of the room she arrived breathless at the candy stand. Imagine then her feelings upon meeting with a third repulse.

By this time she was beginning to see that all the powers of the great railroad station were leagued together for her discomfiture. She flounced out to interview the station master. On her way she carried to speak with the gateman. She flourished her ticket in his face and laid the facts before him in a bare, bald way.

"Don't you dare to start the train without me. You can just hold up your old train till I've seen the station master and got some satisfaction for this outrage. Oh, I'll write it up in the Bugle; I'll make them all smart for it!"

Two Heartless Wretches.

There are others about the station who have also to contend with the special brand of unreason which possesses those who travel. There is the gateman who repeats, "It's against the rules" to those who seek to accompany departing friends to the seat they are to occupy in the car. Does it avail him a whit? Not one. Each time he must repeat the text.

Here is a sweet, coy young thing in a skimped skirt and a feathered hat. She is nearer twenty-seven than seventeen, though she would be the last to mention that fact. She is seeing "him" off and that horrid gateman will not let her pass. You can't blame her for being angry at the gateman, for this is her first love—and it may be her last.

The gateman is a heartless wretch, and so is the station master. And yet it sometimes happens—perhaps they have children of their own, for it certainly does sometimes happen—that they will permit a mother to take a small child to the train and see him really safely started upon a lonely journey, tagged to his destination.

Out on the concourse where trains arrive it is even worse. Trains depart on scheduled time, but many things conspire to prevent their timely arrival. There are ever changing differences from day to day. The fact that when a train does not arrive on time it is most likely to come in on some other track adds to the confusion. An automatic megaphone announces train arrivals just in time for the impatient ones to meet their friends, but in the excitement many persons become confused and fail to find the right train.

The big policeman who is constantly on duty here becomes a magnet which attracts hosts of arrivals who have not been met.

Not long ago a funeral special was ready to pull out, but the trainmen could find no corpse. At the last moment the station master was appealed to. Anxiety, somber search failed to discover the familiar pine box. There was none on the platform; there was none in the baggage room.

Three—five—eight minutes late.

THE INFORMATION BUREAU NEVER RESTS.

An undertaker, watch in hand, came bustling back.

"Isn't it time to start? What's the trouble?"

With an inclination of his head the station master motioned him solemnly aside.

"The party of the first part hasn't come. There's been no corpse brought in late to-day."

"Oh," said the undertaker, "that's all right. I've got him here," indicating a square box under his arm. "Cremated—taking him to family vault at Woodlawn," he further vouchsafed.

One day a man died in a wheel chair on the platform in the big station and the station master had to take the body and the stricken widow under his personal care pending the arrival of friends.

SOME REAL DIMINUTIVES.

ENGLISH possesses few real diminutives. Of the few derived words of this sort, such as "darling," a little dear, and "lambkin," a little lamb, most are old words.

The Spanish and Portuguese form diminutives with the greatest ease, and the difficulty of rendering these in English will show what power of expression we lack.

For example, niña, a girl; niñita, a little girl; niñitica, a very little girl; niñitiquita, a very very little girl; niñitiquitica, a very very very little girl." Along with this noun may be taken the adjective chico, small, and it will accompany the noun step by step, for we shall have chiquita, very small; chiquitica, very very small; chirriquitica, very very very small.

Now, if we put the noun and the adjective together, niñitiquitica chirriquitica, we have quite overdrawn the resources of English and bankrupted its credit.

The superior facility which our Scotch friends enjoy is made plain in their tender expression "my wee bit laddie." In Shetland there is a series of diminutives can applied to the canine race that is quite interesting. There is (1) a dog, (2) a doggie, (3) a wee doggie, (4) a wee bit doggie, and (5) a wee bit doggikie.

REAL JACK HORNER.

EVERYBODY who remembers anything of his childhood knows the rhyme about "Little Jack Horner," who "sat in a corner." That there was ever a real Jack Horner and that the plum he extracted from the pie was a very valuable plum indeed few of the little folk who enjoy his exploits know or would care to learn.

For the benefit of the grown-ups, however, there may be cited the origin and history of Jack, as set forth in a very old chap book, carefully preserved in the Bodleian Library, and entitled "The Pleasant History of Jack Horner, Containing His Witty Tricks and Pleasant Pranks."

It appears that this gentleman was steward to an abbot of Glastonbury. The good abbot learned that His Majesty Henry VIII. had seen fit to be indignant because the monks had built a kitchen which could not burn down. Now, a King's indignation was dangerous and must be appeased. Therefore, the abbot sent his steward, Jack Horner, to present the foreign with a suitable peace offering. It took the form of a big and tempting Christmas pie, beneath the crust of which the transfer deeds of twelve manors were hidden.

But Jack, further appears, had an eye for the profits. Number One, and on the road he slyly lifted the crust and abstracted the deeds of the Manor of Wells. On his return, bringing the deeds, he plausibly explained that they had been given to him by the King. Hence the rhyme.

BY RAIL OVER LOFTY ANDES

Since 1910 South America has linked Atlantic and Pacific by the steel rails of a transcontinental railway line. This connection is now made across all three Americas. North America boasts many transcontinental systems, connecting Atlantic and Pacific in four and a half days over more than 3,000 miles of track in each case. Central America unites the oceans in two hours by the forty-seven miles of track between Colon and Panama. South America now brings the two oceans in touch in about forty hours of travel over 888 miles of track.

The latest, or South American, transcontinental line presents interesting and unique features. It connects the first (Buenos Aires) and the third (Santiago) of South American cities. It thus unites the capitals of two of the three greatest South American powers, leaving only Brasil with Rio out of the account. It traverses the fertile plains and lofty mountains of the south temperate zone—the future seat of population and power in South America, the section corresponding to the United States in the northern continent. It crosses or pierces the Andes—that great barrier of rock land ice running the length of the continent—at the point where the mountains of the Americas rise highest, attaining altitudes surpassed in all the world by only a few inaccessible Himalayan peaks. It quickens the world's currents of travel and trade, bringing Buenos Aires, the New York of South America, and Valparaiso, its San Francisco, within less than two days of each other, as a substitute for ten or eleven days of stormy and dangerous passage in polar seas through the Straits of Magellan.

In last November (a month corresponding to May with us in the north temperate zone) the trans-Andine tunnel had been opened for travel about six months, and perfect smoothness and precision of railway operation had not yet been attained. The eastward transcontinental trip from Valparaiso or Santiago to Buenos Aires requires, when the trains run on schedule, a fraction over two days, of which over one and one-half days are spent in the train and a night in the hotel at Los Andes, Chile, just before the trans-Andine section of the road is reached.

The delay of three hours at El Portillo through a defect in the engine gave an intimate view of the heart of the Andes, and supplied an experience which compensated for the loss of the trip over the Cumbre, passing the famous statue, the Christ of the Andes, on the Chilean-Argentina boundary. El Portillo is on the Chilean side of the Andes, near Caracoles and the tunnel entrance at nearly the highest point on the railroad, about 12,400 feet in altitude. At Mendoza the municipal street-sprinkling brigade consists of many drilled boys who dipped running water from the gutters in small tin buckets at the end of poles, and distributed the water systematically over the dusty streets.

VIVID RAILROAD IMPRESSIONS

The impressions left by the railroad trip itself are vivid. The Andes are as wonderful as when viewed from Lake Titicaca or from the Oroya road in Peru. From Valparaiso or Santiago to Los Andes the scenery is picturesque rather than grand, showing green valleys, rolling foothills, herds of cattle, wild flowers, a nearer and nearer approach to the snow-tipped rock masses of the giant Andes. Los Andes is only about four hours (seventy-eight miles) from Valparaiso and a little less from Santiago. The mountain trip by narrow-gauge road begins there in the early morning and by the schedule ends after 160 miles of travel at 8 o'clock in the evening at Mendoza, on the Argentina side. All day long wonderful views spread themselves before the eyes, beginning as the train crawled slowly up the repaired cog-rail section of the railroad near Rio Blanco, where the delaying accident had occurred. This third or rack rail of the Abt system of cogs and racks is found for most of the way between Rio Blanco and the tunnel on the Chilean side and from the tunnel down to Punta de Vacas on the Argentina side.

From Los Andes we crossed 118 bridges and passed through twenty-four small tunnels before reaching the great tunnel, two miles in length, by which our train, leaving the ancient pack trail at an altitude of 12,600 feet (or 2,500 feet lower than the summit of the ancient pass) burrows through the main range of the Andes, entering in Chile and emerging in Argentina. One's vivid recollection of the tunnel itself is of eight minutes of perfect darkness, absolute, oppressive blackness, with not a light in either car or tunnel.

Just before reaching Puente del Inca in the descent on the Argentinat side the finest view of Aconcagua (eighteen miles away) is enjoyed. This peak is visible on a clear day at Valparaiso, ninety miles distant, and may be seen at several points on the trans-Aldine railway trip. It is the giant of the Andes and of the Americas, and with its 23,000 feet of altitude is, next to a few Himalayan peaks, the highest mountain in the world.

The latest available figures (1907) concerning Andes heights fix Aconcagua at 23,865 feet; Tupungato, 22,015, and Mercenario, not far to the north of Aconcagua, 21,300. At these figures the three members of the Aconcagua group are the highest mountains on the American continent.

Of our own mountains, Pike's Peak is 14,108 feet high; Shasta, 14,380; Rainier or Tacoma, 14,539; Fairweather (Alaska), 15,230; Crillon (Alaska), 15,900; St. Elias (Alaska), 16,024, and Mount McKinley, 20,300; Washington, 6,293; Mitchell (N. C.), 6,710.

Of the journey of 650 miles across the vast monotonous plains of Argentina between Mendoza and Buenos Aires, after the former's vineyards and orchards are left, one remembers most of the boundless expanses stretching to the horizon, suggesting strongly our own prairies, though in the latitude of southern California; the great herds of cattle wandering at will; the Argentina cowboys with high boots and broad trousers; vast wheat fields; the ranch buildings here and there in dark patches of surrounding trees; the ostriches and the rabbits, as well as sheep and horses, and longest of all one remembers the fine and penetrating dust which sifts through the tiniest crevices and gray-coats everywhere and everybody, as in a journey across our own great American alkali desert. This region is the source of Argentina's vast wheat, wool and hide exports of to-day, and will in the future, when it has attracted even a small fraction of the millions which it is capable of sustaining, be the heart in population and power of the great Argentina nation which the twentieth century is to develop.—Washington Star.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES

Orange Pudding.

Put in a bowl three ounces sugar, the grated rind of one large orange, three ounces stale sponge cake finely crumbled and a tiny pinch of salt. Pour over these ingredients four tablespoonfuls milk, diluted with three-fourths cup water, previously scalded, then the strained juice of three oranges and three well-beaten eggs. Mix thoroughly. Line a pie-dish with puff paste, pour in the mixture and bake half an hour. Sprinkle pulverized sugar, mixed with grated orange rind, over the top before serving.

Boiled Cauliflower.

Remove the outer leaves and cut off the stem close to the bottom; wash in cold water and let soak for one hour; tie in a piece of cheesecloth to prevent breaking. Stand in a kettle of boiling water, add one teaspoonful salt and let boil till tender, about thirty minutes. Take up carefully and put it into a hot vegetable dish. For the sauce, melt a tablespoonful butter, being careful not to brown it, and a tablespoonful flour, and mix until smooth; then add one-half cup milk and one-half cup water, and stir constantly until it boils; season this with salt and pepper; pour this over the cauliflower and serve at once.

Stewed Chestnuts.

Prepare and stew as directed (about one and a half hours). When tender, remove from the stock at once, while unbroken, and serve as a vegetable in a tureen, with white sauce poured over.

MUTTON BIRDS OF SOUTH SEA

There are some virgin spaces in the world yet. There is Stewart island, for example, in the South Pacific south of New Zealand. Although only fifteen miles from the mainland its rocky promontories and stupendous headlands are still the haunt of primeval nature. Only the boom of the southern surf and the cry of the wheeling sea birds—that is all for eleven months of the year. In the twelfth a portion of that virgin solitude is ruthlessly disturbed.

For Stewart island and the group of rocky land specks that surround it are the home of that marvelous migrant, the sooty or short-tailed petrel, a brownish-black bird about the size of an English wood pigeon, but popularly known throughout Australasia as the mutton bird, because of a faint resemblance between its cooked flesh and mutton.

At certain times of the year young mutton birds are sold in large quantities throughout Australia and New Zealand, for they are esteemed a delicacy by many people, which accounts for the annual slaughter. The capture and preparation of the young birds for the market form the staple industry of the southern Maoris in the season.

The mutton bird is a migrant, but the Stewart island group is its breeding home, and thither it comes every season to lay its eggs, hatch its young and remain till the young birds are able to fly away to the North with the parent birds. Those which do not fall victims to the organized savagery of the brown barbarians. It is a wonderful sight to see the cloud of birds making for Stewart island for the nesting season.

They come almost all together, flocks of hundreds of thousands darkening the skies for several successive days, the blind homing instinct superior to memories of past slaughter. The newly arrived birds, which return to the islands generally about Sept. 25th, never more than a day or so later, spend the first few days after their arrival in fixing up nests where they nested last year, preparing snug homes for innocents to be hatched for slaughter.

The birds in their nest-building operations work with the regularity and precision of human beings and with a great deal more industry than many human beings employ. The first thing they do is to clean out the old nests, which are holes in the ground, arranged in symmetrical fashion and covering miles of ground. Holes that have been filled up are excavated again; those too wet are extended into drier ground by side channels. Thus a single opening to a nest may have three or four side passages. The depth of the nesting holes is regulated by the depth of the soil overlying the rock; but they are never very deep, since their direction is horizontal and tortuous after the birds have burrowed a few inches below the surface of the soil.

So wonderfully is the homing instinct developed in the mutton bird that each pair of birds rear their young in the same nest year after year. Identical markings on young birds reared in the same hole during successive seasons have proved this remarkable fact.

When the nests are cleared out the renovated homes are lined with leaves. During the cleaning and nest making, which is done by both male and female, the birds go without food. Then they flock out to sea, catching fish till about Nov. 25th, when the laying of eggs commences. The remarkable regularity which characterises the mutton bird in all its actions during the breeding season is now again strikingly manifested.

The female birds all lay on or about the same day and at the same time. Some of the mutton bird catchers actually assert that all the birds lay exactly on the same day, but such unanimity seems hardly possible. It is probable, however, that the laying season is compressed within the limits of two or three days at the most, for the belated birds that arrive at Stewart island after the laying season has started invriably drop their eggs into the sea.

Each hen bird lays one large, white egg with a semi-transparent shell, which is hatched in about four weeks. At first the young bird is a mere ball of down and quite helpless. It remains in the nest till about the beginning of April, by which time it is enormously fat.

The old bird stops feeding the young bird about the middle of April, and the youngster is soon driven from the nest by hunger in search of food, to offer itself a helpless sacrifice to its Maori destroyer, for it leaves the nest quite unable to fly and flops ily about. It is at this stage of its existence that the young mutton birds are caught for the Australian market, for though the birds in the nest are keenly relished by Maoris, who salt them and send them to their friends as a rare delicacy, they are much too rank then for the European palate.

About the middle of April the old mutton birds migrate to the north. The young ones follow as soon as they are able to fly. About the end of May thousands of young ones may be seen flapping clumsily round and round the islands learning to fly before embarking on their first great migration. In a day or so they wing their way strongly northward in the wake of their parents, those who have escaped the great animal slaughter, which commences some weeks before this. The islands known as mutton bird islands are claimed by different Maori families, who, during April and the early part of May go and live upon these small tempest-swept dots of earth rocks in the great Southern Pacific.

The brown Assyrian sweeps down on the mutton bird fold at night-time, lighting himself thereto with unconscious irony by the flare of a torch dipped in mutton bird oil. The fat, frightened, foolish fledglings are easily caught and are killed with a blow of a stout stick.—London Standard.

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to submit for consideration and information my second annual report of the Police Department of the City of Peterborough for the year 1911.

Juvenile Offenders.

During the year, as usual, a number of juvenile offenders were brought before the magistrate for different offences, mostly of petty nature. No entries were made on the police record against them.

With the exception of the five boys who broke into St. James' Church and the two South-end schools, these boys were charged with breaking and entering, and allowed out on suspended sentence on their parents making restitution.

I might say just here that we owe many thanks to Mr. George Cochrane, agent for the Children's Aid Society, and Mr. Goodwill, solicitor for the above society, for their untiring efforts in assisting us in coming to conclusions in dealing with juvenile delinquents and helping to save the boys.

The total amount of fines and costs collected in connection with the Police Department during the year 1911, and paid over to the city treasurer was $1,973.35.

Stolen Property.

During the year 1911, there was reported to the police, property stolen valued at $1,958.20.

There was recovered by the police, of the above amount, property valued at $1,071.01, and returned to the owners.

Lost Property.

Property valued at $644.34 was reported lost, and of this amount there was found and returned to the owners property valued at $588.74.

Lodgers.

During the year 296 persons were given lodgings and shelter in the police cells, and those who were considered deserving were provided with food.

Visits Made to Residences Whose Occupants were Absent from the City

During the warm season, from July to September, the police visited the houses of citizens who were absent from the city, twice every night during the temporary absence of the owners or occupants. The above houses were entirely under our care, and I am pleased to say that no report has reached this office of any of the above mentioned houses being entered or anything stolen therefrom.

Fires.

The police attended fires during the year to the number of 46.

Lost Children.

During the year, as usual, a large number of children who had strayed from their homes were taken care of by the police until their parents could be located and notified.

Sanitary Inspection.

The Sanitary Inspector made 4,000 visits and served 800 notices to citizens, but the officer does not return to see if his instructions have been carried out; if he did, it would mean that it would occupy one officer at least six months. I therefore would repeat my recommendation of last year and ask that the police department be relieved of this work, as it is impossible for the police to give the attention to the work that it should have.

Contagious Diseases.

The number of houses placarded during the year 1911 was 47, as will show below:

Diphtheria	19
Scarlet fever	23
Smallpox	5
Total	47

Recommendations.

I would repeat my recommendation of last year regarding increased police protection, and I am sure that the increased population during the past year demands it.

From the tone of the speeches made at the Mayor's banquet by the different members of the City Council, every effort is going to be made this year to induce manufacturers to come to our city. We should be in a position to assure them that they will receive proper police and fire protection, as these are two of the important points that manufacturers consider when locating.

Peterborough covers an area of 2,807½ acres, being two miles wide and two and three-quarter miles in length. It is nearly half the size of London, Hamilton, or Ottawa, and we have only seven policemen!

There are streets in our city with thousands of people living on them, with valuable property unprotected. Life is the most important, property comes next. In the event of fire, particularly by night, there should be police patrolling these districts for the purpose of sending in alarms in the event of fire. This is only one of their numerous duties.

It was only during the last year that we had an instance of the need of this protection. An old couple living in the south end of the city, whose house caught fire, is a case in which but for timely aid, might have had fatal results. This is only one of the unexpected outbreaks which might happen to any of the citizens in the residential part of the city.

I think that the above reasons are sufficient to warrant the increase that I am about to recommend, without taking into consideration the fact that the number of our police is far below the average with other cities of our population and under.

I would therefore strongly recommend that two men be added to the strength of the department this year.

It is customary in the majority of cities to reckon police officers' pay by the day, as you are aware that the men work every day in the year.

The highest paid police officer in our department is receiving $750.00 per annum, which is equal to $2.05½ per day. The lowest paid man is receiving $600.00 per annum, which is equal to $1.64½ per day.

I would therefore recommend that the department receive a substantial increase in pay, that we may be able to procure the very best men that we can possibly get, and after we get them, be able to retain them, as good men's service grows more valuable all the time.

I would ask your honourable board to consider the advisability of making a scale of salaries for the department, namely, first, second, and third class pay.

The matter of remodelling the police station and police court room was taken up by the City Council of 1911, and a recommendation was made and a by-law passed authorizing the City Trust Commissioners to go on with the work. I trust this will be done as soon as possible in the spring, as it is at present in a deplorable condition, most unsanitary and unfit for use.

REMARKS

P.-c. Middleton and P.-c. Brown sent in their resignations during the year. The vacancies were very satisfactorily filled by the appointment of Alexander Kidd and John Brown.

The general health and conduct of the force has been good.

You will no doubt notice the large number of cases under the Breach of Liquor License Act. I wish to draw your attention to the fact that there are none of the charges for selling during prohibited hours, but the greater part is against persons on the prohibited list and the remainder for selling to miners.

In addition to our local work, there was a number of arrests made for outside places, of which I will only mention the most important ones:

1 for Montreal—Charge, shooting with intent to kill.

1 for Campbellford—Charge, horse-stealing.

2 for Lindsay—Charges, horse-stealing and theft.

1 for Port Hope—Charge, stealing.

Outages of Street Lights.

There were reported by the police to the inspector of lights, outages to the number of 406 during the year.

The Chief Constables' Association of Canada meets this year in the city of Brantford, and I trust, gentlemen, that you will make it convenient for me to attend.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,
J. J. THOMPSON,
Chief Constable.

Its Wonderful Power in Curing Sick Cattle and Colicky Horses Makes "Nerviline" Worth Its Weight in Gold.

The stockman or farmer that doesn't know of the thousand and one uses of "Nerviline" around the stable has a great deal to learn. "Why, I wouldn't think of locking my stable door at night without knowing I had a supply of 'Nerviline' on hand. I always get a dozen bottles at a time from my druggist. To cure colic, indigestion, and bad stomach in a horse or cow there is no remedy on earth in the same class as 'Nerviline.' Last summer I had a $250 horse that got the scours, and I would have lost him if I hadn't been able to give him Nerviline. I poured a full bottle of Nerviline in a pint of water down his throat and saved his life. I know of neighbors who have saved many heads of valuable stock, stricken with colic, just by using Nerviline. It is equally good as a rub-on liniment, and I know from my experience that for man or beast, internally or externally, 'Nerviline' is worth a dollar a drop.—James E. McCullough, Stock Breeder, etc."

PETERBOROUGH MONDAY JANUARY 22 1912

PETERBOROUGH EXTENDS A HEARTY WELCOME TO THE SCOTCH CURLERS

VISITING CURLERS ARRIVE IN THE CITY YESTERDAY

Are Formally Met and Welcomed by Reception Committee ---At the Invitation of Rev. Mr. Keith They Attend Church in a Body---How Day Was Spent.

"O' a' the wintry sports and plays
That gar ane lo'e the holidays,
An' put ane in a merry frame,
Gie me the gran' and roarin' game
Nae bad surrounding near it lurk,
The guid o' every creed and kirk,
An' clergy without thocht o' blame
Join in the gran' auld roarin' game."
"Fair fa' in the curling, O'.
"Fair fa' in the curling, O'.
Your glasses toom to stane and broom,
An' the royal game o' curling, O'."

These words express in a small measure the spirit which will no doubt manifest itself throughout the afternoon and evening when the visiting curlers and the local knights of the broom meet together in Charlotte Street rink. Mr. McIntosh has seven rinks of excellent ice ready for the fray, and indications are that the game will be fast and exciting. The weather being comparatively mild, will place the visitors in a pre-eminent position as regards the local curlers. The Scotchmen are unaccustomed to the hard ice, and consequently are at their best when the weather is mild.

Through the courtesy of Mr. E. G. Patterson, the visitors were shown through Peterborough's largest industry, the Canadian General Electric Company's establishment. The Quaker Oats' mammoth plant also came under the critical gaze of the visitors, after which a jaunt around the city culminated the morning programme for the curlers.

A large number of local Scotchmen took occasion to visit the curlers at the Oriental, and in one or two instances renew old acquaintances. It was a case of Scot meetig Scot. They talked of events in the Old Land and awoke slumbering memories of bygone days.

The games commenced this afternoon with the entire seven sheets of ice in operation. The allocation of the various rinks will be found elsewhere in these columns.

At eight o'clock yesterday morning, a small body of men might have been seen wending their way towards the C. P. R. station. They were the Reception committee, consisting of the following gentlemen: Messrs. W. McIlroy, W. G. Ferguson, J. H. Ferguson, R. Waddell, D. Davidson, J. H. Connal and ex-Mayor Morrow, and were on their way to formally welcome the Scotch-Canadian curling team, sent out by the Royal Caledonian Curling Club of Edinburgh. The train conveying the visitors arrived in the city early in the morning and was placed on the siding, pending the arrival of the Reception committee. After the usual formalities attending the extending of the glad hand of hospitality to the visitors had been disposed of, they were invited to accompany the committee to the Hotel Oriental, where they will remain during their stay in the city.

The visiting curlers number thirty-one, including a spare man and two members of the team, Messrs. Blair and Riddall, who are accompanied by their wives. They are a robust-looking aggregation, and if their skillful manipulation of the "stanes" is on a par with their physical appearance, they are to be feared.

The majority of them are attired in the typical Scotch costume of heavy brown tweed coats with knickers and the familiar tam o' shanter. These with other incidentals, such as low shoes and distinctive colours in the form of tartan rosettes, badges or ties indicative of rink or clan, render the wearer easily distinguishable to the casual observer. Association with them is refreshing, and pleasing, inasmuch as it was not hard to conjure one's fancies into a mental vision of the Scotch braes, fanned by invigorating winds from the seas and carpeted by the sweet-scented heather.

Conspicuous among the party is Mr. Andrew Blair and Mr. A. C. Riddall. The former is the secretary-treasurer of the team and presents a commanding appearance by reason of his superb physical development. He is a native of Dumfermline, and is a member of the Aberfoyle and other clubs. He has long been a familiar figure at curling matches both in Scotland and at the international bonspiels in Swizzerland. Mr. A. C. Riddall is another widely known Scottish curler. He has been in Switzerland every year since the international bonspiel was instituted in 1905, and he assisted the Canadian rink which won the international bonspiel at Villars in 9109. Mr. James Telford is a native of Moffat, although resident in Newcastle. His rink on two occasions won the Scottish national championship, playing on the artificial ice at Ginsgow. Ex-Provost Gordon, of Bathgate, will be specially welcome in Canada, as the only member of the team who was also a member of the 1902 Scottish-Canadian team. He made many friends in the Dominion and was specially popular also with the Canadian-Scottish team who visited Scotland in 1909. All the others are well known as leading curlers capable of doing credit to Scotland on any ice. The high standard of the team may be understood when it is mentioned that of the 32 members eleven have represented Scotland at the Swiss international bonspiels, one of them, as already mentioned, every year.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS DODGED THE REPORTERS

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, N.Y., JAN. 22.—As their train arrived fifteen minutes ahead of time, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Patricia were able to escape the fifty newspaper men waiting to interview, sketch and photograph them; also a party of three hundred Canadians, who wanted to give them a reception. Every effort was made to send them to Ambassador Reid's residence without observation. The Duke, Duchess and Princess were each whirled away in a separate automobile. Col. Lowther, Military Secretary, is busy this morning trying to convince the New York newspapers that the Duke's visit is purely social. To-night there will be a big dinner and musicale. The last time the Duke was here, in 1870, there were rumours of a plot to assassinate him.

THREE KILLED IN BAD WRECK ON ROCK ISLAND

Examiner Special:

CHICAGO, ILL., JAN. 22.—J. T. Harahan, the former President of the Illinois Central Railway, F. O. Melcher, Secretary and Vice-President of the Rock Island Railroad, and two others, were killed in a wreck this morning at one o'clock, when their Pullman cars, standing on the road, were run into, telescoped, and split into thousands of pieces by an express coming behind, at fifty miles an hour. The engineer and fireman of the express engine were miraculously only slightly injured. The accident occurred near Centralia, an out-of-way place, which doctors and nurses did not reach till hours afterwards. The flagman of the President's train, who was sent back to flag the express, has not been seen since. Harahan was one of the best known of the late Harriman's proteges.

RENDERED HOMELESS

Sunday Morning Fire Destroys the Home of Mr. Alex. Chouinard in the South Ward

SEVERAL NARROW ESCAPES

A Sunday morning fire destroyed the home of Mr. Alex. Chouinard, Princess street, and threatened the lives of his wife and four children, who were asleep in their beds when the fire was discovered.

About 5 o'clock, Mr. Bert Cripps, a neighbour of the Chouinard family, arose to attend his sick wife, and upon glancing out of the window, discovered that the house next door was on fire. He promptly turned in an alarm by telephone and then set to work to rescue the inmates of the burning house. Bursting open the door, he groped his way to the bedroom where Mrs. Chouinard and her four children were sleeping, and after considerable effort, succeeded in arousing them to a sense of the danger which threatened them. He seized two of the little ones, and followed by Mrs. Chouinard, emerged into the wintry air. The remaining two children were rescued in a similar manner.

When the firemen arrived on the scene of the conflagration, the rear of the building, which was a brick structure, was a mass of flames, and it was only after a hard and strenuous fight that they were enabled to save the front part of the house from complete destruction.

The situation of the house being in the extreme south end of the city and a considerable distance from the nearest hydrant, made the fire very difficult to contend with. Shortly after the first streams were playing on the fire, the roof fell in with a crash, carrying with it a large quantity of debris and adding more fuel to the flames. Two hours later the fire was declared out, and to-day nothing but the blackened walls and partitions of the front portion of the house remain, as a monument to what might have been a terrible tragedy, had it not been for the presence of mind of Mr. Cripps in rescuing the occupants of the house when he did.

Mrs. Chouinard's husband, who is a lineman for the G.N.W., was out of town at the time, and it was several hours after the fire before he was apprised of the fact that he had been rendered homeless. The damage to the house will be in the neighbourhood of $700 and to the contents about $500. Very little insurance was carried on the building.

Mrs. A. R. Tabor, of Crider, Mo., had been troubled with sick headache for about five years, when she began taking Chamberlain's Tablets. She has taken two bottles of them and they have cured her. Sick headache is caused by disordered stomach for which these tablets are especially intended. Try them. Get well and stay well. Sold by all dealers.

CITIZENS COMPLAIN THAT GAS PLANT IS NUISANCE INVESTIGATION TO BE MADE

Matter Was Discussed by the Board of Health at its Meeting This Morning---Largely Signed Petition Read---Board Also Discusses the Garbage By-law.

The question of the alleged nuisance at the gas plant was again brought to the attention of the Board of Health this morning, by a letter from the City Solicitor. Mr. Hall, stating that the petition from the citizens which had been largely signed, and sent in on June 6th, 1911, had been overlooked by him, and he also inclosed information for the Board.

The petition which was sent in at that time, was signed by Mr. J. J. Lunny and complained of the nuisance caused by gas fumes, soot and smoke.

It was decided that the Medical Health Officer make an investigation into the matter and report back, and then the Board will interview the Company on the matter.

Referring to the matter in his letter, the City Solicitor stated that under certain sections of the Ontario Public Health Act providing that information of any nuisance or unsanitary conditions under the Act, within the jurisdiction of the local Board, may be given to the Board by the person aggrieved, and it is the duty of the Board to investigate; if it is found that the nuisance is prejudicial to health, and after notice has been served for its abatement, if it still continues, the local Board may apply to the Provincial Board with the approval of the Minister of the Department.

Mr. Hall further stated that the gas fumes were very dangerous, this fact having been proved in several of the States, where numerous deaths were recorded due to gas poisoning. Water gas, that which he believed they manufactured here, was even a more dangerous kind, and he did not hesitate to say, from the reports he had received from other places, that the gas fumes were very dangerous, as well as a general menace.

The Mayor thought that the matter should be taken up with the company at once, before they go on with any more extensions to their plants, and save them the useless expenditure of a lot of money. He thought that it should be put before the Ontario Board of Health and have their opinion on what should be done in the matter, and then acting on their report, they could lay the matter before the company and all concerned would know where they were at.

Dr. McPherson stated that the matter should be investigated first and a report made back to the Board.

It was then moved that Dr. McPherson make an investigation into the matter and report back at the earliest possible date.

Meet in Afternoon.

The Board will meet at 4 o'clock p.m. on the first Tuesday in every month in future instead of 9.30 in the morning as hitherto. This was decided on this morning at the meeting of the Board. The medical men objected to the early hour, and no other hour in the morning would suit them, so it was changed until four in the afternoon.

A communication was received from Mr. Denham of the Quaker Oats Co., requesting that the Board investigate the nuisance of a cess pool north of Hunter street and near the company's buildings. The matter was left with the Medical Health Officer and a report will be made by him at the next meeting.

Dr. McPherson brought to the attention of the Board the advisability of some of the members becoming a member of the Canadian Public Health Association. On motion of Mr. Neil, seconded by Dr. Burnham, Dr. McPherson, M.H.O., will become a member of the Association at the expense of the Board.

A number of accounts were ordered to be paid.

Garbage By-Law.

The question of a garbage system for the city was brought up and discussed out. Some of those present suggested that certain districts be outlined, while others were of the opinion that the whole corporation should be embodied. This struck the MONTREAL, JAN. 22.—"That the situation in Ireland is not all exaggerated," is the statement to-day of Sir Edward Clouston, President of the Bank of Montreal, who has returned from an extensive visit to the Old Country. The leadership of the Conservatives and Unionists, by Bonar Law, a Canadian, has developed an energy and appetite for a fight, which will extend from West Minster to the Highlands of the North of Ireland. On the other hand the Liberal Government is not inclined to permit mob law in Belfast, or other parts.

MEDICAL HEALTH OFFICER'S REPORT

The Board of Health had a very busy session this morning, when a number of very important matters were dealt with. There were present, Dr. Young, chairman; Dr. Burnham, Dr. McPherson, M.H.O., R. Neil, Mayor Bradburn, Ald. Kerneghan and Mr. Murty.

Dr. McPherson presented his health report for 1911 and it was adopted on motion of Dr. Burnham, seconded by R. Neil. The report read as follows:

Jan. 1st, 1912.

To the Chairman and Members of the Peterborough Board of Health—

Gentlemen,—I beg leave to present the health report for the year 1911.

It is with pleasure that we can look back and note some progress that has been made. At the same time we see many things that have been left undone, but which should receive attention in the near future if we wish to live under conditions most conducive to health.

One of the most important steps in the health work was the establishment of an Isolation Hospital, and it is encouraging to note that the citizens appreciate the advantages to be had from it. This is evidenced by the fact that nearly all the cases reported since the hospital was opened, were sent in for treatment. The part the hospital plays in checking the spread of the disease is plain; since its opening no subsequent case occurred after the removal of the patient, and the number of cases reported has diminished.

I am glad to report the absence of any epidemic of a severe nature. Early in the year, German measles, chicken pox, and whooping cough were prevalent. These have to a great extent disappeared. Below is found a record of the cases reported, showing that there were but few cases of typhoid during the year. These were all investigated and the source of the infection was found to be either from outside the city or from a contaminated well.

	No. R'pt	Treated At Home	In Hos.	Dths
Scarlet	40	16	33	0
Diphtheria	19	6	4	0
Smallpox	5	1	4	0
Typhoid	10	2	8	0
Tuberculosis	0	?	?	33

It may not be out of place to mention here that the Council are to put up a small building that will be used for smallpox. It will be sufficiently large to accommodate one or two patients and to store the supplies that have been used in this connection. This will make it more comfortable for the patient, more economical for the ratepayers and less difficult in the handling of suspects and infected persons.

Another feature of the year's work that is worthy of special mention is the formation of a health society for Peterborough. Of its aims you are well aware, and I know that you will give it the active support that its importance demands.

The sanitary work has made some progress but there is still opportunity for a great deal of improvement. Our responsibility does not end when we make a hasty examination of the lanes and back yards and see that the winter's refuse has been disposed of. The sanitary conditions inside and outside the house, public or private, the water supply, the disinfection of infected houses, the inspection of all food supplies and of the premises where they are prepared, or offered for sale, all come under the duties of the Sanitary Officer.

In the city there are a great many wells, some of which are so situated or so constructed that surface water continually contaminates them and in the majority of cases they are not cleaned out yearly as required by law. The privy pits, manure heaps, pig pens, etc., within the more thickly settled parts of the town are a source of much annoyance to the neighbours and a menace to health. If these are to be permitted to remain, there should be a much more rigid inspection than at the present time. During the year a number of complaints were made about the condition of food offered for sale on the market. This brings up the question of inspection of any and all kinds of meat offered for sale within the city, and further, the inspection of hotels, restaurants, confectionery stores, bake shops, butcher shops, fruit stores, and all stores where food is prepared or offered for sale.

During the past two years, the sanitary work has been done by the police. Experience has shown that this is very unsatisfactory. This year the whole city was covered in six weeks, and about 800 notices to clean up, were left where unsanitary conditions were found. Then, through the absence of members from the force, it was impossible to follow up the work. Thus our inspection loses its efficiency.

During the year, two communications were sent to the Council recommending two by-laws, one to regulate the production and sale of milk and the other to provide for the regular collection of garbage within certain areas of the city. Both were considered, but it was so late in the summer, when sufficient information was obtained about the garbage systems in other places, that it was thought advisable to leave it over until the next year. However, a milk by-law was framed and passed and now awaits the assent of the Provincial authorities before going into force.

In conclusion, I would like to make some suggestions for your consideration—

1. To provide for the inspection of all meats offered for sale in the city.
2. The inspection of butcher shops, bakeries, confectionery stores, restaurants, hotels, fruit stores, and all places where food is prepared or offered for sale.
3. The prohibiting the exposure of foods to the dust and flies.
4. The disinfecting of all houses vacated by one suffering from tuberculosis.
5. The extension of the area of compulsory sewer connection.
6. The prevention of building of privy pits without the consent of the M.H.O.

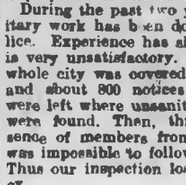
Yours respectfully,
A. W. McPHERSON,
Medical Health Officer.

Husband's Hair

How About It Madam, Is It Falling Out or Growing Thin?

Don't Lose It

Most husbands are careless regarding their hair—many are skeptical regarding hair tonics, restorers and the like.



It is only when their hair comes out in combs full that they really sit up and take notice.

If your husband's hair is falling; if he has dandruff or scalp itch, don't let it make a baldhead of him, get a 50-cent bottle of PARISIAN SAGE today, rub it on his hair every night until dandruff goes, hair stops falling and the new growth appears. Then use it every other night until the hair is thick and abundant. PARISIAN SAGE is a delightful, refreshing hair dressing for men, women and children. It will do as advertised, or your money back. Girl with Auburn hair on every carton and bottle. Sold by Wm. Madill and dealers everywhere.

CITIZENS COMPLAIN

Mayor as being a little too extensive, as the outlying districts are somewhat scattered and some houses are in the centre of large lots on the outside districts. Dr. McPherson offered that no boundaries be mentioned, but that the matter be put through, and the boundaries be defined later.

It was then suggested that the Council be requested to see that a garbage by-law be enforced in districts which they wish to embody.

Dr. Burnham moved that a garbage by-law be submitted to the Council with the recommendation of the Board to be enforced, the Council to decide what districts shall be embodied. This motion was seconded and carried.

The Medical Health Officer clearly outlined the necessity of a garbage by-law. He stated that last year the matter of sanitary inspecting was left with the police, and while they did their duty as far as was possible for them to do, yet it was not at all satisfactory, in so much as there was simply a cleaning up of back lanes and so forth, while the private residences should have been inspected.

ULSTERS POLITICAL AND RELIGIOUS IN RELATION TO HOME RULE

Truth and justice demand that the glaring fallacies underlying the Ulster Unionist arguments against home rule should be ruthlessly exposed. To speak of the northern Province as either Unionist or Protestant Ulster is a misnomer. What are the facts about Ulster?

The northern Province embraces thirty-three constituencies. Of these sixteen return Unionist representatives, while seventeen are held by Nationalists. Half of these were returned unopposed, so no correct comparison of the relative strength of the parties on the register can be made. In three contested divisions of the city of Belfast, out of a total registered vote of 31,342 the Unionists polled 16,111. In two contested divisions of Antrim, another stronghold of Unionism, the successful Unionist candidates polled only 8,829 electors out of an aggregate registered vote of 17,416. Ulster, therefore, is about evenly divided on the issue of home rule. Some of the divisions in Ulster have been continuously represented by Nationalists for over forty years. The Chairman of the forthcoming meeting in Belfast, at which Mr. Winston Churchill is to speak, will be Lord Pirrie, head of the world-famous shipbuilding firm of Harland & Wolff. In 1893 Lord Pirrie guaranteed fifty thousand dollars to fight home rule. To-day he is a convinced Nationalist.

Nor is Ulster, as some allege, overwhelmingly Protestant. Political divisions follow very closely the lines of religious cleavage. There is one important qualification: the active political Labour vote, mainly Protestant, is anti-Unionist. Antrim Down and Armagh are the Protestant and Unionist strongholds. Outside these the Roman Catholics are in a majority. Omitting the city of Belfast, where Roman Catholics number nearly one-third of the population, the figures for Ulster, according to the census of 1901, are: Roman Catholics, 699,202; Protestants, 627,674, showing a majority for the former of 71,528.

On its political side Unionism rests on the untenable assumption that under no circumstances must Ireland be governed in accordance with Irish ideas; that Ireland, in relation to her purely local affairs, must be satisfied to remain a permanent minority in the Imperial Parliament. On its religious side the charge of bigotry and intolerance against the Irish majority is not established by the facts. Monaghan county, for instance, which is Nationalist, has thirty-four Catholic officials and twenty-three Protestants. Antrim Council, which is predominatingly Unionist, allots only five positions to the Roman Catholics, while sixty go to the Protestants. In the city of Belfast less than a dozen Catholics fill salaried positions under the Council, against 437 Protestants. Out of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars paid in salaries, the small sum of four thousand dollars goes to Roman Catholic officials. Protestants have no reason to complain of the treatment meted out to them. Throughout the south and west of Ireland the prosperous merchants and shopkeepers are in the main, Protestant, evidencing the entire absence of bigotry among the Roman Catholic population in the everyday affairs of life.—Globe.

Death Of Well Known Citizen

Mr. Robert M. Roy Passed Away on Saturday Night

In the death of Mr. Robert Maitland Roy, which occurred on Saturday evening shortly after ten o'clock at the family residence, 90 Hunter street, Peterborough lost one of its most well known and popular citizens.

The deceased gentleman, who was in his seventieth year, was born in Belleville, coming to Peterborough twenty-five years ago. At Belleville he was reputable on account of his prowess as an amateur yacht skipper and as an amateur photographer. On his coming to Peterborough, he occupied the position of stores inspector of the Midland division of the Grand Trunk Railway. During this time his diversions, namely, photography and sailing, maintained a place in his mind, and his love for sports formed a considerable asset in the development of his great popularity. At the expiration of some ten years, Mr. Roy left the railway and took up the business of photography as a profession, and was, at the time of his death, proprietor of the Roy Studio. He was a life-long member of the Peterborough Masonic Lodge and was once a member of Belleville Lodge, No. 81, I.O.O.F. He transferred his membership to Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, I.O.O.F., on his arrival here, and had been a valued member of the order up to the time of his death.

On January 30th, 1899, Bro. Roy, P.G., was presented by his lodge with a 'veterans' jewel' in appreciation of his long membership in the order. He had filled with a marked distinction and unusual ability, almost all the offices in the gift of his lodge, and had also served on all committees, whenever and wherever his services were required. An Anglican in religion, he was a constant attendant of St. John's church, where he will be greatly missed.

The deceased was universally known throughout Peterborough, and his demise will be greatly regretted. His enthusiasm in any matter pertaining to sport (commencing in the eighties, when he was one of the foremost old lake sailors in Belleville), was preserved until his death.

The late Mr. Roy always retained his love of the out-of-doors. He was passionately devoted to the water and his trim steam launch the Rob Roy was known in all parts of the Trent waterway, more particularly perhaps along the Otonabee river and on Rice Lake. He was keenly interested in all branches of amateur sport, and for the past six years, ever since its inception, in fact, he has been one of the officials in the Examiner road races. Before coming to Peterborough he was known at Lake Ontario points as an enthusiastic yachtsman, and was skipper on the sloop Gracie, which carried off a large number of trophies.

To the relatives the death of Mr. Roy was a severe shock, as his illness was but brief.

He is survived by a sorrowing wife, three sons and three daughters, namely, Robert Maitland Roy, manager of the Hamilton Bridge Co., Hamilton; Edmund John, manager of the Rock Drill Co., Napanee; Fred, at home; Mrs. Simmons of Montreal; Mrs. R. Denne, of Peterborough, and Gladys living at home. Two sisters also lament his passing in the persons of Mrs. May of Peterborough, and Mrs. Hanaford of Montreal.

The funeral will leave the family residence, 90 Hunter street, to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock, and proceed to the G. T. R. station, from whence the remains will be conveyed to Belleville for interment.

TIT-BITS

For over twelve months now a road made principally of leather has been in use at Handsworth, Birmingham, and shows practically no signs of wear. It is another example of the elimination of that commercial bugbear, "the waste product," for until some ingenious person hit up the idea of the leather road practically no use had been discovered for the leather waste from which it is made. The waste leather was shredded until it virtually became a pulp. It was then treated with bitumen and tar and laid in the usual way. The road is claimed to have many great advantages. It creates little or no dust, gives considerable wear, is resilient and silent, and gives a good grip for motor tyres and similar objects. It is a comfortable material for horses to tread on, and the heaviest vehicles that have so far passed over it have made no impression on it.—London Globe.

FEWER PROTESTANTS IN FRANCE.

According to an article in the Paris Revue, the number of Protestants in France is decreasing. They now number 700,000. The Lutherans, who numbered more than a quarter of a million in 1870, can now only boast of a membership of 80,000. The Calvinists are the most numerous sect left, numbering over half a million. But they are losing ground. At the same time the political influence of the French Protestants is out of all proportion to their numbers. This the writer attributes to their sturdy characters, to their superior system of education, and above all, to their great wealth. Their wealth has, however, tended to sap their exclusiveness. They now pay less sattention to their religion, and the result is, says the writer in the Revue, that Protestantism in France will in the near future be a thing of the past.—New York Evening Post.

GREAT IS LIFE

Representatives Hughes and Kinkead of New Jersey and Cravens of Arkansas, wits of the House, had just returned from the funeral of a colleague. They were discussing the pomp and publicity of a Congressional funeral.

"I do not want such a funeral, do you, 'Gene?" said Mr. Hughes to Mr. Kinkead.

"No, Billy, I do not care to be put away with so much display. What about you, Ben?" said Mr. Kinkead, turning to Mr. Cravens.

"I don't want any funeral," responded the Southerner, dryly.—Washington correspondence. New York World.

HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The Canadian Express Hustlers hereby challenge the Dominion Express team to a game of hockey, to be played on a date to be arranged. Secure information from the captain.

The West End Athletic Club hereby challenge the Belmont Club to a game of hockey for the club championship of the city. Only players not playing in the O.H.A. and Trent Valley League will be used by the W. E.A.C. and they would consider it a favour if the Belmonts would do likewise. To make it more interesting they would suggest an oyster supper for the winning team, same to be supplied by the losers. They would like to play some evening this week, and if the Belmonts look upon the challenge with favour they would be conferring a favour by accepting it immediately.

The Peterborough intermediate O. H. A. team will hold its final practice before the Trenton game tonight at Brock street rink at 7 o'clock. Every member is expected out sharp on time.

The only game of the week in Peterborough will be the contest between the old rivals, Trenton and Peterborough, who come together in an intermediate O.H.A. game at Brock street rink to-morrow night. The crowd will undoubtedly be the largest of the season, as the fans have been eagerly awaiting the coming of the Trenton team. Lawson Whitehead's aggregation will undoubtedly be formidable adversaries and the game should be well worth seeing. Peterborough's team will be the same as in the other games this season. The game is called for 8.15 o'clock.

The Bear Cats leave for Cobourg this evening at 7 o'clock, to play the decisive game in this district of the junior O.H.A. The local youngsters are in the best of shape and are determined to annex a win to-night. They will be accompanied by a big crowd of fans, as interest in this game is at fever heat among the hockey lovers of the city and the special train which leaves at 7 o'clock will carry a lusty-lunged band of blue and white-ribboned supporters to the Lake shore town. The Peterborough team will be as follows:

Goal—Dwyer.
Point—Milloy.
Cover—Denison.
Rover—Weir.
Centre—Hall.
Right wing—Kennedy.
Spares—Cook, M. Coughlin.

In the best game of the season so far in the Mercantile League, the Bell Telephone Company team defeated the Canadian General Machine Shop on Saturday night at Brock street rink by 2 goals to 1. The half time score was 1-1. Several hundred fans saw the battle and the rooting was something to be remembered, especially the brand handed out by the Telephone team's supporters. The Hello team had the better of the argument and would have won further away had it not been for the splendid goal-keeping of Joe Dwyer in the nets for the Machine Shop. Th Bear Cat goal guardian weeded out a number of likely shots, especially in the second half. Wettlauffer was the star for the Bell team. Fred Kelly refereed very satisfactorily.

Brass Department, 9 goals.
Meter L. Department, 1 goal.

The Metrelites think they have a real hockey team. They had no difficulty in beating the amateur bunch and, like Alexander the Great, they sighed for more worlds ot conquer as their windy challenge in a previous issue shows. In an evil momen their thoughts turned to the Brass Department and, after the usual negotiations, a match was fixed up fo last Saturday evening. So certain were they of victory that a poste was displayed, inviting all and sundry to come to see the Brass D partment slaughtered at Brock St. Rink, and a fair sprinkling of Metre Beauties responded to the call, but they faded away like a lovely dream after Captain Russell and company had banged six goals through. "H. 3" Hillier opened the scoring for the Brass Dep t after three minutes' play, an d "Knife Switch" Davidson, and Capt. Russell folowed "Dannys" good example. The Meter ites got going a time or two, but "H.3" checked well and "Speed Lathe" Prest stopped what "Danny's missed, so "Stag" Barnett wasn't bothered, much. "Brush Holder" Sanderson did some pretty runs down the left wing, and had distinctly hard lines in not scoring more than he did, but his centres were well timed, and contributed largely to the success of the Brass Dept. Capt. Russell was well watched but all the same he managed to score four of the goals, and "Benny" Clute who didn't play a very graceful game was as useful a man as the best. "Paddy" was the pick of the Metre Dept., with Bonner and Laplante good seconds. The scores were as follows. Hellier, 1; Russell, 4; Davidson, 2; Sanderson, 1; Clute, 1. Metre, B. Parks, 1.

The following was the line-up:

Brass Dept. — "Stag" Barnett, "Speed-Lathe" Prest, "H.3' Hellier, B. Clute, "Brush Holder" Sanderson, "Knife-Switch' Davidson, and "Speedometre" Russell.

Metre Dept. — Williams, Bonner, Cook, Parks, Laplante, Ferguson, Bennett.

Whn the Metre Dept. boys have had a little more practise the Brass Dept. will play them again.—Com.

(Lindsay Warder)

Owing to the Belleville Intermediates defaulting their games to Lindsay, there will be no schedule game in this town until the last week in January. In the meantime it is very necessary that the intermediates get out nightly and keep up their practice, for practise counts in the hockey games. Or in other words condition counts.

The management would do well to arrange for an exhibition game next week and the Warder would suggest that the Orillia Juniors or Eaton's, of Toronto, or some other fast team be invited to play here. The game would no doubt draw a larg gate and would keep the intermediates in trim

Peterborough and Trenton have yet to play, after which the Petes' visit Lindsay.

ARMS AND AMMUNITION TO PROTECT CHURCHILL

Special to The Examiner:

London, Jan. 22.—Daily telegraph Belfast correspondent says Nationalists will turn out in thousands armed with firearms and ammunition to protect Churchill and Redmond, while Orangemen and Unionist sympathizers will parade streets with pockets full of iron bolts and stones ready for any emergency. It is not improbable that troops will be sent to Belfast on some pretext before the date of meeting February 8th.

Between Two Fires

Special to The Examiner

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—Premier Borden is an unwilling victim of a strong cross current in his own party these days and is being pulled hither and thither by two of its wings, which are fighting, silently but nevertheless fiercely, over the question of what is to be done about the ne temere decree. There is on the Conservative side of the House a strong block of Protestant members headed by Ontario representatives, who demand that the government dispose at once of the decree by passing legislation which will render it nugatory whether in the form of a bill, creating civil marriage or in some other form. The Quebec wing of the Conservatives points out that any such legislation means the ruin of party in Quebec and that any attempt of introducing it will be the signal for wholesale defection from the Conservative ranks, as was the case in 1896. The advantage in the situation lies wholly with the opposition, which has every confidence in the ability of their leader to follow the best course in this very difficult matter.

COATED TONGUE HEADACHE DIZZY SPELLS

Your overworked stomach is on strike. It refuses to secrete pepsin enough to act upon the food. Refuses also to secrete acid enough to enable the peptic secretion to do its work.

What's the result?—dyspepsia, headache, sick all over.

Give to the stomach the assistance it requires—or in other words try Dr Hamilton's Pills, which cure more weak stomachs than any other medicine you know of.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills put the kind of life into a weak stomach that enables it to digest and assimilate all kinds of food.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills

Cured Mr. William Martin, a Well-Known Lumberman in Parry Sound.

"I consider that Dr Hamilton's Pills make the best all round medicine. My stomach got disordered and all kinds of complications set in. My blood grew thin, my color got pale, and I had the worst kind of headaches. The food I ate all disagreed with me and I was constantly bilious and suffering from acute dyspepsia. A wonderful change took place when I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they gave me appetite and strong digestion. I had no more bad dreams, no sick stomach or headache. I was in fact like a new man, and will always recommend and use Dr. Hamilton's Pills."

Dr Hamilton's Pills are sure to benefit at once. Try them. 25c per box, at all dealers, and insist on having only Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. In yellow boxes only.

Baring—July cotton sold off again to-day, thus proving the wisdom of Thursday night's warning not to keep buying on the way up and only to buy on weak spots as indicated by me. After telling you to take profits the other day around 9.90, I stated that it should react to .90.60 and possibly to 0.50 and buy some at 9.60, with a view of buying more if it went down as far as 9.40. As I distinctly intimated that it might react as far as 9.50 this reaction should not dismay you. Would buy a little more at 9.51, if it gets that far.

May wheat might be sold above 101, as I think it is sure to go at least 96 before going much higher. May corn ought to prove a sale around 67.

The stock market continues to be a trading affair with strength in specialties as heretofore. It is rumoured that something very unfavourable is going to develop this week which should cause a break in the market. This might explain the strength in Reading, which is probably used to cover selling in other quarters.

U. P. rallied to 169 1-8 and if it is going to have the decline which I am led to belive is impending, it should not rally as far as 170. The selling, after it touched 169 1-8, seemed to be rather good. Of course, you ought to be short above 175 and in that case I would stop shorts at 170, so as to make sure of a good profit anyway. If not already short, would sell it around 168 3-4, with a stop at 170, thus risking about 1 1-2 points with the chance of making about 15 points.

Rdg. showed the wisdom of my advice not to carry shorts much above 155. I said last night that it could easily run up 4 or 5 points more and it might go considerably higher still. Would buy it at 157 with a stop at 156 1-2 or if it opens higher and then reacts to 156, would buy at 156 with a stop at 157 1-2. Then if it should run up very sharply to about one Pm profits might be taken.

Fin. Bulletin, Sun opinions— The character of the market is distinctly encouraging in that it apparently testifies that stocks are in scant supply.

World—The explanation of the rise is that financiers waited until sure that securities in the Equitable fire were safe.

Personally, I have found from experience that it is as a rule, a mistake to get optimistic on stocks about this time of the year, in fact, steel, especially looks as if it wants to go down.

Goss, Chicago.—The wheat market is full of cautious bulls. They generally believe that prices ought to rule higher, but it is conceded that the market is not likely to move farther away from he one dollar mark, for May unil conditions change.

None of the local professionals are playing the market with any vigour because of the light outside trade, and a scalping position is advocated by the majority of professionals, and commission houses.

The profit taking on the whole, this morning, has been well taken, and the market shows a disposition to harden.

For And About Women

ROMANCE IN RUGS.

The little cottage Oriental rugs often made by girls who are shortly to be married, in Turkey, Persia, on the Armenian plateau and in Afghanistan, carry with them all the poetry and mysticism of the Oriental girl's mind, as she is just budding into womanhood.

She weaves into the rugs almost her very thoughts—so much is rug-weaving a part of the Oriental life, and so little is it a purely commercial pursuit. Time is not counted of value if the East when rugs are made. Consequently, Americans have found it impossible to compete with the Orientals in the manufacture of these practically everlasting products.

In some parts of the Oriental-rug countries, it is considered wrong to have the rugs seen in the making by Christians. If such an accident occurs, and one from the western world views one of the rugs, the workman off-sets the suspected injury by weaving a small white spot in the rug, to keep away the "evil eye."

Sometimes, when the rug is not made for sale, but as the dowry of some girl at the time of her marriage, and when something inauspicious had happened, a little break is left in the border of the rug, by which it is hoped that the devil may escape from the household. Were the border continuous, the Orientals believe that the devil would run around and around the rug, and never leave the house.—Suburban Life.

DAMP SALT BEFORE RAIN.

Very few persons know that when the salt gets damp it is either because it is too near the sea or because it is going to rain. It is very hard to keep the salt cellar dry at the seashore, as there is so much moisture in the air all the time; but in other places it is usually a sign of rain when the salt gets damp.

Things that help themselves to the water in the air are called "deliquescent," and salt is one of them. When water is in the air in the form of gas it sometimes becomes too plentiful for the air to hold, and then we get what is called "precipitation" or rain. But long before the water vapor in the air is heavy enough to fall in rain there is enough of it to spare to make salt damp.—New York Sun.

WAS TROUBLED WITH Headache AND Constipation.

After Suffering For Two Years Was Cured By BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

Headache of whatever nature is nearly always symptomatic of other diseased conditions, rather than a disease itself, but in most cases a disordered stomach, constipation, or bad circulation is the chief source of the difficulty. Burdock Blood Bitters removes the cause of the trouble through its cleansing, strengthening and tonic action on the stomach, liver, bowels and blood. Mr. Wm. Redmond, Cardigan Bridge, P. E. I., writes:—"I have been troubled with headache and constipation for about two years. After trying every doctor I knew, a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I found myself, after using one bottle, getting much better, and after using three bottles I was completely cured.

"After then I was on a visit, and found my cousin very sick, and the doctor told her there was something wrong with her head. I told her to use Burdock Blood Bitters and she was cured in a short time. I can safely recommend it to all."

The world's lookin' old
An' the heavens are gray,
An' the hills are all white,
An' the mornin's are chill,
An' the trees in the night
Stand up starkly and still.

An' there's frost on the panes,
An' the rivers are froze,
An' the creeks are in chains,
An' the little boys' toes
Is as cold as can be,
An' their noses are blue,
An' the winds holler, "Whee-ee"
In the night-time, they do.

An' they rassle an' run,
Muffled up to their eyes;
It is somethin' below,
An' the mercury tries
For to go away down
To the bottom an' stay;
It is cold in the town,
An' the country is gray.

In the South there's a rose
By the side of each door,
An' the violet grows
'Neath the leaves, an' the more
The canna blooms fall
The more come in bloom;
An' the mockin bird's call,
An' the winds waft perfume.

An' the children are glad
An' they rassle an' run,
An' they go lightly clad
An' they bask in the sun:
From the North the wet sleet
Comes a-burryin' south,
An' turns warm an' as sweet
As a kiss on the mouth.

The hills are all white
In the North, an' the plains
Lie bleak in the night.
An' there's frost on the panes;
But the South takes the storm
That the North sends along,
And its clasp becomes warm
And its shriek is a song.

CAUSE OF MORAL BREAKDOWN

Many a working girl at the end of a day is so hysterical and overwrought that her mental balance is plainly disturbed, says a writer in McClure's Magazine. Hundreds of working girls go directly to bed as soon as they have eaten their suppers. They are too tired to go from home for recreation, too tired to read, and often too tired to sleep. A humane forewoman recently said to me, as she glanced down the long room in which hundreds of young women, many of them with their shoes beside them, were standing: "I hate to think of all the aching feet on this floor. These girls all have trouble with their feet; some of them spend the entire evening bathing them in hot water." But aching feet are no more usual than aching backs and aching heads. The study of industrial diseases has only this year been begun by the Federal authorities, and doubtless, as more is known of the nervous and mental effect of over-fatigue, many moral breakdowns will be traced to this source.

Only slowly are laws being enacted to limit the hours of working women; yet the able brief presented to the United States Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the Oregon Ten-Hour law for women based its plea upon the results of overwork as affecting women's health, the grave medical statements constantly broken into by a portrayal of the disastrous effects of over-fatigue upon character. It is as yet difficult to distinguish between the results of long hours and the results of overstrain. Certainly the constant sense of haste is one of the most nerve-racking and exhausting tests to which the human system can be subjected. Those girls in the sewing industry whose mothers thread needles for them far into the night that they may sew without a moment's interruption during the next day; those girls who pack and seal 4,320 boxes of candy a day, not even taking a drink of water unless it is brought to them, because they can lose no time when they are paid at the rate of three-fourths of a cent a dozen boxes, are striking victims of the over-speeding which is so characteristic of our entire factory system.

SEEN AND HEARD

SORE AGAINST UNCLE SAM.

Out in Kansas lives a citizen who has a grouch against his Uncle Sam, and the evidence of that grouch is now reposing in the files of Postmaster General Hitchcock.

The citizen, who carries mail on a rural route, came into collision with a Kansas cyclone, which blew him so far out of his way that he was late on the schedule. For this he was fined by the inexorable rules of the department. Indignant, he wrote to the Postmaster General:

"My great grandfather fought in the Revolutionary," he said, "my grandfather in the Mexican War and my father in the Civil War. I myself fought in the Spanish War and fought a darned sight harder for the title of private than most of those New York dudes that got to be colonels. If after all my family have done this government chooses to treat me this way, the sooner it falls like corrupt Rome the better."—Washington correspondence, New York World.

NEW IN THE BUSINESS.

Elliott Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol, told a story about a new Southern member of the House whose frugality he is commending to his Congressional friends.

The new member arrived in town and hunted Superintendent Woods up immediately.

"I reckon I'd like to look at my quarters," said he to the Superintendent.

He was taken to the House office building and shown to one of the substantially furnished office rooms.

"This is fine," said the new member, "but where are my other rooms?"

"Oh, you can't have another room for several years, not until you have become chairman of a committee," replied Woods.

"My God!" exclaimed the Southerner, "how do you expect me to sleep, cook, eat and work in one room?"—Washington correspondence, New York World.

PROBABLY NOT?

It was at a suffragette meeting. A woman was speaking bitterly of the many rights and privileges which the men enjoyed but which were so unjustly denied to the women.

"Say," broke in a male hearer, tauntingly, in a small, high-pitched voice that sounded well in proportion to his physical make-up, "wouldn't you like to be a man?"

"Yes," replied the woman, "wouldn't you?"—Harper's Monthly Magazine.

A DAMPENER

A Washington politician not long since attended a banquet given by physicians in connection with a medical conference.

This banquet was a jolly affair. Many toasts were drunk. One proposed the health of "the ladies," another of "the president," and so on through a long list.

Finally, when the glasses had been filled and emptied a number of times the toastmaster glanced at the politician. "Our genial friend," said he, "has not yet been heard from. Mr. Blank, will you propose a toast?"

Whereupon the politician arose and smiled at the doctors assembled around him. "I propose," said he, "the health of the sick."—Providence Journal.

EDUCATIONAL SERMONS AT CHARLOTTE ST. CHURCH

Rev. Geo. I. Campbell, of Montreal, Delivered Two Impressive Addresses Yesterday.

LARGE CONGREGATIONS

The congregation of Charlotte St. Methodist Church had with them yesterday a distinguished visitor, in the person of the Rev. G. I. Campbell of Montreal, who preached at both morning and evening services. The Rev. Mr. Campbell is said to be one of Montreal's most eloquent orators, and he fully justified his reputation yesterday, when he delivered sermons to a large and attentive congregation.

The music was of a very high standard of merit. Miss Pearl Brock, the new contralto soloist, was heard to great advantage in the anthem. She possesses a deep, rich voice, which is controlled by admirable breathing powers. Miss Pringle also rendered a solo in a very attractive manner.

By way of introduction the preacher outlined the work of education, and said:

"The contributions we get are not the contributions we give to young men who go in for the ministry. A man once said to me: 'If I want to send my son to College, I have to pay for it.' I was disappointed at this, for evidently I had failed to make things clear in the address which I had just delivered. Our contributions, as you well know, go toward the upkeep of the eleven colleges, which are the education of the Church, for the income of any college is not sufficient to pay all expenses, and the number of students that attend our colleges have greatly increased. Part of our contributions also go toward the summer work for our students. Last year two students were set apart and put under my jurisdiction. I put these two students in different parts of the city, and they found seventy-eight Methodist families not connected; so they are doing the work that will form a new congregation. If we fail in the College in the production of men, we shall fail everywhere, and if we succeed in the College, we shall be successful in any work we undertake.

The text chosen for the sermon was the 1st verse of the 21st Chapter of the Revelation of St. John: "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth". The Bible gives us three views of God's world, for this is God's world; every inch of it belongs to Him, and the sooner we get faith that everything in this world belongs to God, the better for us.

The first view is the world as it was in the beginning. We are told in the first Chapter of Genesis, that God made the world and beheld it was good. I do not know what is good to God, but I know that everything that is pronounced good by God must be absolutely perfect.

The Bible gives us another view of God's world, and this is God's world as it is to-day. Truly the Bible is a faithful book. It covers no man's sins; it makes no apology for man's mistakes, or follies; it plainly and clearly declares the state of things as they are. If man wants to know about the world he has only to read from Genesis to Revelation and he will have before him a very good view of God's world as it is to-day. It is sin that has defaced this world of ours that has struck at the harmony of life.

And then that Book gives us another picture—the world as we read of it in the Revelation of St. John, the Divine. Here was a man whose ambition it was to sit at the side of our Lord; yet he is a prisoner on the Island of Patmos. On that island he saw a great vision. He pictures to himself the progress and the success of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He sees the nations beyond as they are touched by this Gospel until the whole wide world is worshipping God. He pictures it and says:

"And there shall be no more sin there, and there shall be no more pain and no more sorrow, and no more death for all these things are passed away".

In the picture of St. John the Divine, we see there is no more pain and no more death. It is surely an ideal world.

And so, to-night, as Christian men and women, we preach the Gospel, and we believe the Gospel because we believe in its power and we appeal for men and women to enter into covenant with Jesus Christ.

I thank God to-night that I was never born a pessimist. I thank God that by nature I was born an optimist. After all I have the greatest respect for a pessimist. I met a man once who said that religion was being taken up by the great maelstrom of the business world. Even your officials are worldly men, he said. Really there are few Christians to-day. I believe that kind of a man will do a great deal of good in this world, although he is usually characterized as an obstructionist. You know there are two kinds of men in the world: One representing the Laurel and the other, the Cypress. The man of he Laurel, looks upon things as glorious, but the man of Cypress is like Thomas, who said: "Unless I put my fingers into the print of the nails and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe". The Cypress man is a valuable man in the world, because he causes us to examine the conditions to see if he is absolutely correct.

TAKE TOO BIG CHANCES

Why is it that men and women will never learn that overwork and nervous strain will certainly ruin health. Every day the papers tell of the dreadful results of overtaxing one's strength, yet the others keep right on without profiting by the lesson.

Henry Jacobs of Ninth avenue, N. Y., went through this experience and now writes in a letter: "I was in bad health for two years, very nervous and weak, no appetite, could not sleep well and had no ambition or energy. I was getting worse all the time.

"But since I began taking Vinol there is a wonderful difference. I have gained 14 pounds in less than two months, have a splendid appetite and can enjoy my meals. My nerves are strong and I sleep soundly. I simply feel fine now, which shows what Vinol did for me."

Our delicious cod liver and iron remedy, Vinol, will do as much for all other run-down, worn-out people, if they will only give it a chance. There is no risk for we give back the money if Vinol fails to satisfy you. CHORAL SOCIETY TO BE FORMED IN PETERBORO'

A meeting has been arranged with the object of forming a Choral Society in connection with the St. George's Society of Englishmen.

All ladies and gentlemen interested in singing are invited to be present. It has long been felt that there was ample scope for such a society in Peterborough, particularly among the English people coming from the Old Country. Some attach themselves to different church choirs in the city, and some never do so, but mostly all of them were connected with some choral society in the old land, and no doubt will welcome the organizing of such a society in Peterborough. The meeting will be held in Coleman's parlours at 8.00 p.m. Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1912.

LARGE CONGREGATIONS ATTEND ANNIVERSARY SERVICES AT GEORGE STREET CHURCH YESTERDAY

Rev. I. Couch Preached a Very Inspiring Sermon on "Spiritual Life" in the Morning, and the Subject for the Evening Service Was "Helping the Weak."

Two very large congregations crowded George Street Church yesterday to attend the celebration of the anniversary of the church. Rev. I. Couch preached at both morning and evening services, and his message was one of deep inspiration and encouragement to those who were fortunate enough to be present. Mr. Couch did not find it necessary to allude to the marked advancement of the church in the last few years; this was conspicuously evidenced. People were getting more enthused with the religious atmosphere and general progress of the cause. Mr. Couch, in his splendid sermon, alluding to the growth of the church, remarked that it was not the great numbers in a congregation that might be considered as the advancement of the church, but a great spiritual revival and a realization of the Lord.

Rev. Mr. Couch chose as an appropriate text for the occasion, the first part of the 6th verse of the 85th Psalm: "Wilt Thou not revive us again?"

"As we look out on the world to-day, began the reverend speaker, we are led to believe that the religious situation is not satisfactory, and certainly the result of investigation in large centres, together with articles in our best periodicals and papers, would influence us to take this view of things, and so no matter what they should be, we are led to believe that they are not as they should be now.

We are suffering from the domination of the commercial spirit. This is one form of materialization for which we have the supreme issue of life, and we shut our eyes when we descend to the levels of materials. It seems there is a universal demand for a spiritual awakening and reviewing".

"Before going farther, it is necessary for me to define "revival". It has been associated with insane manifestations of enthusiasm and emotions, that to the popular and thoughtful mind, has degraded the word, for that which has not a path for the reality, no matter the emotion, will not be lasting. We speak of that being revived, which was nearly dead and brought back to full vitality, and in spiritual revival, as that which was spiritually dead, and which was morally revived.

There is a way we can test spiritual revival. The spiritual man is always moral, but the immoral man is never a spiritual man, even if there is emotion and enthusiasm; therefore, what we mean by a spiritual revival is that which can prove to be responsive to spiritual motives and ideals. Revival need not necessarily mean the filling of the church. No, the old ship sails more smoothly when all the Jonahs are out; no, it means something that will bring us on our knees before God to-day".

"What is a revival? That which gives us a new realization of God, for that means a deep conviction akin to sight. The devil may believe but does not realize. I believe in the planet Jupiter, but it has no relation to my life. I may believe in God, and yet be as foul as Satan. But when I realize God, he will dominate my actions and thought. When He does we will know he is always with us. That is a great thought. I hesitate to preach it, because I realize my own unworthiness and because I do not realize to the full what I would have you realize.

Thoughts and Difficulties.

When we think of the knowledge science has taught, that men, by searching for God, can never find him, yet we all would like to realize Him. When we do realize God, and when we feel that He is just as close to us, as we are to one another, then the place will be holy. "Do you think God was any nearer to Moses, in the desert, at the burning bush, than He is to the people of Peterborough, especially in the spring, when the trees and bushes are sprouting. Every place is holy to the people who realise God. You and I are weak and God condescends to our limitations, and gives us Sundays and seasons that we may be lifted up to the higher visions.

All duties are sacred. Why should we say the man in the large place is doing a great work for God, and the man in the small place an insignificant work? We should realize that all holy works are great, in the sight of God.

We are in a Conflict.

If we have this kind of revival, which means a new realization of God, all men are sacred. We, today, are in a conflict between classes, because we have forgotten that we all have only one God. It is simply humanity that causes class—a man's a man for a' that. In the humblest man in the world—the outcast—there is something of divinity. We doff our hats to Royalty, but we must remember that in the crossing sweeper there is something of the King of Heaven. The revival we want, is to realize that every place is holy where God is, and that every man is sacred. If we hate the children of God, how can we be friends of God? Let us associate with Jesus Christ, and practise the presence of God."

With a few other remarks, Rev. Mr. Couch concluded by predicting a change in the spiritual life of our country, which he believed was imminent, owing to the appearance of certain great religious works by famous authors in recent years, and the intense interest of the young people of the country, and lastly, the spirit of expectancy manifested in the press and periodicals. He said that if a man would realize God and live in His presence, he will grow more and more in the stature of Jesus Christ.

Special credit is due the choir for the splendid music they supplied for the occasion. A tenor solo: "A Dream of Paradise," by Mr. Wm. J. Miller, was a splendid addition to the musical part of the service. Mr. Gordon Wright also ably assisted the choir, taking part in the singing of the anthem, "Praise the Lord, Ye Heavens Adore Him".

Mr. H. B. Cowan On Subject Of Tax Reform An Interesting Discussion

In the absence of Mr. Jos. Fels, the multi-millionaire, of London, England, who was to have given an address last Friday evening to the Brotherhood of St. Paul's church on "Prevailing Systems of Taxation," Mr. H. B. Cowan, the President of the Brotherhood, offered to outline the method of taxation, first laid down by the late Henry George, and which is advocated by Mr. Fels. Mr. Cowan stated that Henry George laid down the principle that there are three essentials for life, land, air, and water. To give any person the right to own absolutely any of these is to give them the power of life and death over those who may desire to use them.

To illustrate the power conferred on owners of land by its ownership, Henry George instanced the case of an island in an ocean. As long as no one wanted to live on the island it had no value. Should ten people settle on it, and it could maintain five, it then had a value of life and death to at least five of the ten. Suppose, on the other hand, that it was a rich and productive island, capable of supporting thousands, the ten might divide it among themselves as they thought fit. Later, should one hundred people be shipwrecked the ten would have the right, according to our laws, to tell them that the land was their's, and that they would have to get off it. Should the one hundred reply that they had nowhere to go, the ten would have the right to retort that that was none of their business; they would have to get off just the same.

If, however, they preferred they could agree to allow the one hundred to remain on condition that they would work the land and give them half of all they produced. Were this bargain accepted it would mean that the ten men from that time on could live in idleness and thereafter grow wealthy ten times as quickly as any of the other one hundred.

Henry George intended that this power went with the ownership of land, and in proof of this contention, pointed out the conditions in Ireland, where the land had largely passed under the control of large estates, which had charged such excessive rentals the people have left Ireland by millions. The same conditions were responsible, he said, for the depopulation of Scotland, particularly in the rural districts.

Henry George contended that this value of land increased with the desire of people to use it, and that this increased value, amounting often to hundreds of thousands of dollars an acre in cities, went into the pockets of the people owning the land, although they are not responsible in any way for its increased value, this having been created by the community at large. Because of the high rentals charged in the cities for the use of land, and of the speculation in land, which leads to its being held out of use for expected increases in value, the cost of living in cities is enormously increased, industries are hampered and the burden thus created falls on the community at large, especially the working men.

According to Henry George, land only should be taxed, and, according to its value. This would throw vacant lands on the market, and, by taking off the taxes on improvements, such as buildings, would encourage industry, create work, and reduce the cost of living. In Vancouver, where this principle has been tried by the city it has been attended by phenomenal success, with the result that this form of taxation is spreading rapidly through the western provinces, one of which is planning to adopt legislation which will require municipalities to take all taxes off improvements, and place it on land values.

Mr. Cowan explained that the legislation recently passed by the British Parliament adopted a great part of the Henry George principle, by taking for the use of all the people one-fifth of the increase in the value of the land of Great Britain as it increases every few years. He said that the subject was such a broad one it was difficult to clearly explain its main principles, or even to outline them in the course of one address. Therefore, he hoped that what he had said would not prove misleading to those unfamiliar with the subject, and who might be hearing it explained for the first time. Mr. Cowan also regretted his inability to do the subject justice, especially as he had not known until a few hours before that he might be asked to speak on it.

LEFT FOR WEST INDIES

Messrs. R. T. and A. A. Goodfellow left this morning for an extended trip to the West Indies. If they enjoy the climate, as they expect they will, they may be away for some time. The former, a resident of Prince Albert, Sask., now a booming city of the West, was one of the earliest pioneers there. It was only a hamlet when he went there thirty-three years ago. It is now one of the largest and most prosperous cities of the West, situated on the north Saskatchewan River, and has a rapidly increasing population.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT
By Ruth Cameron

"A PITTSBURG clergyman has recently notified his flock that henceforth he is going to marry no couples who cannot give probable evidence of an annual income of at least two thousand dollars."

I quote that interesting item from a contemporary publication.

What do you think of it?

I'll tell you gladly what I think. I think it is one of the worst examples that I have yet seen of the foolish and harmful tendency prevalent just now—the tendency to advise young people to delay marriage until all material difficulties are smoothed away by plenty of money and material professions.

I wonder if that minister realizes that the average American wage is about $900.

I wonder if he realizes that 67 per cent. of American men do not get more than $1,000 a year.

What, pray, would he, do with these men and the women they would naturally take to wife?

Would he condemn them to eternal singleness and keep their women's arms eternally empty and hungry, because their lovers could not give "probable evidence of an annual income of at least two thousand dollars?"

I believe that the tremendously high standard of material possessions necessary as a preliminary to marriage, which we are encouraging our children to raise, is doing vastly more harm than good.

The idea is good enough if we didn't carry it to such ridiculous excess. Everyone knows that when the wolf is continually howling and scratching at the door, and even peering glumly in the windows, there isn't apt to be much billing and cooing going on inside the home.

But does it take two thousand a year to keep the wolf away from a young married couple's home?

Indeed it doesn't. Or, at any rate, shouldn't.

Nor—well, I started to say nor half that, but I suppose I ought not to be quite so definite. Circumstances alter cases, and whereas there are couples that might get along very comfortably on seven or eight hundred a year, there are others who require more than that. But I don't believe that any two people would starve on twelve hundred a year.

And anyhow, it seems to me that a reasonable amount saved up for a rainy day and good prospects of advancement, count for more than a large income to start with.

If all the harm that is done by long drawn out engagements and by the advanced age for marrying among men could be known, I think perhaps we should say less about having just so much to start with, and more about getting married at the time when nature wants men and women to marry.

What relation do you suppose the prolonging of bachelorhood to the age of thirty and thirty-five has with the social evil?

Of course, no one can know that exactly, but I'm sure of this—that if I had a son I'd rather see him marry at the age of twenty-two or three, on a thousand a year, than wait until he was thirty for two or three thousand.

Perhaps Mr. Pittsburg minister, you were misquoted in your sweeping exclusion of all folks who couldn't qualify in the two thousand class from the state of matrimony.

For the honour of your cloth, I hope so.

SCOTTISH CURLERS ATTEND KNOX CHURCH IN BODY

Rev. H. J. Keith Welcomes the Visitors to Peterborough ---His Address Was Forceful and Consistent With the Occasion---Many Local Curlers Present.

At the invitation of Rev. H. J. Keith, the visiting Scotch curlers attended the morning service at Knox church yesterday. Leaving the Oriental hotel at 10.30 sharp, the visitors, accompanied by a number of the local 'brithers' comprising in all about seventy, paraded in a body to the church. Arriving at their destination, the party filed into the church occupying the centre seats which had been specially reserved for them.

Rev. Mr. Keith during the course of the service, formally welcomed the visitors to Canada and to the city of Peterborough, and expressed the hope that their tour throughout Canada would be the means of cementing the bonds of friendship more firmly to the Mother Land. He culminated his remarks by wishing them a safe and pleasant trip throughout the remainder of their tour in Canada and to the United States, and bon voyage at its conclusion.

The 121st Psalm and the last verse, "The Lord shall preserve thy going out and coming in from this time forth, and even for ever more," formed the keynote of Rev. H. J. Keith's address.

"These words," said the speaker, "suggest a great theme for meditation, but a greater one for practical experience and purposes. Many doubt the truth of this assertion, which was made by the Psalmist." The speaker then dealt briefly with the life of the Psalmist ,as he went about the foothills of his native land seeking health. He described him as being an optimist and a nidealist, who knew where and how to seek health. We find the struggle ever constant to preserve amongourselves the position sought after by the Psalmist. King Gorge and Queen Mary will arrive home in a few days, and in St. Paul's Cathedra,l they will be the recipients of a national thanksgiving. Let us hope that at the conclusion of their journey, our Scottish friends will likewise arrive safely home, and that their friends in the home land will offer up thanks for His keeping power. God's keeping power is of the kind that goes down with us into every circumstance of life. No matter what the conditions, the persecutions or the sorrow may be. Jesus came that we might struggle, hopefully, in life, that through Him we might receive faith. Our lives are better for the consciousness of the keeping power of God. Yet, too many of us show an absence of confidence of this kind.

Two solos, rendered by Mrs. G. B. Hughes and Mr. W. McIlroy during the service, received very exceptional handling.

A WELL BRED STALLION

Mr. Jas. Northey Has Purchased "Golden Bloom"

Mr. Jas. Northey, Smith township, Peterborough county, has recently purchased from Mr. R. D. Dundas, Springville, Ont., the exceptionally well bred Clydesdale stallion, Golden Bloom. This splendid horse was bred by Mr. Wm. Hood, Chappelton, Kirkcudbright, Scotland. Few horses are better bred, according to present ideas, tracing as he does, through both his sire and dam to the invincible Baron's Pride. While his G dam, G.G. dam and G.G.G. dam, having the blood of the world famed Darnley, Prince of Wales and Lord Lyon, are scarcely less meritorious. Golden Bloom is a capital, thick horse, of fine proportions, up to a good size, and is well qualified to provide big, weighty draft horses, which are always in demand. Mr. Northey's neighbours are to be congratulated upon having in their midst such a horse, and it is hoped that his enterprise will be sufficiently appreciated to make the purchase a paying proposition.

When the Nerves Cry— Look to the Tea and Coffee

The cry may be in some one of many ways—Trembling, Sleepy in the day time (comes from stomach) Headache, Dyspepsia, Bowel Trouble, Heart Palpitation, and even Pains in various parts of the body originate in a disordered nervous system. Such a condition of the nerves may be produced from various causes. It is very often brought on by Tea and Coffee.

If you don't heed the cry (Nature's hint) you may be sure the trouble will get worse, and not better, until you either quit the cause, or you develop fixed organic disease that may carry you down.

It is the finest trade possible, to quit tea and coffee and observe the result.

Health is the most exquisite fun on earth.

It is easy to quit tea or coffee when you have choice, well-made a delicious hot beverage with a deep seal brown colour which changes to a rich golden brown when cream is added. Then you have the crisp "snappy" flavour all its own. The nerves are relieved of the old hurt of the poisonous "Caffeine" of tea and coffee and in its place you feed the system on the strong food elements in Postum which help to quickly rebuild the worn out and exhausted nerve and brain cells destroyed by tea and coffee.

POSTUM

These are facts. Prove them by 10 days' trial.

SCHOOL TEACHER And Coffee Drinking.

Many good people are loth to give up tea and coffee, even though they admit that they are doing them harm, because they fear that nothing else in the way of a hot beverage will satisfy them. A school teacher says: "I always enjoyed coffee for breakfast. The day seemed lost without it. But in time I began to experience bad results from its use." (Tea is just as injurious because it contains the same drug—caffeine—found in coffee.) "I grew very nervous and lost flesh and finally was prostrated by a complete nervous breakdown. Then I was compelled to abandon the use of coffee.

"I adopted Postum as my hot beverage at breakfast. Have been using it for more than two years. My health is restored and I am able to take an interest in life once more.

"My whole family, children and all, drink Postum, and we all thrive and keep healthy on it. It is to us a delightful drink, delicious and tempting, and with none of the harmful effects that usually followed the use of coffee. The choicest brands of Java and Mocha offered free, would not tempt us to quit the use of Postum."

NO MORE ICE-CUTTING IN LAKE, SAYS BOARD

No more ice cutting in the Little Lake. This was the decision at which they arrived, at the meeting of the Board of Health, this morning.

"I think decidedly it should not be cut there," was the statement of Dr. McPherson, when asked his opinion on the matter by one of the members of the Board. "I tested some of it, and it contained a lot of very poisonous material, and if any disease arises, the city will be responsible. The sewage at the Quaker Oats factory runs into it, the over-flow sewer and a number of private sewers drain into it, and it is certainly not a suitable place to cut ice".

A motion was passed to the effect that the ice in Little Lake is prohibited from being used for any purpose, either private or public, on the approval of the City Solicitor. The members of the Board were unanimous in this decision.

Dr. McPherson was given authority, to purchase a case of bottles for gathering samples of milk for testing.

PIPER ACCOMPANIES THE CURLERS

Pipe Major Ross on Hand to Supply National Music When Occasion Demands

Sunday was a quiet day for the visiting curlers who, after the morning service at Knox church, repaired to the Oriental. After dinner Mr. Dickson Davidson took a number of them for a sleigh drive to Lakefield, and Mr. R. Waddell took Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Riddall and Mrs. Andrew Blair for a drive around the city. A number of them also went up to the armouries in the afternoon, where a social hour was spent, while others of the party spent the day in quiet seclusion, resting up after the wearisome train journey which they had undergone the night before.

Pipe-Major William Ross, of Colonel Robertson-Aikman's regiment, who received special permission to accompany the team, and who was duly initiated as a curler so as to be eligible for attendance at all the gatherings of the team, was the cynosure of all eyes as he strolled about the rotunda of the hotel, garbed in the typical kilt of his native land. He will supply music of his country on every appropriate occasion. Colonel Robertson-Aikman, it may be added, is in command of a regiment, of which His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, is honorary colonel.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE ROSARY.

"The Rosary," that sterling and popular play, which has delighted so many patrons of the theatre, was given a most admirable interpretation at the Grand Opera House Saturday afternoon and evening, by the company, headed by Mr. John Meehan. Large audiences were present at both matinee and evening performances, the able presentation being greatly appreciated. Peculiar local interest was imparted to the performance, owing to the fact that a Peterborough boy, in the person of Mr. Dick Simons, had an important part in the cast, as did his wife, (Miss Mae Tipton) who made many friends during her visit here last summer. Mr. Simons admirably handled the comedy part of Skeesters, while Miss Tipton made a charming little colleen. They were enthusiastically received. Mr. Meehan, who is an old Lindsay boy, did some very finished acting, in the part of Father Kelly. The supporting cast was a capable one, and the whole production thoroughly adequate.

A WEAK HEART

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use feed the system with rich, red, vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to secure lasting benefits.

CONSERVATIVES SPLIT OVER THE NE TEMERE BILL

Mr. Borden Backs Down and Rides Two Horses on the Question—An Interesting Debate in House of Commons

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—After a final smashing speech by E. M. Macdonald, Pictou, in which he declared the Government's action was another instance of the way in which they were attempting to avoid responsibility on all embarrassing questions, the vote was taken at 2 o'clock this morning on Premier Borden's motion to indefinitely adjourn the debate on Mr. Lancaster's bill. The vote stood 67 to 61, a Government majority of 26. Despite their previous protestations, Captain Tom Wallace, Col. Hugh Clark, Mr. W. B. Northrup and Mr. J. H. Burnham responded to the crack of the party whip and voted with the Government to shelve the question.

VOTED WITH THE LIBERALS

The Conservatives who had the courage of their convictions and voted with the Liberals against the Government were Messrs. E. A. Lancaster, W. F. Maclean, Richard Blain, Edward Kidd and Dr. Edwards.

The Liberal vote went solidly against the Government proposal, Sir Wilfrid's vote being heartily cheered.

GOVERNMENT FOR DELAY

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—Premier Borden's reply to the demand of Mr. Lancaster, supported by an immense body of Protestant sentiment effectively used against Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the last campaign, for a Federal law removing all doubt as to the effect of the ne temere decree in annulling marriages under the civil law, is to take shelter behind the Privy Council. So far as the Government's action on the matter, now of such vital importance to the people of Canada, is concerned, the net effect will be to put off the settlement for several years. The attitude of the Government on Mr. Lancaster's embarrassing bill in reference to the ne temere decree is that the constitutionality of it must be referred to the Privy Council for decision. Meanwhile the whole question must remain in doubt.

A STIRRING DEBATE

The debate on the bill, led off by Mr. Lancaster in a forceful hour's address, took up practically the whole time of the Commons to-day. It was heard by crowded galleries and a large gathering of attentive members. The member for Lincoln argued that the bill was within the jurisdiction of Parliament, quoting precedent and law extensively in support of his thesis. He claimed that the country demanded an immediate removal of the doubt which now existed as to the legality of mixed marriages, and delays and subterfuges only aggravated the situation.

THE PREMIER'S POSITION

Premier Borden, in a brief but carefully-worded reply, practically adopted the ground taken by Sir Allen Aylesworth, that the point at issue was one exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures. He admitted that opinions as to the legal point involved differed among the members of the House and lawyers generally, and under the circumstances he announced that the Government's way out of the difficulty would be to submit a stated case to the courts to decide whether or ot the Federal Parliament had authority to step in and deal with the matter.

CONSERVATIVES BOLT

As Mr. Lancaster pointed out, this would involve a delay of at least three or four years, and there was no reason why the Government should not take the bold stand of passing the bill as it stood, leaving it to come into operation as soon as the courts decided it was intra vires. In this he was supported by Mr. Wallace, Col. Clark (Bruce), Messrs. W. F. Maclean, Northrup, and others of the Ontario Conservatives, who declined to follow the Government's lead, and objected to thus shelving the question.

On the Opposition side of the House the question was discussed dispassionately and without any apparent desire to make political capital, such as might perhaps hve been expected in view of the unjustifiable appeal to religious prejudice made by the Conservatives during the last election campaign.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER

Sir Wilfrid, in a brief and clear-cut summing up of the issue, noted that the ne temere decree had in effect been in force in Quebec for 300 years, and that it was primarily designed merely to prevent clandestine marriages. The only civil authority which the decree had, he said, was that which the civil courts might give, and this question was now being thrashed out before the courts in Montreal in a concrete case. A quicker and less confusing solution to the problem, he believed, would lie in carrying this case to the Privy Council for final decision than in taking to it the academic question as to whether or not Parliament had power to legislate in the circumstances. To dispose of the Lancaster bill simply by moving the indefinite adjournment of the debate, as was proposed by Premier Borden, was, the Liberal chief maintained, neither a proper nor a frank method of dealing with the question.

OTHER SPEAKERS

As Dr. Clark of Red Deer pointed out, the people of Ontario did not vote at the last election to have the whole question shelved, as was the practical effect of Mr. Borden's motion to adjourn the debate pending the decision of the Privy Council. The debate was continued by Hon. Messrs. White, Pelletier and others to an early hour this morning, while the members waited for a division on the Premier's motion.

MR. LANCASTER'S BILL

In moving the second reading of his bill, Mr. Lancaster declared that the unchallenged validity of marriage was so important to the national life of Canada that, no one else having acted in Parliament on the operation of the "ne temere" decree, he had done so. "We have," said he, "in the present state of affairs, an evil which requires an immediate and effectual remedy." The evil arose, not because the courts of Quebec had held the Church decree to be law—although he believed that such was not a sound legal pronouncement—but because a doubt had been cast upon the validity of certain marriages, "and it is the duty of Parliament to remove that doubt if we can." Such doubt would sap the national life of the country, and was of more serious moment than any trade or immigration policy. "Because," declared Mr. Lancaster, "of certain ecclesiastical decrees issued from a foreign country in respect to marriages in Canada it has been decided by certain judges in Quebec that marriage ceremonies solemnized regularly were not binding and the legitimacy of the children is called i nquestion." His bill was drawn to remedy that evil. He acted upon national grounds, not upon any religious considerations. He was ot prepared to go as far as The Orage Sentinel. "We are not an Italy yet," quoth Mr. Lancaster, "but if we do not apply some remedy we may get to be an Italy. I say, and I thank God that I can say it, that we are not in that condition yet, but if we do not take some action we are very liable to get into that condition."

FATHER COMEAU'S STATEMENT

Continuing, Mr. Lancaster read the statement of Rev. Father Comeau, a Roman Catholic priest at Winnipeg, as published in the Toronto press, and condemned it as "advocating a policy of polygamy, bigamy and conspiracy to commit both, and claim the proceedings right in the eyes of God and the Church." He called upon Parliament to repudiate the "false, stilly, unstatesmanlike and un-British doctrine of that gentleman."

The member for Lincoln charged that Sir Allen Aylesworth, late Minister of Justice, was to blame for the present situation. When questions were put to him in the House by Mr. Sexsmith and Col. Sam Hughes, "Sir Allen Aylesworth, with all respect I say it, trifled with the matter. As for Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he," said Mr. Lancaster, "was so busy smashing Confederation in favour of the United States that he had nothing but masterly inactivity for the serious situation that threatened to disrupt Confederation by clash of Provincial marriage laws as interpreted by the Judges."

"What is the view of the present Minister of Justice?" enquired Mr. Chisholm (Antigonish).

"He can speak for himself," retorted Mr. Lancaster. "That's what I'm doing. He may or may not agree with me. He may not know at this moment what his views are—"

"Hear, hear," put in Sir Wilfrid Laurier, amid a roar of Liberal laughter.

"The leader of the Opposition says 'Hear, hear,'" exclaimed Mr. Lancaster warmly, "but neither he nor the whole horde behind him——"

Speaker Sproule interposed. "Such an expression is not permissible in Parliament, and must be withdrawn," he decreed.

GENERATIONS TO COME

Mr. Lancaster withdrew. The Liberal party, he said, had such blind faith in its leaders that it would applaud anything they said or did. Continuing, he read from The Catholic Register of Jan. 18th an editorial which, he said, "sneers at the Anglicans for respecting the laws of the land." He was a Church of England man himself, and gloried in the fact that the Anglican Church bowed to Parliament. If Parliament did not take action generations to come would "curse the cowardice of 1912." He was not a bigot in anything, unless it were politics, and he was dealing with the situation on national grounds.

To Mr. Devlin he explained that he was seeking to override or annul article 127 of the civil code of the Province of Quebec insofar as it affected the validity of marriage on the ground of the religion of either of the contracting parties.

To Mr. McLean (P.E.I.) he said that the bill would not affect or supersede the divorce laws of the Maritime Provinces or British Columbia.

CONSTITUTIONALLY UNSOUND

In concluding after recess, Mr Lancaster argued that it was constitutionally unsound to have one law for Quebec and another for Ontario, one for Catholics and another for Protestants. Only by uniform Federal action could the spirit of Confederation be carried into effect. Under the British North America act, he argued, marriage and divorce were left specifically to the Federal Parliament, while the "solemnization of marriages," a matter terminating with the ceremony and not dealing with its effect, was delegated to the Provinces. He moved the second reading of his bill.

PREMIER BORDEN

Premier Borden rose in silence. He agreed with the importance of the subject under consideration. Everyone knew that under the laws of Canada the decrees of any church could not override the civil law. If the decrees of the church had any effect it must be by reason of the laws of the Province giving effect to them. Mr. Borden took as an illustration of the effect of Mr. Lancaster's bill a supposititious British Columbia case. "If," said the Premier, "in the Province of British Columbia a law were passed that a person of European descent and a Japanese or a Hindu should be married with certain formalities before a certain official, that marriage, if performed before some other official in contravention of the law of the Province, would be valid under this statute passed by the Parliament of Canada. That, as I understand, is the object and intention of the bill which my honorable friend has placed before the House."

"That is what I mean, so far as religion is concerned. It does not deal with differences of nationality. I am speaking only of religious differences," exclaimed Mr. Lancaster.

The Premier retorted that he was dealing with the constitutional aspect of the case. Mr. Lancaster's bill would confer just as full power to

THE HAPPY MEDIUM.

Dr. Clark, M.P., of Red Deer, Alberta, is not only one of the ablest debaters and keenest critics, but one of the cleverest speakers, in the House of Commons. But he has a bigshed bee in his bonnet, and being a man of convictions, the said bee is trotted out for an airing upon frequent occasions. In being a free-trader, as they have them in England, he may be as theoretically sound as he is undeniably honest; but he is "in wrong" in advocating free trade for Canada. The West, which Dr. Clark represents, may want a stiffer tariff, but neither can be fully gratified. Under present conditions in Canada, neither party can look for more than a compromise. We have too much capital and material interests feeding on the Canadian industrial pasture to afford to let down the bars entirely. We must summon our best live-and-let-live spirit and strive for the happy medium.

CONGRATULATE THE GLOBE.

The Toronto Globe is to be congratulated signalizing the, practically, three score and ten years of its existence, by enlargement of its permanent premises and improvement of its equipment and plant, that bring it, in these regards, as it easily is, in other ways, to the front rank of newspapers on this continent. The completion of these changes was marked on Saturday night, by a banquet that had a double significance. It was, at once a Globe "house-warming" and a celebration of the occasion of the President, Hon. Robert Jaffray, reaching his eightieth year. The Globe could well afford to celebrate the culmination for the present, of a continuous advance that has placed it in all respects in the foremost line of journalistic enterprise and achievement. And it was fitting that the President of the Company, who has been actively connected with this progress, for the space of a generation, should be specially honoured. He has especially been associated with providing the sinews of war, in this age, as necessary an element, in newspaper success, as gray matter. The Globe has been more than an example of business success. It has been a force and a factor in national development. It has stood for, and promoted the success of Liberal principles, upon which all real and enduring national progress depends—the prevalence of the popular will, and the guardianship of popular rights.

TRUE IMPERIALISM.

The action of Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, in providing for the arming of the Canadian militia with the Ross Rifle, is in line, not only with the spirit of true patriotism, but also of true imperialism. Self government, of the outlying units of the empire, and the largest independence of the management of their own domestic affairs, subject to the common bond, as expressed in the imperial spirit, are the potent factors in the binding up and consolidation of the empire. This is recognised, both in the church and state. The home government, recognizes that independence of individual political action on the part of the several great dependencies—for lack of a better word, which has not yet been coined, is the true way in which each of these can create a distinct national existence and develop a national spirit and national polity, best adapted to the several conditions. The wisdom of this policy that has been thus expressed, has been amply justified. The British spirit is further evidenced as contagious in character, by the fact that the English Church has adopted or yielded to it. The proposed revision and enrichment of the Anglican Book of Common Prayer by the Canadian branch of the church, is in the direction of making the latter organically independent, with such modification and forms of worship, as will adapt the church in Canada to Canadian conditions, and bring it in harmony with Canadian national aspirations and needs, while, as in the case of the state, retaining the common spirit and affiliation that finds in both the vitally strongest cohesion, and highest usefulness and influence, through unity in diversity—independent domestic action and individual responsibility working around, but always converging harmoniously to, a common centre.

The Ross Rifle is Canadian through and through. This fact, however, from its being the best military arm in existence, would not justify its exclusive adoption for military purposes, in Canada. But the two combined are so implicitly in keeping with the true imperial spirit, that the adoption of the Ross Rifle for the Canadian militia is not only justified, but demanded.

EDTIORIAL NOTES.

The Globe has for more than two generations been a breakfast food, as indispensable in this respect as oatmeal to a Scotchman.

Hon. A. G. MacKay's political enemies are as anxious to get him out of the Ontario Legislature, as Hon. G. P. Graham's are to keep him out of the Dominion Parliament.

The whirligig of time, with the help of Hon. Sam Hughes, brings its revenges. The Laurier government was severely criticised for introducing and insisting upon, the Ross rifle for the Canada militia and our Bisley bersaglieri. If the present Conservative leaders were as honest and patriotic as Hon. Col. Sam Hughes there would be acknowledgment of merit in many other things besides the Ross rifle.

The fit of Ulsteria that is troubling the Belfasters over the Churchill Home Rule meeting will probably, like the Hull-abuloo raised over the orange walk in Ottawa's Quebec suburb last July, be a flash in the pan. The extreme "Protestant" part of the people of Ulster claim to be not only specimen Britishers of the king and constitution type, but the underpinning of the United Kingdom. Will they risk toppling over the structure by pulling out the biggest bricks in the foundation, free speech and fair play? They will seriously stultify themselves by resorting to force, to prevent a British Cabinet minister from speaking, on a measure that is to be decided by the votes of the representatives of the people. Home Rule for Ireland, or any of the other potions of the Kingdom if they want it, is as logical as home rule for Canada or Australia, or South Africa, or New Zealand. There were croakers that prophesied the failure of Canadian Federation, which gives this country potentially and actually, the widest measure of home rule, without impairing, but on the contrary intensifying, our loyalty to the mother land and the empire, which may be characterized by a magnificent political Irish bull—the looser the bonds, the tighter they bind.

CONDUCTOR FATALLY INJURED

KAMSASK, SASK., JAN. 23.—Conductor Murphy was probably fatally injured and twenty-seven passengers and crew more or less hurt when the Canadian Northern Express from Edmonton to Winnipeg left the track owing to a spreading rail. The whole train turned over on its side.

CONSERVATIVES SPLIT OVER NE TEMERE BILL

override the statute of British Columbia in that regard as would the legislation he suggested. The same might apply to the marriage of a white and a colored person. The Premier then read the following carefully prepared statement:

A DIVIDED JURISDICTION

'By the Canadian constitution, as embodied in the B. N. A. act, section 92, sub-section 26B, the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to and includes marriage and divorce. The constitution declares, however, in section 92, subsection 12, of the same act, that in each Province the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to the solemnization of marriage in the Province. It is perfectly clear that the words 'marriage and divorce' would include the solemnization of marriage if that subject had not been assigned to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Province under the language just quoted. The result has been expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in these words: 'Solemnization of marriage in a Province is enumerated among the classes of subjects under section 92, and no one can doubt notwithstanding the general language of section 91, that this subject is still within the exclusive authority of Legislatures of the Provinces.'

FULL PROVINCIAL AUTHORITY

"It has also been held by the Privy Council that a Provincial Legislature has authority as plenary and as ample within the limits described by section 92 as the Imperial Parliament in the plentitude of its power possessed or could bestow. Within these limits of subjects and area the Provincial Legislature is supreme and its jurisdiction exclusive.

"The formalities prescribed by a Provincial Legislature as necessary to constitute a valid marriage come undoubtedly within the meaning of the word 'solemnization.' It thus appears that with respect to those formalities the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures is exclusive.

PARLIAMENT NOT COMPETENT

"The opinion of the late Minister of Justice, Sir Allen Aylesworth, the opinion of the present Minister of Justice and the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Newcombe, K. C., are to the effect that legislation such as that now proposed is not within the legislative competence of this Parliament. To the same effect is the opinion of an eminent lawyer of the Ontario Bar, whose opinion upon the case submitted, I will lay upon the table for the information of the House.

OPINION TO THE CONTRARY

"On the other hand, the hon. member who has introduced this bill is himself a lawyer of eminence and great experience, and he is strongly of opinion that this bill is within the competence of Parliament. Other lawyers who are members of this House entertain the same view. While I do not share that opinion I am bound to respect it."

Premier Borden thereupon moved to adjourn the debate and submit the matter of jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of Canada, whence it could be carried to the Privy Council.

TORIES IN REVOLT

Then ensued one of the most dramatic scenes in the Parliament of Canada, Government member after Government member rising to declare his intention to desert his leader on this issue.

"I regret that I cannot accept the disposition proposed by the Premier," declared Mr. Lancaster. He could not agree to have the matter "shelved" in the manner proposed. He suggested the bill pass and that the case then be submitted upon it to the Privy Council. To submit an academic question was only to "prejudice the case and secure delay, which the country does not want. I cannot preserve my self respect and consent to the Premier's motion. It may be said I am not true to my leader, but if I am true to myself I cannot be false to anyone."

Then arose Captain Tom Wallace (Centre York). "I just want to say," he exclaimed, "that I am completely in accord with the member for Lincoln, and shall vote accordingly."

By this time the House was in a startled expression of expectancy and the faces of members of the Government were a study. Mr. W. F. McLean was the next bolter.

Mr. W. F. McLean said that if the only way to settle this most vital question was to revise the constitution, the sooner that was done the better. He therefore urged that something practical be sent to the Privy Council for their opinion and that in the meantime he would content himself by supporting Mr. Lancaster's bill.

Col. Hugh Clark—I am heartily in accord with the arguments advanced and the views expressed by Mr. Lancaster, and am prepared to support his bill.

MR. W. B. NORTHRUP

Mr. W. B. Northrup said there was no doubt that the British North America Act gave the Federal Parliament exclusive jurisdiction over marriage and divorce, except as to the form of solemnization. People were not married by clergymen and priests but marriage was a contract made between two persons in the presence of a clergyman or priest, who was merely a witness. While the question of solemnization was being cleared it seemed to him that the Government should make some representation to the Vatican to induce them to withdraw the ne temere decree from Canada, as it was withdrawn from Germany. In the meantime, Mr. Northrup intimated that he would support the Lancaster bill.

MR. BARKER

Mr. Samuel Barker doubted that it was the better way to settle the question by passing the Lancaster bill, which might lead to longer litigation than the reference to the Privy Council proposed by the Premier.

Mr. Burnham (Peterborough) created laughter by stating that he favoured both the bill and the Premier's proposal to refer the matter to the Privy Council.

THE OPPOSITION LEADER

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said it was not well for outsiders to interfere in family quarrels, and therefore he had hesitated up to this time to speak upon this question, over which so much difference had arisen between the Government and its supporters. The question was not new. The ne temere decree was simply an extension of the temisti decree of the Council of Trent, made some 300 years ago. The decisions of the Council of Trent had not been applied by the Church to France but many of them, including that relating to marriage, were introduced by the Kings of France into the laws of the governmen ot their American colonies. In this way they came to the Province of Quebec, where they had been in force for 300 years. As he understood the ne temere decree, it provided that to be valid the marriage must be celebrated by the parish priest of the parish. The purpose was to prevent clandestine marriages, and he was sure that everyone, whether Protestant or Catholic, would agree that the prevention of clandestine marriages was wise. It would be well to free the discussion of this question from prejudice and simply look at it from the point of view of common Canadian citizenship. There was an impression that the ne temere decree was intended to override the authority of the King and Parliament. As a Roman Catholic he protested against such interpretation. There was no such intent and the ne temere decree did not go beyond setting down rules binding upon the conscience of Catholics. It was chosen to give civil effect to its provisions or otherwise.

Mr. Maclean—But will the Right Hon. gentleman say the decree does not affect the rights of parties in a mixed marriage?

LEGAL MARRIAGE NOT ATTACKED

Sir Wilfrid—No. If a Catholic in the Province of Ontario marries according to the provisions of the civil law of the Province, even though it be contrary to the "ne temere" decree, he is legally married and his children are legitimate, but the Catholic who marries contrary to the provisions of the decree may be penalized by his Church. But, as I understand it, it does not go beyond the conscience of Catholics. It has been understood in the Province of Quebec that the civil authorities have given effect to the religious ordinances on this subject. How far the civil laws of Quebec affect the subject is now in question before the courts. I, for my part, cannot support the bill because its provisions seem to me to be absolutely illogical. Sir Wilfrid said that a marriage celebrated in a Province was valid or not valid, according to the law of that Province. If the aim were to amend the constitution, that was another matter, but that the law of the Provinces should be overridden by the law of the Federal Parliament could not be conducive to proper administration. "If the Province is wrong," said Sir Wilfrid, "let us go to the province and try to make it right." Sir Wilfrid said that the matter was now before the courts of Quebec and judgment will be delivered at no distant date. It was probable that this definite case would be referred to all the judicial tribunals and a final authoritative decision secured upon it. This in his opinion was a better way to handle the matter than to refer to it in the confusing and merely academic way proposed by the Premier. To dispose of the Lancaster bill simply by moving the adjournment of the debate, as suggested by Mr. Borden, was not at all the proper or creditable manner of dealing with such an important question.

THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Doherty said hat he had all respect for the member for Lincoln, and while he desired to treat his arguments seriously he could not agree with this point of view and must oppose the Lancaster bill. The Minister of Justice was in accord with the view held by two of his predecessors, Hon. Edward Blake and Sir Allen Aylesworth, to the effect that the Provincial Legislatures had jurisdiction.

To Mr. Carvell the Minister of Justice said that the ne temere decree in no detrimental way affected the civil law of Quebec or of any other Province. He admitted, however, that the decree prohibited the marriage of Protestant and Catholic except where the ceremony was performed by a priest, but this related solely to the ecclesiastical tribunal.

Mr. Clarke (Essex) emphasized the strong sentiment existing in Ontario and was surprised that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had not been accused of the authorship of the decree, as was done during the campaign. He concurred in the view of the Liberal leader not to interfere with Provincial rights. The Hebert case would get to the Privy Council in more concrete form than any academic reference to he courts, which was only an evasion for the time being. Like Sir Wilfrid he favoured basing action on proper grounds.

ARCHBISHOP BRUCHESI QUOTED

Hon. Mr. White quoted the pastoral letter of Archbishop Bruchesi that the marriage of two Catholics by civil authorities or by Protestant clergyman made the marriage null and void, but maintained this was only from an ecclesiastical standpoint. Not even the Roman Catholic Church contended that it gave civil effect in Quebec.

Mr. White held that in Quebec the civil code protected all rights to a marriage validly contracted and made the children legitimate. He was opposed to the Lancaster bill.

COL. HUGHES ASKS

Then did one Minister interrogate the other, an unusual spectacle.

"Does the ne temere decree have any effect in the Provinces outside of Quebec?" asked Hon. Colonel Hughes.

"No," replied Mr. White.

"Then has it effect in Quebec?" Col. Hughes continued.

"That I do not know," explained Mr. White. It was for that reason it was advisable to settle the doubt.

"This is the place to settle doubts," quoth Mr. Lancaster. "Pass the bill now."

Mr. White contended otherwise. It was a better way to secure a judicial decision and not run contrary to the views of Aylesworth, Doherty and Borden.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish it let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Anyone wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REMD, 105 Hound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PETROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

By JOHN REECE

"And yet you seem bent on making a breach—hark!" she said, breaking off to listen, "there's somebody at the front door!"

In the hush that followed, they heard the summons, answered, and a man's voice speaking in the hall. The next moment Rose Pilgrim turned the handle, and Felix moved away from the parlour door.

CHAPTER XIV.

Jack Hunter.

Doctor Hunter entered briskly, the smooth, healthy floridness of his face heightened by the sharp outer air. He turned with professional precision to see if he had snacked the door securely, and looked somewhat excited, as if he had something of importance to communicate.

"I daresay you are surprised, Fleming, to see me here to-night, but—hello—what's the matter? Have I come at an awkward time, or is there anything——"

Agnes, tired with her journey and overwrought with emotion, burst into a vehement flood of tears. He looked from her to the Squire, who with his broad, powerful shoulders against the high mantelshelf, and his hands deep in his trousers' pockets, was colourless, despite his tanned skin.

"If you don't want me, just tell me to go," he said, looking at Felix. "I don't much relish poking my nose into people's private domestic squabbles, discussions ,or differences. Look here, I'll come around in the morning——"

"Don't go, doctor; I want you," Agnes exclaimed, springing to his side and clasping her hands around his arm. "Doctor Hunter, will you do me a favour? Will you go into the shrubbery and see if Mr. Farley is there?"

"Of course I will," he said, cheerfully, laying a warm soothing hand over the trembling ones on his arm. "I'm looking for him myself; he's the very identical party I want. Why should he be in your shrubbery, though?" he added, somewhat amused.

"I horse-whipped him about twenty minutes back," Felix interposed, laughing and drawing himself to his full height, "and left him there, so Agnes concluded he is going to spend the night cold and stark under the stars."

"Good heavens, Felix! You don't mean to say you horse-whipped that delicate, highly-strung sensitive boy? By Jove! I wouldn't like to be in your grip, with your whip hand over me."

"I thrashed him, my dear sir, and will do more, if he crosses my path again. I'll break every bone in his body; I'll thrash him within an inch of his life."

"In the name of fortune, what has he done? Murdered your best friends, or massacred everyone in the neighbourhood?"

"I've no wish to make the cause public; I'm not at all proud of the motive which prompted the castigation, but perhaps Agnes is not quite so squeamish. I'll leave the explanation to her," he said, walking to the door and holding it open.

"You have no objection, have you, Felix, to my going to see if Farley is there? I'm hunting for him on my own account."

"Not in the least," he said, with a fine show of indifference. "I shall be in the kitchen-room, Hunter; I'll see you before you go," and then he slammed the door behind him.

"You would like me to go at once?" Doctor Hunter asked, watching her disturbed face as he led her to the low chair beside the fire.

"Yes," she responded gratefully; "will you take some brandy, with you?"

"No," he said, tapping his coat pocket, "I keep a flask here in case of emergency;" and going up to the French window, he pulled up the blind, unfastened it, and stood the flight of steps into the garden, and round to the shrubbery that way.

He walked in the direction of the summer house, and in a streak of moonlight across the pathway he saw something glitter, stooped, and picked up a collar stud; and then at a little distance another. He put them in his waistcoat pocket and looked carefully round for a trace of the owner. Presently his travelling eyes halted at a long dark object near the hedge, and with a smothered exclamation he strode across and knelt down by Paul Farley's side.

"Hello, my lad!" he said, unscrewing the flask, "can you get up You've been lying here pretty nearly half an hour." Without staying for an answer, he lifted his head and poured some brandy between his lips, and while he waited for the spirit to take the desired effect, he struck a match and lighted a tiny candle in a nickel-plated holder, and took a good look at Paul's ghastly face.

"Upon my word, it's too bad!" he muttered, drawing the tips of his fingers along the white wales that striped his cheek and neck. "I shall call Master Felix to account for this."

Paul stirred and opened his eyes, and the doctor gave him another dose of brandy.

"Can you get on to your feet with my help, Farley?" he asked. "I want you off the ground, my lad; you've lain here long enough."

Paul's eyes stared about them in a dazed unnatural way, as if the place were strange to him, then suddenly catching sight of the man beside him, he threw up his arms in anticipation of warding off more blows, and struck the doctor full in the chest.

"Steady, my man!" he said, with smiling geniality, "you are mistaking me for our friend Felix, eh? You know me, don't you, Farley?"

"Yes," he answered, gazing at him. "You are Doctor Hunter. I beg your pardon."

"Never mind about begging my pardon; just scramble to your feet, there's a good fellow. Come," he added, winding his arm around him. "Now, then, up you get," and in half a second he had him standing and leaning against the trunk of a horse-chestnut tree.

"How do you feel now?" he asked; "giddy? You wouldn't like to go indoors and lie down for a bit?"

Paul shook his head and his lips quivered ominously. He swallowed something apparently very big, something that seemed to pass through the gullet with the greatest difficulty, and said in a voice that had the sound of tears in it, "I shall never go there again; there is nothing between us now but the frayed-out ends of a broken friendship and a sense of injustice, insult, and injury."

"Pshaw!" the doctor said, snapping his fingers, "I don't know what the dispute is about, but I do know that if Felix has been mistaken, and acted under a false impression, he won't be at all backward in acknowledging himself in the wrong."

"A man must believe what he sees with his own eyes; he can't be persuaded out of that," Paul rejoined dejectedly.

"Well, don't try to cram to-morrow's trouble in along with to-day's Go home, drink a pint of warm milk. You don't need any more alcohol—take a hot bath, go to bed, and stay there till I've seen you in the morning. Come," he said, taking his arm, "my trap is driving up and down the turnpike. Dick can drive you home and come back for me." He escorted him to the dog cart, helped him in, gave a few directions, and returned to the parlour by the way he had egressed a short while before.

"Well, Miss Agnes," he said, cheerily, bringing a chair opposite to her and sitting down in close proximity, in an unconscious habitual professional way, "do you mind having me on your hands half an hour? I've sent Mr. Farley home in my dog-cart."

"He was there, then?" she said, her colour fading a little. "Is he much hurt?"

"Nothing to speak of," he said, guardedly; "he was a bit faint, but he's gone home pretty right, and I don't expect to find him much worse to-morrow."

She smiled and wiped the tears from her eyelashes.

"I am not an inquisitive man," he said, "so if you prefer to keep this matter to yourself, you hold on to it tight, little woman. At the same time, if you fancy an old horse like me can help you to draw a load of any sort of trouble, don't scruple to saddle me."

"I don't know, but I think I'll tell you," she said, without a trace of embarrassment, "because Felix showed me your letter, you know; it's only right you should understand the kind of girl I am. The reason why Felix thrashed Mr. Farley was, he saw him kiss me in the old summer house in the shrubbery."

"Indeed!" he said, looking into the fire very seriously, "and Felix thought such condign punishment might help to cure him of further presumption?"

"He was very angry, in a fearful rage. I don't know what he has threatened us with. I know he feels as if I had disgraced him and all our ancestors for generations back. What do you think of our behaviour, Dr. Hunter?"

"I think it was a very natural proceeding on Mr. Farley's part to offer you kisses, and on yours to accept them, if you are both of the same sentiment and shade of opinion. Why should Felix object to a match between young people?"

Sciatica AND Lumbago

Suffered for Twenty-five Years and Could Get No Relief

Now Tells of the Wonderful Results Obtained by the Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Sciatica, neuralgia and sciatic rheumatism are the result of a run-down nervous system. For this reason all treatments must necessarily fail which do not build up the nervous system.

Mr. Collins suffered for twenty-five years and never was able to obtain satisfactory treatment until he began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. While the Nerve Food forms new blood and restores the exhausted nervous system, the Kidney-Liver Pills invigorate the action of kidneys, liver and bowels.

Mr. W. T. Collins, Morpeth, Ont., writes: "It affords me pleasure to be able to speak favourably of two of Dr. Chase's medicines—the Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. I had been a sufferer for twenty-five years from sciatica, lumbago and neuralgia and tried almost all the medicines I could hear of, without one particle of benefit, until I commenced to use Dr. Chase's. I noticed an improvement before I had used two boxes, and the benefits obtained by continued use have been wonderful. I have so much confidence in these two medicines that I have recommended them to dozens of my friends, and I have yet to hear of a single case in which they failed to give satisfaction."

Dr. Chase's medicines are for sale by all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Mr. William Doyle of this city has received word to the effect that his son William Frederick Doyle had succumbed to tuberculosis in Los Angeles on New Year's Day. The late Mr. Doyle was in his 50th year and was well known in the city, having resided here for about 32 years. Twenty years ago he left here to seek fortunes in other lands. He was a lather by trade and at the time of his death was residing with his sister, Mrs. Hastings of Los Angeles.

Occupants of Local Hotel 'Bus Get Exciting Ride

The Oriental hotel bus met with a rather awkward accident this morning when going to the early C.P.R. train. The 'bus slewed near the corner of George and Charlotte street and struck the street car track, the rear runner collapsing. The vehicle was loaded with passengers and owing to the time of the train's arrival being too near to wait for a change or walk, the driver simply applied the last and sailed down to the station, the rear end of the vehicle dragging. It was a rather exciting trip for the occupants, but apart from this no ill results were recorded and the station was reached in time.

HAD VERY BAD COUGH.

Tickling Sensation In Throat.

Could Not Sleep At Night.

A bad cough, with that distressing, tickling sensation in the throat, is one of the most aggravating coughs a person can possibly have.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will quickly stop that tickling in the throat which causes the dry cough that keeps you awake at night, for the simple reason that it is so rich in the healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, it cannot help but do otherwise.

Miss C. Danielson, Bowsman River, Man., writes:—"Last fall I had a very bad cough and a tickling sensation in my throat. It was so bad I could not sleep at night, so I went to a druggist and told him I wanted something for my cold and he advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup which I did, and after taking one bottle I was completely cured. Let me recommend Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to any one who suffers from a cough or throat irritation."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 50 cents.

WILL CITY TAKE OVER THE PETERBORO' RADIAL RAILWAY?

Ald. Gordon Makes Above Proposal---Bill of $632 Unexpectedly Presented---P. L. and P. Will Charge for Changing Lights to Middle of the Street---Firemen's Salaries Are Raised.

The new Fire, Water and Light Committee held their second business session last night, when a considerable amount of very important business was dealt with. By going to work in a business-like manner, and giving no matter any more than its value of discussion, the business progressed very rapidly, and the new Committee proved its working qualities.

There were present: Ald. Johnston, chairman; Aldermen Gordon, Anderson, Morgan, Brown, Mayor Bradburn and Buller, and Chief Howard.

The chairman brought up the question of changing the arc lights to the middle of the streets, and stated that Mr. W. H. Munro was present to speak on the matter. Mr. Munro, on motion, was then heard.

Mr. Munro explained that as it was now near the end of the present contract, and as the moving of these lights does not come under the contract, the Company felt that the city should be at the expense of moving them. He further stated that the Company would be willing to do the work and supply the material, at cost, if the city would be at the expense. He offered that at the end of the present contract, the Company would refund the money, paid by the city for this purpose, on condition that the city renew the contract with the Company. He put the average cost of a light at $21.00, explaining that it might cost more than this to move some of them, while for others, it might be a lot less, but on an average, this would be about the figure.

It was suggested that in some cases, the arc lights might be changed to incandescents, five incandescent lights being substituted for each arc ligh, which would mean an increased revenue to the Company, of about $10.00 per year. The cost of the incandescents is about $10.00 each, and for the arc lights, about $50.00.

Ald. Gordon offered that this price had been arbitrarily fixed, but not estimated by reason of energy consumed.

Mr. Munro explained that it was made up on the basis of the cost of the lamp and the cost of energy in the first place, and so far as putting up new arcs, or changing to incandescents was concerned, that was covered by the contract.

Ald. Gordon contended that the statement made by Mr. Munro suggested that the Company would do nothing only that which they were bound to do by contract.

Mr. Munro contradicted this by pointing out that they had supplied light every night lately, while the contract only called for 300 nights in the year. This had been gratuitously done.

Mayor Bradburn was quite firm in his belief that if it was going to cost the city $1.00 per light to make the change, that the lights should stay as they are until the present contract expires.

The Mayor also suggested that a few changes be made, in order that some incandescents be placed under the trees, where the latter shade the streets.

Coming back again to the subject of argument, the Chairman pointed out that this was the first time the Company had charged the city for changing lights.

Mr. Munro returned to the charge more vigorously than ever, and argued that the Company would not object to making a change now and again, but when there is a wholesale change of about 300 lights requested, the Company must take the matter into consideration.

Ald. Buller suggested that the Chairman go around and inspect the lights in question, and ascertain where it would be advisable to substitute incandescents for the arcs, and such like, and report back to the Committee. Ald. Brown put this in the form of a motion, and it was seconded by Ald. Buller.

May Take Over the Street Ry.

Ald. Gordon said he wanted to introduce a matter, which, although it was one which should be dealt with by the Council, yet he felt justified in bringing it before the Committee, to see what they thought of the matter. He suggested that the city take over the street railway, and that it be arranged to send an official letter to the Street Railway Company, asking for estimates, etc. He thought that if they would consider the proposition at all, it should be considered before the Company makes any extensions, especially the one in East City, for, in this case, the city could extend the line on what ever streets in East City they considered would be the best for the development of the city. He pointed out that it was not to make a profit that they would run the railway, but for the development of the city, and with this in view, he recommended that some action be taken immediately, suggesting that the Chairman of the Committee write the Company, and get some facts and figures on the matter.

Ald. Morgan thought the scheme was a fine one, but suggested that it be recommended to the Council, and an official letter be sent from it, instead of from the Committee. Ald. Gordon was satisfied with this suggestion, and it was agreed to keep the matter over until the next Council meeting.

The Chief's Wants Were Dealt With.

Some of Chief Howard's immediate wants came up for discussion at this juncture, the first of which was the cutter he asked for. The Chairman stated that he had succeeded in renting one from Mr. R. Gibbs for the rest of the season for $5.00, and suggested that the matter be left over, and the new cutter be secured during the summer for next winter. This was agreed.

Chief Howard drew the attention of the Board to the fact that he had paid for subscriptions of the daily newspapers, and asked that the Committee provide for these in future. Ald. Gordon offered that he would contribute a year's subscription of the Examiner. Mayor Bradburn said he would contribute a year's subscription of the Review, and the Chief stated that the Times Company sent a free subscription.

The Persian lamb cap was the next "want". The matter of purchasing a cap for the Chief was left with the Chairman, who reported that he could get one at from $12 to $15.

On motion of Ald. Buller, seconded by Ald. Anderson, 550 feet of the old Fire Station hose was transferred to the Board of Works at 50 cents per foot.

About 300 feet of "junk" hose will be disposed of to Mr. R. Gibbs at the usual "junk" prices.

On motion of Ald. Morgan, seconded by Ald. Buller, a little "Salamander" stove at $5.50, to burn charcoal, will be purchased, to heat the Fire Station tower, to thaw out hose after a fire.

Hose Tester.

There was considerable discussion over the proposed hose tester, which would cost $180.00.

Ald. Morgan thought that one could be made here in the city for a lot less money, and yet suit the purpose just as well as the one proposed. In fact he thought that $40 or $50 would cover the expense.

The Chairman stated that he had got a little information from some of the manufacturing establishments, and one could not be purchased for less than $150.00.

Ald. Buller thought that it would be advisable to secure a little more information on this matter of hose tester and expander, and the matter was accordingly left with the chairman to secure more information.

The Chief urged the purchase of the article, stating that he had very little wants at the fire station this year, less than there had been for some years past.

The Mayor thought that all the estimates for the year should be framed up and presented, and then the committee could strike off anything they considered could be done without, and would know just where they were at, as regards their financial store.

Salaries Will Be Raised.

The Chief thought that the matter of salaries could at least be dealt with at present. He stated that the men all wanted a rise and he recommended that it be granted. He stated that the present salaries were 1st year $525, second year $575, and third year men $600. The Chief suggested that they all be put on third year pay.

Ald. Morgan said that there were very good men at the station now, and that an increase in salary might encourage them, and recommended the rise.

Ald. Gordon thought they should be put on a $575 basis.

The Chief informed them that the men were all first year men but two, and they were only second year men.

Ald. Anderson moved that the salaries be, for first year men $550, second year men $600, and third year men $650, and Ald. Buller seconded the motion.

Ald. Brown moved, seconded by Ald. Morgan, that the salaries be, for first year men $575, second year men $600 and third year men $625. The motion was lost and Ald. Anderson's motion carried.

A Surprise.

A big surprise was sprung on the committee when a bill for $632 was presented from the Peterborough Light and Power Co., with a letter stating that the company had failed to charge for a number of new lights which were installed, principally in East City. The bill ran back as far as 1908. The matter was left over and will be investigated by the committee.

On motion of the Mayor, the matter of placing an incandescent light near the Isolation Hospital on Langton street was left with the chairman and Ald. Duncan with power to act.

Considerable discussion resulted over the question as to whether Chief Howard should be given complete control over the Fire Station, including authority to dismiss or engage the employees. Some of the members were of the opinion that the Chief should be given this authority, while others were a little inclined to think that he should not. Finally, they all decided that the best way would be to have the matter fixed so that the Chief would have full control over the Station with power to dismiss firemen and engage them, only in the case of a dismissal, the employee concerned should be given the privilege of seeking redress from the committee. In looking over the Fire Station by-laws, they discovered that this was the way it was already fixed so the matter was left over for future consideration.

The Chief's report was then presented, after which the Board adjourned.

Stock Judging Course Completed

The free course in stock judging, which is being conducted under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture, and the local Society, is meeting with success. Yesterday and to-day a large number of farmers from the surrounding country were in attendance, and they evinced considerable interest in the lecture, given by the instructor in the ring. The judging of dairy and beef cattle by the two appointed judges and the spectators, was completed yesterday, and to-day the light and heavy horses underwent a similar examination, with a view to ascertaining the strong and weak points of the breed.

DOME EXTENSION

TORONTO, JAN. 23. — Although the movement of the mining market has not pointed towards the possibility of the resumption of business by the firm of E. D. Warren & Company, now under voluntry temporary suspension from the Toronto Stock Exchange, there was said to be last night for the first time some hope that the firm might begin again. This hope, however, is still remote, and it cannot be even entertained until after the meeting of creditors, which should take place in a few days. Gossip on the market, practically all of it without foundation, yesterday concerned other contingencies.

The liquidation of Dome Extension which began on Saturday with the sale of a block of 41,000 shares (erroneously reported in the official sheet as 4,100), which was sold "under the rule," was followed by more persistent liquidation yesterday, and the market for this stock and for Crown Chartered was demoralized. Dome Extension received support in the late trading, however, and sold as high as 33. There is a prospect that Crown Chartered, which sold around 9 yesterday, will cut away from its erstwhile market sponsors, and that work on the property may be resumed in a fortnight or so. Some market followers are optimistic enough to believe that the failure of E. D. Warren & Company will result in the cleaning out of a number of weak accounts and will be good for the market generally.

HAMILTON, Ga., JAN. 23.—A mob of a hundred men last night broke into Harris county jail here, overpowered the jailor and took four negroes, three men and one woman and hanged them to trees. The bodies were riddled with bullets. The negroes were arrested yesterday charged with the murder of Norman Hadley, a well-to-do farmer who was killed Sunday night as he sat in his home, a shot being fired from the outside. The blacks who were tenants on Hadley's farm, protested their innocence to the last.

"THE GIRL AND THE TRAMP"

The four-act comedy success, "The Girl and the Tramp," with Fred A. Byres as Happy Jack, the tramp, comes to the Grand on Saturday next, Jan. 27th. A notable cast, elegant scenery and the explosion of a real automobile in full view of the audence are some of the features which make "The Girl and the Tramp" such an interesting and enjoyable performance. The highest of dramatic art is displayed in scenes that are embowered in elegant scenery and realistic stage settings. Do not confer the idea that this play is a cheap melodrama or wild west shooting affair, for it tells the story of how a banker, who has a loving wife and a happy home, is brought to ruin through the manipulation of the stock market by a man who is in love with his wife. The wife and husband separate, and she is forced to move to cheaper quarters. A wagon is waiting to move Mrs. Merton's household goods into the street, because she can't pay her rent, when Flo Randall, a girl Mrs. Merton befriended and afterwards adopted, rushes in with money to pay the rent. It is an intense dramatic scene and you feel just like kissing the little street urchin for her timely assistance.

The comedy is supplied by Happy Jack, the tramp who, when hungry, was fed by Mrs. Merton. She persuades him to stop drinking and be a better man. He promises to do so and through the clever schemes of the girl and the tramp, the husband and wife are re-united and the happy home reinstated.

WILL THERE BE A LOCAL OPTION FIGHT IN CITY?

Convention to be Held Here on Monday Next Will Probably Decide This Question---Field Day in District Churches on Sunday.

According to advices received from the Dominion Alliance, Toronto, a great deal of interest is being awakened in the Field Day, which is to be observed in Peterborough County on Sunday next.

On Monday afternoon and evening live issues will be discussed at the convention in this city. The liquor license act is by no means a perfect piece of legislation and needed improvements in it will be dealt with. It is almost certain that the Government will be again approached with a view to securing some amendments which experience has shown to be urgently required. Law enforcement is a subject which is also looming up large, and it will receive considerable attention. As 460 municipalities will be free from bar-rooms after 1st of May next, the Provincial situation is becoming one of very great interest, and an exposition of this will be passed under review. The time is drawing near when another local option contest can be held in the City of Peterborough, and the Convention will probably decide whether any action should be taken now. —Com.

PATRIOTIC SENTIMENTS RIFE AT SCOTCH CURLERS' BANQUET

Visitors Were Wined and Dined by the Peterborough Curling Club---Speeches Were Brief and of a Patriotic Nature---Music Featured Largely on Programme.

Probably the crowning feature of the visit of the Scotch curlers to this city, was the banquet held in their honour at the Masonic Hall last evening. Over one hundred and twenty-five guests were present, including a representative gathering of city officials. For over two hours, good fellowship reigned around the festive board, during which time the proceedings were enlivened by music and song of a patriotic nature. The hall was gaily decorated for the occasion with the national flags of Scotland, and displayed on the tables at intervals were several curling stones, offset by a background of foliage and ribbons. This, together with the other decorative features, lent splendour to the scene.

Mr. J. H. Connal, president of the club, who presided, welcomed the visitors and felt sure they would be warmly welcomed wherever they went. Curling was a game that was rapidly springing into prominence throughout the Dominion, and it was a game that was bound to create good fellowship wherever it was played. He appreciated the honour which the visitors had shown towards Peterborough, in selecting this city as one of their stopping places and concluded by hoping that their sojourn here would be of the pleasantest nature and that it would be one of the bright spots throughout the Dominion.

Bonnie Scotland.

The toast to the King was proposed by Mr. Connal and that of the Scottish curlers and bonnie Scotland, by Mr. H. R. H. Kenner. The proposer of the toast dwelt extensively with Scottish history, dealing eulogistically with some of Scotland's illustrious dead, such as the immortal Scott, Scottish heroism and romance go hand in hand, declared the speaker, and even to the present day it refuses to be subdued. It is one of the smallest countries in Europe, yet it has produced a galaxy of heroes. The Scottish race has always stood for industry and integrity of character, and from it has sprung men whose names rank prominent upon the scroll of fame, among whom might be mentioned our High Commissioner to Canada, Lord Strathcona. (Cheers.)

Col. Robertson Aikman in responding to the toast, thanked the proposer for the kindly remarks expressed towards his native land. While the team had met with defeat on several occasions, he had reason to be proud of them as a member, and he hoped that they would be able to wipe out the deficit further west, and yet at the same time, he did not believe that such would be the case. The spontaneous welcome which had been accorded them on all sides was not confined to curlers alone, but in many cases was extended to them by the citizens of the towns which they had visited. They had even been entertained by the Governor-General and their tour so far had been nothing short of royal progress. The last Scotch team which visited the country reported on their return that there was no town for its size, that had accorded them such a warm, hearty welcome as Peterborough.

District Clubs.

Mr. R. Hicks, vice-president of the club, then proposed a toast to the district clubs, three of whom were represented at the contest. They were Orillia, Bobcaygeon and Keene. Mr. Hicks thanked the district clubs for the friendly support they had given the Peterborough club in the past and hoped for a continuance of the same in the future.

Mr. Bottum of Bobcaygeon responded briefly, thanking the Peterborough club for the privilege of being present. He expressed the hope that the visitors would meet with a large measure of success throughout their western trip. He defined them as a body of gentlemen who could take defeat gracefully.

Mr. W. S. Davidson gave a brief address of the 'George Fitch' variety and brought down the house by his humorous expressions.

Mr. E. A. Peck, M.P.P., proposed the toast to Canada, and made a few brief remarks relative to the possibilities which lay within its boundaries. It was responded to by the singing of "O Canada" by Mr. McIlroy. The entire gathering, even to the lusty lunged visitors, joined in the chorus with a heartiness indicative of the patriotic spirit which guided their actions throughout the evening.

Our Hosts.

The last toast on the list was proposed by one of the visitors, ex-Provost Gordon, and was to "Our Hosts." He thanked the club for the warm welcome which they had received at their hands. He, together with his friends, had enjoyed the service held at Knox church, the beauty of the sermon having appealed to them as a green spot in their desert lives. He referred to the lift-lock, which was in the course of construction during his last visit and which was now completed, as being a wonderful piece of mechanism and a monument to those responsible for its inception. He again thanked the club, and referred to the members as gentlemen of the highest order.

While drinking the toast the visitors assumed the typical old country position for the occasion, that of placing one foot on the table and the other on the chair.

The hearty singing of "Auld Lang Syne" culminated the event, after which the curlers marched in a body to the rink, headed by Pipe Major Ross with the bagpipes.

During the course of the banquet Pipe Major Ross entertained the company to a number of selections on the bagpipes. With flying colours and garbed in the Scottish kilt, he paraded up and down the banquet hall to the tune of "The Cock O' the North."

POLICE OFFICERS' SALARIES ARE RAISED AT MEETING YESTERDAY

The Police Commissioners met yesterday afternoon and transacted considerable important business.

Three were present: His Honour Judge Huycke, chairman, Magistrate Dumble and Mayor Bradburn. The chairman welcomed his Worship Mayor Bradburn to the Board and the Mayor responded.

The minutes of the meeting of Dec. 29th, 1911, were read and confirmed.

On motion of Magistrate Dumble, seconded by Mayor Bradburn, His Honour Judge Huycke was made chairman of the Board for the year.

Chief Thompson's report was then presented and received and the Board went into committee of the whole to consider the report.

The question of salaries came up and on motion the salaries of the force were advanced.

The salaries were set as follows, to take effect Jan. 1st, 1912:

Chief—$1200, advanced to $1300.

Sergt. Adams—$725, advanced to $775.

P. C. McGinty—625.

P. C. Meharry—$650, advanced to $700.

Det. Newhall— $750, advanced to $850.

P. C. Meagher—$650, advanced to $700.

MR. STUART IS DIRECTOR

It will be remembered that when several changes occurred on the board of the Canada Life Assurance Company, a few months ago, some vacancies were left. Tow of these have been filled by the appointment of Mr. Robert Stuart of Chicago, who is a Vice-President of the Quaker Oats Company, and Mr. H. A. Richardson, General Manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Mr. Stuart is a director of the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

A YEAR INDOORS

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

Highwaymen Have Confessed

CHICAGO, JAN. 23.—Four highwaymen who confessed holding up an automobile containing George Kauffman and his wife, and shooting her dead when she screamed, have confessed their guilt and will probably be sentenced to death.

CHIEF HOWARD PRESENTS ANNUAL REPORT OF FIRE DEPT.

Very Interesting Facts Are Disclosed and Many Important Recommendations Are Embodied---Other Matters

Peterborough, Jan. 2, 1912.

To the Chairman and Committee on Fire, Water and Light.

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to submit herewith the fourth annual report of the paid fire department for the year ending December the 31st, 1911.

During the year the department responded to 127 alarms of fire. And you will please find attached a table of the various fires, giving a detailed statement of the cause, etc., as near as could be ascertained. You will also find attached a stock sheet, with an inventory of all the apparatus, supplies, etc.

In responding to fires the department travelled 92 1-2 miles, we laid 26,500 feet of fire hose, raised 880 feet of ladders and used 263 gallons of chemicals.

The total damage by fire for the year 1911 amounted to $22,743; of this amount $12,414 was damage to buildings, and the damage to contents of buildings amounted to $10,329. The damage for the year was $4,166 in excess of the preceding year, with four less alarms responded to.

While the department has had to handle some very serious fires we have been exceptionally fortunate in keeping the loss as low as it is, and the figures submitted make a very creditable showing for the city of Peterborough.

The systematic inspection of public and mercantile buildings conducted by this department has had the effect of enlisting the attention and co-operation of our business men in the matter of fire prevention. The merchants and manufacturers have assisted in reducing the fire waste by being exceptionally careful about their premises. The practice of allowing combustible rubbish to accumulate in large quantities in and about our business blocks is a thing of the past, and the thanks of this department are due the business men for their assistance in this matter. We have received less calls to the business district than in any preceding year.

You will observe from the list of causes of fires that there were less incendiary fires than heretofore. Due to the fact that Chief Constable Thompson and his staff have made an effort to stamp out this practice.

The elimination of combustible rubbish and incendiary fires, with other precautions to prevent fire, will have the effect of giving Peterborough a better standing with the insurance companies, and in time will prove profitable to the whole community.

During the year the department was called to extinguish 44 chimney fires, and at least one family was rendered homeless from this cause. I wish to sound a note of warning to householders who never think of cleaning their chimney until it gets on fire.

I also find that the habit of lighting fires with coal oil is still very prevalent. This practice was attended with fatal results on September the 14th, when the late Mrs. Peter Gifford was fatally burned while lighting a fire with coal oil.

The health of the department has been excellent during the past year, and seldom have any of the members been rendered incapable for duty through illness. I am also pleased to be able to report the happy absence of serious accidents.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

There are a few matters that should engage the special attention of your committee.

1st—Provision should be made in the estimates of expenditure for the extension and further improvement of the fire department, and I would urgently request, as I have before, that the equipment be added to by the purchase of a chemical fire engine, which, if installed, would be the most useful and valuable piece of apparatus in the department. Other years the Fire, Water and Light Committee have not been impressed with the real necessity of purchasing a chemical engine until after the estimates were struck, and then it was found to be impossible to do anything in the matter. At the same time each gentleman of council realizing the importance of this thing were powerless to act. I trust the gentlemen of your board will take time by the forelock and go at this matter in real earnest in the beginning.

2nd—You must admit that the city is growing very rapidly, and provision must be made for a sub-station. I would recommend the purchase of a suitable lot to erect a small building that will house a hose company.

3rd—The 1911 committee decided to instal five additional fire alarm boxes, and I believe the money was available, but for some reason the project was not carried through. I hope the committee will place the order for these boxes at once.

4th—It will be necessary to purchase some 1,500 feet of fire hose in order that a sufficient supply of first class fire hose will be always available. The greater portion of fire hose in stock at the present time is beginning to show signs of wear. We should be in a position to cull out the inferior hose, for the bursting of one length of fire hose not only delays the work of the firemen, but at some time might be attended with loss of life.

5th—You will please find attached to this report a petition signed by the firemen for an increase in salary. The men have asked me in a very respectful manner to place the petition before your honourable body. And I sincerely hope that it will be given due consideration. The men present a very plausible argument in support of their contention, and I assure you that any action taken along the line of an increase will be greatly appreciated, and there I have pleasure in recommending an advance in salary.

In conclusion I desire to express my sincere thanks to all the city officials for the kindness extended to the firemen and myself from time to time. To the Chief of Police and his staff of constables who have rendered valuable assistance on many occasions. And also to the public press for the many kind references to the department and myself during the past year.

All of which is respectfully submitted. I have the honour to be, sirs, your obedient servant,

W. A. HOWARD, Chief, Fire Dept.

CHINESE SITUATION

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, JAN. 23.— The gravest anxiety prevails here in the foreign office and in public circles regarding the latest development in Pekin, which is evidence that the Manchu princes have practically decided not to abdicate and that both sides have lost confidence in Premier Yuan Shi Kai, heretofore considered the strong man of China. The feeling here is that the forbidden city is now in the hands of Manchu reactionaries, who will be unable to control the various factions of Pekin's millions and lawlessnes and destruction may break loose any time with thousands of foreigners, including many Britishers, Canadians and United States, now taking refuge in that city, whose peril thereby will be greatly increased. The authorities here are certainly on the anxious seat. While there are big detachments of British and other troops near at hand, there are not enough to cope with the situation should the Manchu extremists break out. In the meantime the Republican troops are steadily advancing on the city.

MILBURN'S HEART and NERVE PILLS Made Her Strong and Healthy.

Many women get run down, and are unable to look after their household duties, owing to their nervous system becoming unstrung, and when this happens, the heart starts to work in sympathy with the nerves. In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is combined a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders, as well as act on the heart itself. Mrs. F. McFadyen, Brookside, Sask., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received from using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. This spring I was so run down I could not do any work, and one day a neighbor advised me to try your Pills. I told her that I thought nothing could cure me, as I was too far gone. But she told me to get a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I did, and before I had finished them, I began to improve, and when I had finished the one box I was as strong and healthy as any person. Anyone who is suffering from heart or nerve troubles should take your Heart and Nerve Pills and they will soon discover their worth."

After the minutes of the last meeting were read the following auditors for the year were elected: Messrs. W. H. Casement, Lakefield, and Mr. Calder of Norwood.

Conservatives At Sea Over The Ne Temere

OTTAWA, JAN. 23.—After a late sitting last night the corridors of the House of Commons were pretty well deserted this morning and not many members were to be found to discuss the big debate of yesterday. Mr. Lancaster was very late in leaving the house and didn't get around this morning.

The Liberal feeling is however, exactly that expressed by Clark of Red Deer last night when he said that Ontario at least did not vote almost solidly Conservative last September, with the idea that the burning marriage question should be solved. "It was an extraordinary spectacle," said a leading member on the Liberal side this morning. "We saw Premier Borden bestowing his benediction on the Ne Temere decree and Hon. L. P. Pelletier waving the British flag."

The sudden stampede of the Conservative side when member after member arose and flatly disagreed with his leader, shook the Conservative leaders seriously. So sure were they that the rank and file of party would follow where they led, that there was no preparation for the debate in caucus, and the Cabinet was amazed to find the Ontario men breaking for cover in every direction. This morning the few prominent Conservatives around the buildings do not care to discuss yesterday's proceedings at all.

Great Interest In Game To-night

Harvey Sproule, who refereed the junior game in Cobourg last night, is slated to handle the bell in to-night's intermediate O.H.A. game at Brock street rink between Trenton and Peterborough, which is called for 8.15 o'clock. The ice is in great shape and the game should be one of the best of the season, as there is great rivalry between the two teams. The Peterborough team will line-up as follows:

Goal—Derocher.
Point—Bearss.
Cover—Bond.
Rover Giroux.
Centre—Park.

The return game which was to have been played in Trenton on Friday night, will take place instead on Thursday night of this week. The Trenton juniors are running a big excursion on Friday night, which is the reason for the change.

I obtained a supply, and in a very short time my hands were cured."

Mrs. W. M. Baillient, of Port Hawkesbury, N.S., writes: "Some time ago my hands were very badly chapped. Ordinary ointments did not heal them and I was advised to try Zam-Buk. To my great delight, it healed my hands in a remarkably short time".

BEAR CATS WIN JUNIOR DISTRICT
BEAT COBOURG ON THEIR OWN ICE

Local Youngsters Win Their Third Game Away From Home in a Week—Were Never Behind in Last Night's Fixture.

HALF TIME SCORE 2-0

The Bear Cats are champions of District No. 2, Junior O. H. A.

The Peterborough Juniors won the title last night, when they invaded Cobourg, and defeated the Corktown aggregation on their own ice by 6 goals to 4 in a stubbornly contested battle. The victory was the third win away from home in a week—a most creditable performance on the part of the Bear Cats, who come out of the trying tour of the district, with three games to their credit, and every man in good shape and ready for the second round. Five straight victories, two at home and three abroad, show the calibre of Capt. Hall and his men, who now have the hearty support of the hockey fans of the city.

Last night's game was not the easiest proposition in the world. The Bear Cats were up against a fast, heavy, and well-trained team of juniors, who had the moral and vocal support of an immense crowd. However, the Peterborough youngsters tore into Freeman and Company, from the drop of the hat, and never let up until the timers climbed over the boards at the end of the game. They hammered along at top speed, all the way through, and Cobourg, after hanging on desperately, and making it an even battle, until the middle of the second half, faded from that period on and from then until the end of the game were a beaten team. The Bear Cats showed the same game, never-say-die spirit that characterized their playing in Lindsay and Port Hope, and it carried them through to another meritorious win.

It was a hard desperate fight all the way through. It lacked perhaps the spectacular features of the Lindsay game and some of the brilliancy displayed in that memorable battle, but it was a close nerve-racking struggle just the same. Both teams worked their heads off, and Cobourg finally weakened—that is the story, in the briefest possible form. Peterborough led at half-time by 2 to 0. Early in the second half, Cobourg evened up with a brace of counters, but the Bear Cats came back with two more, and were once more a pair to the good. The Corktown bunch closed the gap up to one, but the Bear Cats showed their mettle again by flashing down with another couple of goals, putting the game on ice, although Cobourg annexed the last goal.

The ice was anything but good and was not helped any by the fact that the Cobourg Intermediates had an hour's practise on it before the game. It soon grew heavy and sticky, and the conditions favoured the homesters with their individual methods, rather than the Petes, who depend upon their combination. It was difficult to pass accurately or to take a pass, and, as a result, Peterborough's team work was not as successful as on other occasions. However, the Bear-Cats showed themselves able to take care of the rubber individually and were always working.

One hundred and thirty fans accompanied the team on the special train, which reached Cobourg at 8.30 o'clock. Their presence in the rink was not hard to detect, especially when the Bear Cats scored. The game was a heavy betting proposition, and many a Cobourg sport awakened this morning with a kink in his bank-roll.

Every man on the Peterborough line-up had his share of credit for the brilliant victory. Joe Dwyer played the game of his life in the nets, his brilliant work saving the bacon. Early in the battle, when Cobourg were coming strong and were peppering shots at the Peterborough nets, the youth with the flame-coloured thatch was weeding them with what must have been disheartening sureness to the Cobourg bunch. He handled a score of difficult shots in this period coolly and accurately, and cleared quickly, getting the heaves from all ranges and any old angle. Fred Denison played his first game of the season and played sterling hockey, both on the defense and attack. The small ice surface interfered with his rushes, to some extent but Cobourg had their troubles stopping him when he got under way and he was a tower of strength on the defence. His side partner, Pete Milloy, was there with a barrel of ginger, his checking and rushing being to the good all through. The little defence man is an defatigable worker and the word "quit" might be dropped from the dictionary as far as he is concerned. Every man on the forward line worked heroically, their checking back being magnificent. The youngsters have the right conception of the duties of a forward line—that is that it is as important almost to keep the other fellows from scoring, as it is to score themselves, and it is a treat to see them come back to the assistance of their defence. Every man on the line backchecked consistently last night. Rollie Weir has never worked harder than he did last night. The little rover was all over the ice, and although the Cobourg defence bowled him over frequently with heavy body checks he would roll over onto his feet and come tearing back to overhaul the Cobourg line. Clancy had about the most dangerous man on the Cobourg team to look after, in the person of Cunningham, and the Peterborough youngster carried his check along at such a pace that he weakened in the second half, and was not a factor. Clancy has speed and stick-handling ability and his rushes along the boards were always dangerous. Hall played his usual steady, hard-working game, in centre, and was effective, both on the attack and in his checking methods. Kenneally worked heroically on the wing, and looked his man to the King's taste. He was always going and gave Hinman the time of his life.

Cobourg's defence played splendid hockey last night. Peachy's goal-keeping was magnificent, the little fellow, especially in the second half, making some beautiful saves of shots from close in. Penwarden and Holnbeck had adopted the Peterborough cross-rink method of defence, and they worked it nicely, both using their bodies to advantage. On the forward line, the honours, perhaps, went to Cunningham, for his great work in the first half, although Clancy played him off his feet in the second period. The right wing man is fast and tricky, and was dangerous when he got under way. Jimmy Freeman, the Cobourg idol, was brilliant in flashes, but the Petes looked after the fussy little captain in grand style. At that he contributed some pretty stick-handling. Hinman was good all through. With more combination the line would have been more effective, as they have speed and shooting ability.

Harvey Sproule refereed the battle, and there was no complaint from either team. The penalty list was not a heavy one, as the teams were out to play hockey. Holnbeck and Penwarden of the Cobourg team, were injured by being hit by the puck.

The line-up:

COBOURG

Peachy
Penwarden
Holnbeck
Freeman

Cunningham	Gray	Hinman
Clancy	Hall	Kenneally

Weir
Denison
Milloy
Dwyer

PETERBOROUGH

The pace was hot from the start, with each goal threatened, in turn. Cobourg had several openings, Dwyer picking off three hard shots in succession, from Cunningham, Hinman and Freeman. Then Peterborough came down and Hall almost beat Peachy with a vicious, low shot, from the boards, which nearly took the hand off the Cobourg net custodian. The play was up and down with no let up. Penwarden was benched for tripping Kenneally, and on the very nxt play Kenneally was chased for the same offence. Then Milloy drew his first penalty of the season for cross-checking. There was nothing doing in the scoring line, while the offenders were absent, although both goalers were kept busy. Finally, Denison came down with a rush, and, although he was stopped, he got an opening in the scrimmage that followed and beat Peachy with a nice shot. Time, 18 mins. Peterborough 1, Cobourg 0.

Clancy was penalized for slashing, but the odd-man advantage did not help Cobourg any. Peterborough held their own until he was back in the game, and then Weir went down the side and fooled Peachy with a neat shot from the corner. Peterborough 2, Cobourg 0.

Cobourg came back with a rush after the rest, and Dwyer had a couple of hard ones to handle. Then Clancy was sent away for a heavy body-check; and Weir for tripping, and the Bear Cats were two men short. Cobourg pressed with two to the good, and Holnbeck tore off a nice rush, down the side, winding up with a swift, low shot from the boards which eluded Dwyer. Peterborough 2, Cobourg 1.

The score seemed to act like a spur on the Corktown bunch, and they came like wild horses for a while, the Peterborough defence having to work over-time to hold them. Kenneally was penalized, but Cobourg could not score. Then Freeman served two penalties in succession, for slashing; the second for chopping Denison. The teams were even up, however, when Hinman tied the score by a nice shot, following a well-placed pass from the side. Peterborough 2, Cobourg 2.

It was up to the Bear Cats, and they showed that they had something in reserve. They uncorked some more speed and made things lively for the Cobourg defence. Finally, after three minutes' playing, Weir beat Peach, with a scoop shot and the Petes were in front again, never to be headed. Peterborough 3, Cobourg 2.

The Bear Cats continued on the aggressive. The forwards were working away from their checks, and in on the defence persistently, and at last Hall got an opening, after a pretty combined rush, and scored again. Peterborough 4, Cobourg 2.

Holnbeck was hit on the leg with the puck and had to retire for repairs, Kenneally being dropped with him. Playing six men aside, the battle went on. Cobourg drew closer when Gray and Freeman combined for a nice goal by the former. Peterborough 4, Cobourg 3.

The score was getting too close for comfort, and the Bear Cats went back at them again. Holnbeck and Kenneally came back and the teams were at full strength again. Penwarden was hit in the face with the puck and there was a delay until he was patched up. When the game was resumed Hall and Clancy went down together, Clancy drew out the defence by bluffing a pass to Hall, and then sailed into the nets himself, scoring easily. Peterborough 5, Cobourg 3.

Cuningham slashed Denison and was sent away. Clancy cinched the game for Peterborough by banging in another one, in two minutes.

Kenneally was penalized. Hinman came down alone with a pretty rush, and although the Petes defence looked to have him bottled up, he squirmed through and slipped the rubber past Dwyer for the last goal of the game.

Final score, Peterborough 6, Cobourg 4.

LOCAL CURLERS DEFEAT THE VISITING SCOTCHMEN BY A TOTAL OF 25 POINTS

Winning four out of the seven games, the Scotchmen finished up the afternoon curling event with 12 points in their favour. During the first half of the game the local curlers maintained the lead by several points, and at one stage of the game it looked as though they would cinch the event, but an overwhelming defeat, 21 to 9, handed the McCamus rink by the Renfrewshire aggregation, gave the visitors a safe majority. The games were fast and exciting all the way through and several clever shots by the curlers brought rounds of applause from a large body of curling fans, who were ensconced in the gallery. The contest between Skips Telford and Neil, as the score indicates, was close. It was productive of some of the best curling seen in the city this year. It was a battle royal all the way through, with both sides maintaining the lead alternately, until the finish, when the Scotchmen retired with a lead of 12 points.

The summary for the afternoon was:

The 16-end game in the evening was as interesting and as full of surprises as was the afternoon event. It probably appealed to the local curlers as being a much better game in fact, inasmuch as they emerged from the contest 37 points to the good. The visitors showed excellent form and displayed considerable enthusiasm throughout the game, but try as they would they failed to score at critical periods. They put too much steam behind their shots, which were invariably accurate, but in the majority of cases were too swift.

The rink skipped by Mr. Giroux and Mr. Telford of the 'Scots' ended in a tie, each side having 16 shots to its credit. Mr. Hicks, however, was not as successful in holding the visitors down, and with the able work of Skip Dougal, they succeeded in getting a 20 to 15 score.

The curling throughout the matches was of a high standard, and both sides demonstrated in an able manner their ability in the curling line. The rinks and scores were:

HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The G. Walter Green hockey team hereby challenge the Adam Hall hockey team to a game of hockey as soon as a date can be arranged.

Last night's win in Cobourg gives the Bear Cats the district. Although they have one game to play, with Port Hope here next Monday, the result will not affect the district standing. They will probably have to play the Trenton Juniors in the second round. Port Hope, who gave the Bear Cats such a hard battle last week, will be here to fill the return engagement and, although the Petes cannot be beaten out, the game should be well worth seeing. Following is the standing of the district:

Cobourg	4	2	33	19
Port Hope	1	4	11	31

DOCTORS COULD NOT HELP HIM

BUT GIN PILLS DID

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone in the Bladder. He decided to operate but said the stone was too large to remove and too hard to crush. I returned home and was recommended by a friend to try Gin Pills.

They relieved the pain. I took two boxes and went back to the specialist. He said the stone was smaller but he could not remove it although he tried for two hours and a half. I returned home and continued to take Gin Pills—and, to my surprise and joy, I passed the stone. Gin Pills are the best medicine in the world, and, because they did me so much good, I will recommend them all the rest of my life".

HOCKEY NOTES

All Saints hockey team are running an excursion per special train to Campbellford on Friday of this week, leaving Peterborough at 7 o'clock. It is expected that a big crowd of hockey enthusiasts will accompany the team. The committee are asked to meet to-night between 7 and 8 o'clock at Patterson's barber shop to make arrangements for the train.

In an interesting game at Brock Street Rink, an aggregation with the classic title of the Pool Players gave the T. A. S. Trent Valley League team a hard battle, the Leaguers winning 6 to 5. The Pool Players were as follows:

There is talk of a protest on the ground that the Referee had money on the game.

HOW A WOMAN GOT EVEN

In rural New England districts, the telephone takes the place of tea in the city, as a place where women gather and retail gossip. Walter Prichard Eaton, in "The Abandoned Farm," in the American Magazine, tells the following story:

"'It's like a blessing, 'specially if you're on a party line,' said our hostess. 'And we're all on party lines! Wait—'

"She went to the instrument, called a number and remarked, 'That you, Bessie? What's this I hear 'bout you'n Jim breaking it off?'

"We watched her smile as she listened to the answer. Then she said, 'How'd I hear it? Why, Mrs. Ann Parker told me.'

"She held the receiver free of her ear and beckoned us close. We heard distinctly an indignant voice exclaim, 'Why, Sarah Bowers, I never said no such a thing!'

"'I thought I'd catch her,' said Mrs. Bowers, when the telephone conversation was closed. 'As I told you, the 'phone's a great comfort to us all!'"

ONE BY THE FARMER

Once in a while the farmer gets back at the "city feller," and this is the brief tale of how a well-known Milwaukee lawyer, sojourning in the country for a week, fell a victim of Uncle Josh's subtle sense of humour:

The legal light had gone to the country to work. He just shed his coat and kicked right in, as 'twere. He had been assisting in stacking the first crop of hay and was working on top of the stack.

When "knocking off" time came the stack was pretty high and the city chap didn't know how to return to terra firma.

"Say, how'm I goin' to get down?" asked the lawyer person.

The farmer considered for a moment. Then he shouted:

"Oh, jest shet your eyes and walk around kind o keerless, an' you'll get down."—Milwaukee Free Press.

$82.88 PER YEAR

Seth Farnsworth, of Chicago, is in town to let people know that a man can live on $82.88 a year for personal expenses. He wants the people to adopt his plan in dealing with the unemployed. He feels certain that if it is taken up Vancouver's population will run up to the coveted million in remarkably short time. Here is Mr. Farnsworth's schedule of expenses for a year:

Food, 1,400 at 11c	$21.00
Four suits of clothes at $3.50	14.00
Four hats at 50c	2.00
Four pairs of shoes at $1	4.00
Four suits of underwear at 70c.	2.80
Rent, 40c per week	20.80
Twelve pairs of socks at 8c	.96
Eighteen collars at 8c	1.44
Eighteen cuffs at 8c	1.44
Eighteen handkerchiefs at 8c	1.44
Washing, per week, 25c	13.00
Total	$82.88

"Now that is from actual experiment," Mr. Farnsworth said. "It is being done in an Adventist school down in Tennessee right now. All a man needs is a pound of food at each meal. Take corn, for instance. It's around fifty cents a bushel, isn't it? That's less than a cent a pound. And there's no better food to be had than corn.

A MEAL FOR 42½ AT TWO CENTS EACH.

"Why, a couple of years ago I got up a meal for 42½ pupils of the Graham school in Chicago at a cost of two cents each. And at that the main item of expense was in preparation—a feature that costs about as much for one meal as for a month's meals. The actual food cost me just $8.50. We had beans, onions and meat cooked together, and bread. That's the best food on earth."

"Where do you get suits at $3.50?" was asked.

"That's easy enough. Here's this suit I am wearing, for instance. I paid $4.50 for it in Chicago, but it's a sort of Sunday suit and anyway I paid a mail order house profit on it."

The suit was somewhat wrinkled, indeed, but was of a neat design and fit well.

"No, sir, those prices I quoted are actual figures that have been put to a test. Now if this city, which is in advance of any other in caring for its dependents, would take up the clearing house plan of dealing with the unemployed it would increase its wealth wonderfully.

ONTARIO MEMBERS ARE LAMENTING THEIR VOTE

Those Who Followed the Crack of the Party Whip Are Already Hearing From Their Constituents---There Was an Amusing Round-up of Bolters.

OTTAWA, JAN. 23.—Although the motion to adjourn the debate on Mr. Lancaster's bill respecting the ne temere decree was carried by a slim Government majority in the Commons early this morning, the debate has been practically continued all day in the corridors, and many members on the Ministerial side who voted to shelve the embarrassing subject have been hearing by wire to-day from their constituents that their action is not considered by any means what was required or expected, and are being given fair notice that they will be called on for further explanations. Pre-election promises and declarations are being recalled, and the chickens are apparently coming home to roost.

Ontario Conservatives.

There are at least a score of the Ontario Conservative members who are badly frightened and a number of them are already regretting that they did not have the courage of their convictions, refuse to hear the crack of the party whip and obey the law of self-preservation as did the five recalcitrants from Ontario who stuck to their guns.

The round-up of the intending "bolters" was accomplished only after strenuous efforts on the part of the party whips, and at the personal intervention of some of the Ministers, who for a time actually feared that the Government's majority was in jeopardy. The recalcitrants were buttonholed in the corridors by Chief Whip Stanfield, Hon. Robert Rogers, Major Currie, and a number of assistant stand-patters, and the tension was not removed until the vote was actually taken. Liberal cheers greeted the votes of Mr. Tom Wallace and Col. Clark for the Government amendment, despite their declarations of but a few hours before that they stood by the Lancaster bill and by every word uttered by the member for Lincoln. Similar cheers greeted the vote of Hon. Col. Sam Hughes, who took his medicine smilingly.

Mr. Lancaster Stood Firm.

One of the most humorous incidents were the repeated attempts to get Mr. Lancaster to leave the chamber and come out in the corridor, where he could be quietly argued with from the standpoint of party loyalty and discipline. His somewhat brusque turning down of all advances with a stubborn wave of his hand was highly relished by the Liberal onlookers. The member for Lincoln boldly declared to-day that if it had not been for the efforts of the Whips and the pressure brought to bear by the Ministers over a score of Ontario Conservatives would have voted with him, and the oGvernment's majority might have been entirely wiped out.

Not Yet Out of the Weeds.

Members of both sides of the House are now wondering as to what extent last night's action by the Government has really relieved the situation. The Government has apparently played for time, but the uncertainty as to the real effect of the "ne temere" decree with regard to the validity of mixed marriages still exists. Nor is the agitation for final action by the Government likely to subside. Interest now centres in the terms of the Government's reference to the question, to the courts and the men appointed to argue it out there. It is asserted that there will be no mad rush on the part of the Government to secure a speedy decision, which would tend to bring the matter up in the House again and compel a definite statement of policy regarding this thorny question.

An English Chemist Has Discovered How to Grow Hair

In England the ladies have entirely abandoned wearing rats, which is due entirely to this new discovery.

It has been proven that Henna leaves contain the ingredients that will positively grow hair. That they contain this long-looked-for article is proven every day.

The Americans are now placing on the market a preparation containing the extract from Henna leaves, which is having a phenomenal sale.

This preparation is called SALVIA, and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed, SALVIA makes a most pleasant hair dressing. McDermid and Jury, your druggist, is the first to import this preparation into Peterborough, and a large, generous bottle can be purchased for 50c. Also sold at Payne's drug store.

Skating at Brock Street Rink Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, afternoon and evening, this week. 1d-20

SAGEINE GIRLS

There are many of them; they are always noticeable and distinguished because of their hair. Thick, heavy tresses of soft, silky and luxuriant hair; free from dandruff and glowing with all the radiance and beauty of the greatest adornment of women.

SAGEINE is the only preparation known to science that will make the hair so noticeably beautiful; SAGEINE is now sold in Peterborough by W. J. Kent who with each bottle gives his personal guarantee to refund the money if Sageine does not do all that is claimed for it.

Sageine is the favourite in every home; it merits its popularity because it is not sticky or greasy and it is not a dye. W. J. Kent sells a large bottle for 50c.

WILL VOTE ON LOCAL OPTION

A meeting of the City Temperance League was held in the Y.M.C.A. last evening for the purpose of discussing the temperance situation. A resolution was unanimously carried calling for the inauguration of a local option campaign to be conducted, with a view to voting on the same on January 1st 1913. A public meeting will be called at an early date to further discuss the question.

This meeting or the meeting to come has no connection whatever with the county convention or the Dominion Alliance meeting, which will be held in the city on Sunday next.

The meeting was an enthusiastic one, and many expressions of opinion were passed dealing with the question.

NO TIME FOR DAINTY SHOES

One Young Woman Waited at a Drug Store for a Change of Footwear

Shoes, meant only for daintiness, have no business out in this weather. Big, heavy cowhides, thick, woollen hose, are the only coverings for the feet when the mercury draws itself way down below the nothing mark. But that isn't the story; here it is:

She got a north-bound Auburn car this morning, about 9 o'clock. A pretty face peered out from the depths of her black fur hood. The rest of her little self was lost in the warm folds of a pony-coat—that is, all except a pair of dainty tan shoes.

Suddenly a stifled groan came from the bunch of fur.

"Oh, dear, did you hear me cry out?" she asked of a blushing young man, across the aisle. "I could not help it, though. I just know my feet are frozen.

There was evidently little warmth in the "warmer." She hated to cry before all those men. She couldn't keep from it, though. So—she cried, just as the car came to a grinding stop at —— street.

"If it's all right with you, miss, we will get off here, and go into the drug store on the corner. You can get your feet warm there, I know.

"Al right, and I'll s—send h—home for some de—decent shoes and s—stockings, too; she sobbed as she left the car, leaning on her Sir Walter Raleigh.

Funeral Of Late R. M. Roy

The remains of the late Mr. Robt. Maitland Roy were laid to rest in Belleville yesterday. The funeral left the late residence of the deceased, 90 Hunter street, at 8 o'clock and the remains were conveyed to Belleville by the G. T. R. 8.30 train. The pallbearers at Peterborough were Messrs. R. M. Roy, E. J. Roy, F. L. Roy, F. P. Flagler, A. M. Simmons and R. Denne.

At the Belleville station the body was met by a large number of his old friends, and a representation from the Masons and Oddfellows. The procession proceeded to St. Thomas' Church, where almost the whole of the surviving members of the Veterans' Association, of which the deceased was an esteemed member, had assembled. At the service, which followed, Rev. Canon Beamish officiated, and was assisted by the Rev. Canon Davidson, who also officiated at the graveside. The pallbearers were composed of representatives of the Veterans' Association, and of the Masons.

The large attendance at the funeral was augmented by delegates from the local lodges of the Masons and Oddfellows, who assembled to show a last token of regard to a citizen, who was universally respected.

There was a display of floral tributes and amongst them were wreaths from the local lodges of the Masons and Oddfellows.

Wor. Bros. Andrew Davidson, Wm. Alex. Gibson and J. G. M. Wilson, of Peterborough Lodge, and J. D. Craig, of Corinthian Lodge, represented the Peterboough Masonic fraternity.

What Value Do You Put On Your Eyesight?

We have people come to us, after they have tried all kinds of cheap Glasses, bought from some house to house fakir, or picked out of an assortment of "cheap glasses" in a haphazard way. In buying glasses to suit your Sight, you cannot afford to take any chance. The small difference of price should not be considered when the question of Eyesight is involved. Remember we guarantee all our work, and our prices are very reasonable, considering the quality of goods we handle.

THOUGH IT'S "ONLY A GOLD"—STOP IT BEFORE IT STOPS YOU

Have you ever heard of a case of bronchitis, pneumonia, inflammation of the lungs, or pleurisy that did not start with a common cold?

Every cold you catch has in it the makings of one or other of these diseases, if it can break down your defences. And even if it does not develop into something more dangerous, it will keep you thoroughly miserable for a week or five at least.

The wise course, as soon as you feel the cold coming on, is to start taking Mo-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne, and keep it up till the cold is knocked out completely. This splendid cough syrup will do the trick quickly and thoroughly.

You can feel perfectly safe in taking Mo-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne, or in giving it to your children. We'll gladly give your physician a list of its ingredients if you like. Your Druggist can supply either 25c. or 50c. bottles. The National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited. 117

EXCELLENT.

Canada is the home of an ex-Government, an ex-navy, and now of an ex-canal. This is getting to be a great country for X's.—Toronto Telegram.

Why not add an ex-traordinary number of ex-civil servants since the Borden ex-ecutioners began to exercise their power.—Guelph Mercury.

THE NE TEMERE BACK-DOWN.

On Monday in Parliament, according to promise, Mr. Lancaster, M.P., of Lincoln, introduced his bill against the Ne Temere decree, or as he himself explains it—his bill

"To override and annul article 127 of the civil code of the Province of Quebec insofar as it affects the validity of marriage on the grounds of the religion of either of the contracting parties."

The merits of the matter in question are properly debatable, especially in view of conflicting opinions as to the constitutional competency of parliament to deal with it; but there is no matter of doubt of the contradictory and inconsistent position into which it has forced the Conservative government and Conservative supporters of the government; or any doubt of the fact that retribution is coming upon the party in chunks over the false position and false appeals upon which power was gained. During and before the late Dominion elections, the Laurier government was denounced in the most bitter and relentless terms, for "truckling to the church of Rome," for "pandering to Quebec prejudices and opinion," for "neglecting or refusing to take the Ne Temere bull by the horns." The brilliant member of West Peterborough scouted in the press and on the platform the idea that effective legislation on the subject was not within the power of the Dominion government—only elect him and his party and we should see what short work would be made of the "odious" Ne Temere decree and the work it stood for. Yet we see in the House that when a revolting Conservative member who has the courage of his convictions, and lives up to a pretence of consistency, brings matters to a focus the brilliant and doughty member for West Peterobrough, backs down with the bulk of the followers of Mr. Borden and, with him, takes refuge in the very plea of lack of jurisdiction, for which the Laurier government, was sent to Coventry. They voted for delay; they voted for shelving indefinitely, a question which we were told only a few months ago, was such a tremendous peril to the British constitution, so great a menace to the Canadian confederation, that unless the "truly loil," hastened to the polls and elected the Conservative candidates, we should be robbed of our liberties, have our throats cut, our children bastardised, our wives and husbands torn apart, and suffer an indefinite catalogue of horrors.

The electors, under the influence of the frenzy thus aroused, took the demagogues at their word, and elected the saviours of the country, the guardians of the marriage bond to Parliament. Hardly were they seated at the door of opportunity than they went back on their whole record and basis of appeal; they voted for delay in the matter of settling the Ne Temere decree. It is to be battle-dored and shuttle-cocked from Parliament to the Supreme court; from the Supreme court to the Privy council, and in the course of such events, it will be years before a decision is reached.

Mr. Borden has shelved a matter, whose settlement off hand was demanded of Sir Wilfrid Laurner, and who was condemned as a traitor, because he took the same position as Mr. Borden is taking now. When he was practically a party to the abuse of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he knew in his heart that Sir Wilfrid was right, yet he profitted from the attacks made upon him, he accepted power, gained on the basis of appeals that he knew were unfounded, and strained, and for this he has his punishment, in a divided following, in seeing one after another of his supporters combat his opinion and antagonize his attitude upon the Ne Temere bill. Such Conservative stalwarts as Wallace of Centre York; Maclean of South York; Clark of North Bruce, and Northrup of East Hastings, added themselves to the Lancaster emeute, and condemned the action of their leader. But they ran with the hare and hunted with the hounds. They talked valorously to the gallery to keep themselves solid with the element, by whose help they were elected, and at the crack of the party whip voted against their publicly expressed convictions—all except Mr. Maclean and Mr. Lancaster.

All this is very amusing to the onlooker who does not think deeply enough to see what it all means; to see how the sacred responsibilities of representation are made the football fo party aggrandizement, with party as the first consideration and principle and solicitude for the public good a very slow second.

HUSHI DR. MERCHANT IS GOING TO WRITE.

(Toronto Star.)

Isn't it curious how rumours get abroad? During the time when the recent Provincial elections were on, a highly respectable but somewhat heated citizen called at the Star office claiming that he was prepared to prove that Dr. Merchant in the middle of last year's black bass season was so busy preparing his report to the Whitney government on the bilingual school question that he was unable to accept the invitation of certain old friends to depart even for a day, and help rescue certain deserving black bass from watery graves.

Dr. Merchant is known to be a most humane man as regards black bass. He hates to think of a genuine smallmouth being bolted by a pike or held up in front of a camera by a Kalamazoo tourist. Yet he didn't go fishing. The reason according to the story as it reached us at the time, was that he couldn't go fishing because he was doing his home work.

As we have said, this story was abroad at the time of the Provincial elections, and it seemed to mean that Dr. Merchant's report was then finished and ready to be called for; but, with that extreme caution which is characteristic of The Star, we declined to believe that Dr. Merchant's report was ready until Dr. Merchant put it on the counter with a sign "Take One" in front of it.

And now we are glad that we kept quiet, because in the News last night we read that Dr. Merchant's report is not ready yet. He is still investigating, and he is investigating still. He has not commenced to write his report, but will proceed to draw it up next month. This goes to show how rumours get about. What an awkward fix The Star would have been in if we had announced that Dr. Merchant could not go bass fishing because he was busy writing his report on bilingual schools, whereas, as we now learn, he is only going to begin to start to write his report in March of the following year. We would have been months ahead of the event. The moral of it is that a newspaper, to be safe, should not announce anything until it has waited until next year to see if it is all right. Another moral is that an angler should never let anything keep him away from the black bass.

COL. SAM'S VICTORY.

(Ottawa Free Press)

The official announcement that the Borden Government has, upon the advice of the Minister of Militia, adopted the Ross rifle as the national arm of the Canadian militia, is a distinct triumph for the gallant colonel.

Who, amongst those who recall the thunders of oratorical attack made against the Ross rifle for years by the whole Conservative party in and out of the Commons (with the exception of Col. Sam), would have dared to predict that the whole party would, within six months of attaining to office, adopt the arm which they then condemned.

There was a division in the Commons on May 23, 1906, upon a vote of censure upon Sir Frederick Borden, and the Laurier Government for having adopted the Ross rifle. Among those who voted against the Ross rifle on that occasion were: R. L. Borden, G. E. Foster, G. H. Perley, members of the present cabinet, and among the present members who voted against the Ross rifle were Messrs. Armstrong, of Lambton, Cockshutt, Crocket, Fowler, McLean of Queen's, Porter, Schaffner, Sproule, and Wright, of Muskoka. It was a small vote, but the pairs counted as votes and among the Conservatives who paired against the Ross rifle were Messrs. Marshall, Ames, Notrup, Elson, Lennox (Macdonell, Lancaster, Boyce, Clements, Henderson, Haggart, Paquet, Osler, Broder, Barker, Beattie, Bennett, Blain, Brabazon, Bristol, Clare, Lewis, W. F. Maclean, Stanfield and Staples.

This was the memorable occasion upon which Col. Sam, replying to the taunts and sneers of G. W. Fowler, asserted that he would be the Minister of Militia, and predicted that when that time came he would continue the use of the Ross rifle. He is not only a good prophet, but an excellent hand at making a party swallow itself.

The Opposition should have pleasure and provide considerable amusement by reading some of the incidents of the anti-Ross rifle debates when the militia estimates are reached.

MRS. GEO. BUTLER TELLS WHAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS DID FOR HER.

She was tired, nervous and run down and suffered from pains in the back. — Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

Paquetville, Gloucester Co., N.B., Jan. 23.—(Special)—That Dodd's Kidney Pills are suffering woman's best friend was never better demonstrated than in the case of Mrs. Geo. Butler, a well-known and highly respected resident of this place.

"My trouble was brought on by hard work," Mrs. Butler tells her friends. "For four years I suffered from pain in the back. I was always tired and nervous. My head ached and I had dark circles under my eyes, which were also puffed and swollen.

"I was in a generally run-down condition and feling very much discouraged when I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I can only say I found relief at once."

The mainspring of woman's health is the kidneys. If the kidneys are right the blood will be pure. Pure blood is absolutely essential to good health. Dodd's Kidney Pills make the kidneys right.

Cured of Shingles and Eczema

Mr. J. H. Jarvis, Kingston

By Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Chest Raw, Bleeding and Itchy.

"I just want to say a good word for Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In November, 1909, I had what the doctors call shingles and eczema. My chest was raw and bleeding and itchy. I was that way all winter. It was not so bad in the summer. In September it got worse. I had the best doctors treating me, but did me no good, and I was all run down in health. In November, 1910, it got worse again. I sent to you for a sample cake of Cuticura Soap. You sent it to me and I got a box of Cuticura Ointment. I have used two boxes and on the third one it has cured me of shingles and eczema. I am delighted with them and do feel pleased to think I have something I have confidence in. Should anyone be suffering as I did, I hope that they will do as I did, and I am sure of the results. I am recommending them from experience." (Signed) J. H. Jarvis, 7 Ann St., Kingston, Ont., May 30, 1911.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have afforded the speediest and most economical treatment for itching, burning, scaly and bleeding skin and scalp humors, of young and old. A single set is often sufficient. Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world, but to those who have suffered much, but hope and are without faith in any treatment, a liberal sample of each with 32-p. booklet on the skin will be mailed free, on application. "THE SECRET OF PAUL FARLEY"

"Now, that's a rock I'm afraid you'll strike against and go to pieces on," she said, with a ghost of a smile, moving her chair a trifle closer to his and putting a hand on his knee. "There's no question of sentiment, love, engagement, or marriage between us; we like each other immensely, we are good friends and comrades; nothing more, and never will be. Mr. Farley would tell you the same if you asked him."

"Why did you meet him in the summer house?" he asked, smiling.

"Why, because he is in a fearful muddle," she said eagerly. "A certain lady in the neighbourhood says he has proposed to her, and he says he has not, and doesn't want to be bothered with any of the women in the place. His chief aim and object in life now is to get free of her, so he thought he would tell the tale to me before he mentioned it to Felix, because he said sometimes a woman's wit is keener and sharper than a man's."

"Well, and you were so kind and sympathetic that he took you in his arms and kissed you, is that it?"

"Yes, he did that," she acknowledged, looking down, a little confused, "but I hadn't helped him much because Felix arrived before he had commenced his tragic story."

To her astonished delight he leaned back in his chair and gave vent to a spontaneous burst of laughter.

"Poor fellow, poor Farley," said the doctor, wiping his eyes; "and dear old Felix didn't see the humorous side of the situation?"

"No ;don't you see Mr. Farley has told Felix ever so many times he did not mean to marry, and has talked against marriage and all that, so Felix thought we were deceiving him; that Mr. Farley was making secret love to me, and all the time he did not mean anything."

"So there is absolutely nothing between you young people, except the kissing—how do you account for that?" he asked, looking steadily into her large truthful eyes.

"I can't account for it," Agnes said, meeting the look without flinching, without the quiver of an eyelid. "I wish I could; at anyrate, I'll try. It was like this:: Mr. Farley came up here after a good dinner, all warm, comfortable, and happy, and I met him after a long, cold journey. My feet were numb and my fingers frozen, and he took my hands in his warm ones and tried to get some circulation into them. Felix was close by in the stables, and we were both excited by the feeling that he might come upon us at any moment; excited by a sense of danger, by a secret lonely meeting at night with the moon shining and the fresh wind blowing through the crackling leaves about us; and suddenly turning silly and bold, I said he grew better looking every day; and being impulsive, easily moved, and flattered, he caught me in his arms and kissed me—and —; Dr. Hunter, I wouldn't mind taking my oath that he never meant an atom of harm, or that there was a single wrong thought in his head, any more than if if had been Felix himself. Can you understand—do you believe me?"

"I think you have been most explicit; you have put the matter quite clearly and aptly, Miss Agnes, and I have no hesitation whatever in believing and accepting your explanation."

"Felix wouldn't," she said, the tears coming into her eyes.

"I daresay not, but there's a whole world of difference between us. Felix is your brother, and I, Agnes, your—lover!"

"Then you don't mind about Mr. Farley?"

"Not a bit," he said, taking the little nervous hand fluttering on his knee into a warm, safe, substantial clasp; "he's left your heart for me to try and win, and the rest, my dear, don't count."

"You are very kind," she said, nervously, trying to laugh.

"Am I?" he asked pleasantly. "I wonder whether you'll be kind to me, and, in spite of my being an old fogey, try to like me?"

"I do like you," she said with an unmistakable earnestness.

"Enough to marry me?" he whispered, bending towards her, his heart beating like a girl's.

"Yes, quite," she said, sliding to her knees beside him. "I would like to marry you. I am almost sure that I love you."

He opened his arms, and she crept close to him and laid her face against his neck.

"I am old enough to be your father," he said, rubbing his chin on her soft cheek.

"All the better," she said, laughing. "I want somebody old enough to take proper care of me; Felix said I couldn't take care of myself."

"Felix hasn't been very polite of late."

"Yes, he has, until this evening. I never saw him so enraged before, and the extraordinary part is, he professed and seemed to be so attached to Mr. Farley."

"So he is, darling. Nothing much escapes the professional eye, and I know he is mad, simply mad on Farley. He wouldn't have cut up rough like this if the affection had not been deeply rooted and his heart very much engaged. You see, Agnes, if Felix looks upon this affair in the light you say he does, it must have been a blow to him to discover that the two people he loves best in the world were conspiring together to deceive him. I know our Felix, I know his heart and conscience are as tender as a woman's, but just now he feels like a man who has been wounded in the house of his friends."

"Yes, and the worst of it is he'll persist in thinking so," she said wearily.

"No, he won't," he said cheerfully. "I'll see him before I go, and put matters as plain and as straight as I can. By the way, Agnes, what do you think he will say to this May and December engagement?"

"I won't marry you if I hear you say again you are old, or make disrespectful allusions to your age," she said, with a charming pout. "It's too absurd; you look younger than Felix. You looked fresh and rosy, and quite boyish when you came in to-night, and Felix looked old and cross and horrid."

"So that's how you flattered Farley?" he asked, looking askant at her. "Of course, I may take a leaf out of his book and reward you for the delicate compliment?"

"Oh, no," she said, laughing and colouring; "that's different; I—he is only a silly boy, Dr. Hunter."

"My name is Jack," he said gravely; "but perhaps you didn't know," and bending suddenly he kissed her on the lips.

She blushed scarlet and looked so abashed that he felt almost inclined to apologize. But instead he buttoned his coat and fidgetted round the room until she had in some degree recovered from her bashful surprise.

"Agnes," he said, putting his arm around her, "have you any choice about the ring?"

"Not any," she said, looking into the fire; "I shall be satisfied with whatever you choose."

"Have you any choice about the courting; would you rather not be kissed?"

She looked up into his love-lit eyes, and saw there the devotion of his heart in all its depth and grandeur. The effect was as a lightning touch: She saw heaven in a glance. The sweet idolatry enslaved her, and raising her arms swiftly she clasped them around his neck, drew his head down to hers, and kissed him."

"Thats my answer," she whispered, glad smiles and truant tears chasing each other in her eyes. "I love you, you understand, Jack; I love you."

He saw the love in its budding beauty; he felt the magic of its smile; his heart shouted with joyous victory, and he breathed an inward thanksgiving for his happy, hallowed lot as he went softly out from the [illegible] and found Felix to — keeping-room.

The Squire was seated in a roomy leather chair, his feet on the steel rim of the stove, his pipe in his mouth reading.

"I expect you thought I was gone," he said, addressing the back of Felix's head, "but I've been waiting for my trap to come back; I sent Farley home in it."

There was no answer. Doctor Hunter thought the book must be a very interesting and engrossing one, as Felix was not particularly fond of readying any printed matter, save the daily organs of news; consequently the idea occurred to him that Felix might possibly have caught up the book at random on hearing his approach to avoid discussing a disagreeable topic'

"Look here, Felix," he said, going around the chair and laying a not very gentle hand on his shoulder, "just pay attention to me for a minute. I want to talk to you about Farley. Hard lessons and rough discipline are all very well in theory, but you had no right, no business, to thrash that boy as you have. There was no rhyme or reason in it."

"Indeed!" he says, closing the book, "who says so?"

Kidney Pains in the Back

Could Not Stand or Even Turn in Bed —Legs Greatly Swollen

All Doctor's Medicine Failed—Cure Effected by Use of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Again this great medicine has triumphed over kidney disease of a severe type. From a bed of suffering and helplessness Mrs. Walsh was restored to health and strength by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Kidney pains in the back tortured her. Dropsical swellings had set in and she had no reason to hope for cure since the doctor's medicine failed to even relieve her. Read what the husband says about this remarkable cure.

Mr. Thos. D. Walsh, Pictou, N.S., writes: "Two years ago my wife took to her bed after suffering for a long time from kidney pains in the back. She was not able to stand on her feet or even turn herself in bed. The doctor's medicine was no benefit whatever, that we could see. Sometimes her legs would swell considerably. Reading about a woman in similar condition being cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, we purchased two boxes, ad when these were used she was able to sit up. With three more boxes she was restored to health and doing her own housework.

"As for myself I also found these pills all that is claimed for them. I give this statement in order that others may obtain the same ease from suffering as that experienced by my wife and myself."

HEART DISEASE CURED

Kingston Girl Saved by "Fruit-a-tives"

Heart Weakness and Heart Irritation are the common outgrowth of Indigestion. Gas is formed in the stomach and this accumulation of gas bulges out the walls of the stomach and presses against the heart. Palpitation, pain over the heart, and sometimes a feeling of smothering and dizziness, all are caused by the stomach trouble and because of any organic heart disease.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure this weak, irritated condition of the heart by curing the stomach.

91 CLERGY St., Kingston, Ont.

"I suffered for some years with a dangerous form of Heart Trouble. My heart beat violently, and I had pain over the heart, and down the arms. I also suffered with Constipation and Indigestion. I was treated by physicians and took many remedies, but nothing did me any good. Then I began taking "Fruit-a-tives", and this medicine completely cured me of all the heart trouble, constipation and indigestion, and gave me back perfect health." (Miss) MABLE TODD.

Well nourished soldiers fight best, and well nourished people always do the best work. Keep your stomach in good order with Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron remedy without oil, and you will be strong.

Mrs. G. H. Mackins, of New York City, says: "For weeks last spring I had no appetite and poor digestion. I knew my strength would fail if I did not build myself up so I took Vinol, as recommended by a friend.

"Vinol restored my appetite and strengthened my digestion so that I now eat heartily and enjoy my food. It has done me 'heaps' of good."

Weak, nervous men and women and sickly children all need Vinol to give them new strength and better blood. McEwen At London

(London Advertizer)

Sickened at the sight of a pin rammed through the tongue of a sleeping man, and another through the palm of the hand of a conscious subject, several ladies in the audience at the London Grand Opera House, on Saturday evening, collapsed.

Three fainted away in the balcony, and did not come around for some minutes. Ushers who ran downstairs for water found a couple of men at the water faucets, splashing water in their faces.

McEwen, the hypnotist, in giving an educational talk on the possibilities of hypnotism, demonstrated that surgical operations could be performed painlessly and without loss of blood without the use of anaesthetics. By mesmerism he first stuck a pin through the muscle at the side of a young man's hand, and sent him into the audience to have it withdrawn by a spectator. He next hypnotized another subject, and drawing forth the tongue, pushed the pin through until the point protruded.

It was then that the fainting commenced, and three of the ladies had to be removed from the audience by ushers.

WEDDING BELLS

CONWAY—CAREY.

The Sacred Heart church was the scene of a quiet but pretty wedding this morning, when Mr. Walter Gordon Conway of Milton, Ont., and Miss Olive Mary Carey of Otonabee, were united in the bond of holy matrimony.

The Rev. Dr. O'Brien performed the ceremony, and the witnesses were Mr. James Carey and Miss Pearl McCann of Keene.

Successful Dance And Social Evening

A most successful "At Home" was held in the officers' quarters at the armouries last night, under the auspices of Lieut.-Col. E. B. Clegg and officers of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers. There were about sixty-five couples present and the dance was thoroughly enjoyed. The exhibition was made picturesque in appearance by the scarlet dress suits of the officers and the handsome gowns of the ladies. The room was magnificently decorated with shields and bunting by J. J. Turner and Sons.

Excellent music was supplied by the Opera House orchestra under the leadership of Mr. Dewey, the Greene Music Co., supplying the piano. The guests of honour for the evening were the officers and ex-officers of the 24th Field Battery and 3rd Dragoons.

About 12 o'clock, dainty refreshments were served in the recreation rooms, T. H. Hooper officiating as caterer.

The patronesses were as follows: Mrs. E. B. Clegg, Mrs. L. M. Hayes, Mrs. J. C. Davidson, Mrs. V. Eastwood, Mrs. J. Mills, Mrs. J. H. Eastwood.

The following were the members of the Dance committee: Major L. M. Hayes, Major D. Walker, Capt. A. P. McLean, Capt. W. H. Clurton, Capt. A. W. McPherson, Capt. W. G. R. Higgins, Lieut. C. R. Cameron, Lieut. C. H. Ackerman, Lieut. K. G. Lech. The dance did not break up until about two o'clock.

Here is a remedy that will cure your cold. Why waste time and money experimenting when you can get a preparation that has won a world-wide reputation by its cures of this disease and can always be depended upon? It is known everywhere as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and is a medicine of real merit. For sale by all dealers.

POLICE COURT

Antoine Lasour was arraigned before Magistrate Dumble in the Police Court this morning, charged with the seduction of a little fifteen-year-old girl. The Chief was not ready to proceed with the case, so an adjournment until Friday, Jan. 26th, was necessary. C. Blodgett went surety for $500.00 and the accused was allowed out on bail.

Wilfrid Ireland, a cook from the Peterborough Lumber Co's. camp, came into the city yesterday, and got a little too much of the cheering medicine, and, as a result of his disorderly conduct, was lodged in the cells. He was discharged this morning.

A man named Catlow, who came here in September from Quebec, and who has been employed as a trail cutter, in the woods, was arraigned on a vagrancy charge. He has been a lodger at the Police Station all week. A local man offered him work this morning, and the Magistrate allowed him to go.

SPECIAL SERMONS

A special series of sermons will be preached at Park Street Church at the evening services, commencing next Sunday, in order to try and answer several questions which have lately been put into the pastor's question boxes, inquiring about the religious indifference of the present day, and the existence of so many different denominations. The subjects will be as follows:

January 28th, 7 p.m., "Did Christ establish one or two churches?"
Feb. 4th, "Does the Church of Christ Exist To-day?"
Feb. 11th, "Where Can This Church be Found?"
Feb. 18th, "Of whom is it composed?"
Feb. 25th, Grand Ligne Day, "The Tragedy of Quebec." Address by Rev. E. Bosworth of Montreal, who knows Quebec's need of the Gospel.

NOT ONE WOMAN IN TWENTY HAS A STRONG BACK.

THE KIDNEYS ARE TO BLAME NINE TIMES OUT OF TEN.

Women are coming to understand that weak, lame and aching backs from which they suffer are due to wrong action of the kidneys.

The poisons that ought to be shovied off are sent back into the blood, taking with them a multitude of aches and pains. There is no use of expecting relief until the kidneys are restored to health.

Doan's Kidney Pills are the quickest and most reliable remedy. Mrs. Ed. Baxter, Upham, N.B., writes:—"I take a good deal of pleasure in telling you what Doan's Kidney Pills have done for me. I was troubled with my kidneys for a number of years, and my back was so lame I could not sweep the floor. A friend of mine advised me to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and after using three boxes I am as well as ever. I highly recommend them to anyone suffering from lame back or kidney trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box, or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Mr. Burnham's Contortions

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—It is very interesting to notice Mr. J. H. durnham's contortions. He went about the country and wrote to the papers on the creed question and the Ne Temere decree. Now, when the thing could have been disposed of yesterday in the House of Commons for all time to come, Mr. Burnham turns right about face and now votes that the whole question be postponed indefinitely.

He was very hot about the decree a short time ago, but now when the whole thing could be disposed of and the Government compelled to validate all marriages performed by Protestant ministers, he throws up his hands and quits although he received hundreds of votes of the Protestant confederation.

As a Protestant I feel that we have been very much duped by Mr. Burnham's promises and I assure him that I and my friends have long memories.

He put it all over Mr. Kendry and some others by having a recommendation made by a few of the committee, who nominated themselves to fat offices, that Mr. Kendry be made a senator. As soon as Mr. Burnham's election, the senatorship campaign seems to have gone dead.

About the only thing that he has done is to put Harry Phelan, a rich man, in a good fat office and turn out Daddy Taylor at Christmas time, besides dismissing John Crown and a number of others.

I personally, I am sick and disgusted with the whole transaction, according to the way Mr. Burnham has manipulated things.

Yours truly,
A PROTESTANT.

IMPORTANT TO MOTHERS!

Mothers should know just why Zam-Buk is so effective in cases of rashes, scalp sores, pimples and eruptions on babies and young children.

Most ordinary salves contain animal oil and fat. Every housewife knows that if animal oil or fat be left exposed to air for any length of time putrefactive changes must occur. These changes occur none the less even if they are hidden by scent.

Now, any salve which sinks into the pores enters the blood. You would not feed your child impure food. Why put into its blood rancid animal fats?

Zam-Buk contains no trace of animal fat or oil or any mineral poison. It is compounded of healing herbal juices and essences.

Applied to cuts, burns, bruises and skin injuries it allays pain, kills disease germs and heals. Sold everywhere at 50c. box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The new Y.W.C.A. rooms, opened some three weeks ago at 133 Rubidge street, are proving to be as popular as was anticipated by the association. During each noon hour the lunch room is filled with business girls, principally from the C. G. E. works, who seem to appreciate the bright, pleasant rooms. There is also time during the hour for a story or a game, or it may be a rest on one of the couches. The reading room tables are filled with new magazines and papers, which are much used during the hour.

On Saturday afternoon a sleigh-ride party was enjoyed, the girls returning for supper and a social hour.

The house is open and free for all employed girls and we would again extend a cordial invitation for all such girls to use the rooms freely both noons and evenings.

Will Prepare An Estimate

The City Engineer has been instructed to get approximate estimates on the Hunter street bridge. He stated to an Examiner reporter this morning that he would be unable to prepare the estimates until he had finished the tax estimate, which will be concluded in the course of three weeks. Mr. Hay stated that he could only make an approximate estimate at present, as it will be necessary to draw a plan of the bridge to secure a minute estimate. It would be also necessary to drill some holes near the base of the piers, in order to ascertain the nature of the foundation for the piers for a heavy bridge. Other extensive investigations would have to be made also, which would cost a large sum. The Engineer stated that an exact estimate, calling for all these operations, would not be attempted until spring, owing to the condition of the river at that point. He added that it would take considerable money to prepare such an estimate, without going further with the work, but he thought the information would be very valuable to the city, even if no further action were taken.

COUNTY SCHOOL INSPECTOR LEES' REPORT PRESENTED

Inspector Reports an Encouraging Increase in the Salaries Paid in the Schools Under His Jurisdiction.

FIVE NEW SCHOOLS

Following is the report of County School Inspector Richard Lees, as presented to the County Council:

Gentlemen,—I beg, respectfully, to submit my report on the work of the schools in the Inspectorate of Peterborough East, for the year 1911.

During the year, there were in operation, in the inspectorate, 71 rural schools, with 75 teachers, and 3 village schools, with 20 teachers. In the work of supervision, I made 239 visits, 182 in rural schools and 57 in the villages. All the schools were open for at least 6 months, and all, except a few of the smaller, for the whole school year.

Of the 75 teachers in the rural schools during last term, 30 had Normal training, 12 had been trained at a Model School, and 3 had taken courses at Summer Training Schools. The remaining 30 had received no professional training. These last were distributed as follows: Asphodel 1, Belmont and Methuen, 10; Burleigh and Anstruther, 4; Chandos, 5; Douro, 3; Dummer, 5; and Otonabee, 2. It is safe to say that in Asphodel, Douro, Dummer and Otonabee, in most cases, qualified teachers could have been secured, had the trustees been vigilant, alert, and will ing to pay what, under existing conditions, are reasonable salaries. Some of these sections are now paying to teachers without certificates, salaries, which, when the consequent loss of grant is considered, will cost the section as much as if they paid $550 or $600 to qualified teachers. At that rate it is altogether probable that experienced teachers with certificates, could have been secured.

The frequency with which changes of teachers take place is illustrated by the fact that at midsummer last, 38 rural schools changed teachers, and, at present, in the 75 rural schools in the inspectorate, there are only 23 of the teachers that were there when I had the honour to report to you a year ago.

There has been an encouraging increase in the salaries paid. On the basis of the rate being paid during the fall term of 1910, the average was $400, while in the fall of last year, it had increased to $427, there being an aggregate increase of $2,929. The averages for townships are as follows:

	1910	1911
Asphodel	$429	$491
Belmont and Methuen	383	391
Burleigh and Anstruther	318	332
Chandos	276	306
Douro	408	444
Dummer	401	421
North Monaghan	456	475
Otonabee	480	506

While this increase is encouraging it is still far short of what will be necessary if we are to secure and retain the services of capable and efficient teachers. This will be apparent from the fact that in 1910, the average for the whole Province was $687, nearly a hundred dollars higher than for this inspectorate, and somewhat higher than for our best township.

The grants for the year were liberal and may be classified as follows:

Grants on account of—
Certificates	$ 425.00
Salaries	4624.00
First grant, $30 each for 28 schools	840.00
Accommodation and equipment	810.00
Rural School Libraries	167.33
Assisted schools	1476.00
Continuation schools	1002.20
Village schools	696.06
Total	$10,039.59

The County pays the equivalent of the grants to Continuation Schools, and for Accommodation and Equipment amounting to $1,812.20, making a total of $11,851.79.

Five new schools were erected during the year and are now either in use or nearing completion. They are in sections 11 and 13 Methuen, 4, Chandos, 6, Douro, and 16, Otonabee. They are all modern, in design, well lighted and ventilated and a credit to the sections. The two last mentioned are constructed with basements, and are heated with furnaces. In a number of the old schools, improved means of heating and ventilating have been installed during the year.

It is encouraging to note the increased attention that is being paid to the health and comfort of the pupils. With one or two exceptions, the very poor buildings in the inspectorate have now been replaced with new ones. Little progress has, as yet, been made in the way of improving or beautifying the grounds, and there are a few buildings that are urgently in need of repairs.

In the villages, there has been, during the past few years, marked improvement in the buildings and equipment, and though there is much yet to be desired, conditions are gradually improving.

The school building in the Village of Havelock was partially destroyed by fire on March 16th, but fortunately not so as to interfere to any great extent with the work of the school. It has been completely restored, a new heating system installed, and the older parts of the building renovated so that it is now in a better condition than ever before.

I have found the school boards of the Villages, for the most part, anxious to promote the best interests of their schools and so ready to give to any suggestions made with that end in view. The result is that conditions are steadily growing better, though not always as rapidly as one could wish.

On the whole, I have found the teachers earnest and industrious in the performance of their duties. Most of them, especially the more efficient and capable, are willing and eager to receive suggestions and to profit by the Inspector's visits. In my relationship to the teachers, it has been by desire to supervise, rather than inspect, and I have tried to so conduct my visits to the schools as to stimulate and encourage the teachers.

To a very large extent, the same may be said of the school boards. To many, the Inspector can be of service because they are willing to receive and act on suggestions, while to others he can be of little use. In some cases reports are never read, or, if they are, there is no merit to indicate it. Nothing is done except under compulsion ,and then as little as possible. Fortunately, there are not many of this class, but the few cases that there are and the consequent injury that results to the cause of education have led me to the conviction that the establishment of Township, or, perhaps, preferably, County Boards of Education, would be a long step on the road to progress and efficiency, in the management of the rural schools.

The Continuation schools continue to do excellent work. The success attained by the school at Lakefiled School at the Departmental examinations in July, was especially worthy of special mention. In view of the continued good work done by the schools, and the contribution they are making to the education of the community, I beg to repeat my recommendation of last year—that the County grant to them be materially increased.

All of which is respectfully submitted by

Your obedient servant,
Richard Lees,
Public School Inspector, Peterborough E.
Peterborough, Jan. 24, 1912.

AN EDITOR'S EXPERIENCE

From Winnipeg West to Edmonton I travelled over the new line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. To my mind the Grand Trunk Pacific is the last word in the railway world. A finer road bed, more luxuriant trains, or more courteous and efficient employees, I have never seen on railways, either in this country or in the country to the south of us.

It seems to me that a few personal experiences on the Grand Trunk Pacific may not be out of place here. These incidents will explain what I mean when I say that I was delighted with the service.

I left Winnipeg at 6 p.m. I had my seat reserved in Winnipeg, and boarded the car at 5.45. I removed my coat and hat, and was about to follow my usual custom of hanging them up when the train porter approached and took them from me. I noticed he did the same with all the other passengers. I later made inquiries and learned that the instructions to the porters are that no clothing, parcels, hats or baggage are to be permitted to disfigure the "parlor" car. All that can be removed by the porter he will take charge of. Passengers may retain such as they wish in their seats, but nothing is to be hung up or placed in the aisles.

This may seem a small affair, but you have no idea how handsome a parlour car looks when lighted up if there is nothing to disfigure the beauty of the interior. It was a revelation to me, and I could not but admit that this was a striking example of what attention to small details meant in the operation of a great railway.

The Grand Trunk Pacific has a new system of collecting tickets and fares on the train.

The train conductor has nothing at all to do with the handling of tickets or cash. His business is to manage his train and all the officials who operate the train. His authority is absolute on the train.

The tickets and fares are all collected by an official known as the "train agent."

The whole duty of the "train agent" is to look after tickets and fares and to keep a close record in this regard. He is an official that was new to me, and I was particularly interested in him. I was more particularly interested in him because of his extreme politeness to, and consideration for, his passengers.

In the West to-day the "train agent" steps up to you and makes a pleasant remark about the weather, or bids you "the time of day," and concludes with "Your ticket, please" He waits patiently till he gets it, and then invariably says: "Thank you".

If you are going far on his train he will tell you about the hour you will get to your journey's end. If the trip is short he will tell you two, three or four stations, as the case may be, and hand you a hat check.

I watched the first "train agent" I travelled with, and he treated every passenger in the car in the same courteous manner. It was pleasing to see it, and I tell you it pleased the travellers a mighty sight better than the old time poke in the ribs.

LaterI travelled on a local train between Watrous and Winnipeg, and I determined to watch if all "train agents" on the G.T.P. were as polite as the first one I saw. I was not doomed to disappointment. He was even more courteous and considerate of every passenger.—Vankleek Hill Review.

LUMBER IS GOING UP

Western Farmers Suffer From the Excessive Tariff

B. C. COMBINE TO BLAME

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—The tariff on lumber in the west raised a warm discussion in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon and J. G. Turriff (Assiniboia) made a smashing attack on the British Columbia lumber dealers whom he described as a trust.

Just as the House was preparing to vote supply Mr. Turriff moved a resolution declaring that the Minister of Customs, in instructing his officers to collect 25 per cent. duty in certain kinds of lumber, was violating the customs laws. The B. C. manufacturers raised the price on the western settler of the plains, to whom lumber was an essential of existence.

The new Government was "ever ready to turn the farmer down" at the behest of the combine.

A. S. Goodeve (Kootenay) replied to Mr. Turriff declaring that the latter had actually admitted that the free importation of this lumber by the connivance of the Laurier administration was the result of fraud, as his description of it, as planed on one side and edge, with the edge roughened by a fine saw, showed a manifest trick to get around the customs classification.

This loss to the farmer of the sale of his products to 9,000 British Columbia lumbermen, whose camps would be shut down by the foreign competition, would more than offset anything he might save on imported lumber.

The Government were building up home markets and inter-provincial trade. At the same time they were prepared to make an investigation into the allegations of Opposition members as to the existence of a lumber combine.

H. N. Stevens (Vancouver) denied the existence of a combine. If the Lumbermen's Association were one it had been in existence for many years and the blame for not checking it rested on the late Government.

The west was prepared to meet fair competition, but it was not prepared to be swamped by the overloaded stocks of United States manufacturers. He hoped the problem of restraining combines, if there were some, would be dealt with scientifically and thoroughly.

W. L. Knowles (Moose Jaw) read from the report of the lumber combine investigation committee several sessions ago, to show that a combine really existed. A member of the association actually had to ask permission before he was able to sell a stock of lumber below the prices fixed down in cold blood in their minute book."

It was a sad commentary on their administration that the first circular issued by the Department of Customs under the new regime was to instruct its officers that the law was again the law, and was to be enforced.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier got into a rather amusing controversy with Mr. Borden on the question: "When is a joint not a joint?" (jointed lumber is dutiable). He contended that the Government's reading of the law would allow the rich man's cabinet work to come in free, but taxed the poor settler's lumber.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden said that the Opposition leader's remarks on the subject of jointing were rather disjointed. There was no difference made between the rich and the poor man. Jointing capable of being used could be made by a fine saw such as was used by the American lumberman to evade the customs law.

Hon. Frank Oliver claimed that the British Columbia lumbermen had come down to Ottawa to demand the price of their adhesion to the Conservative cause in the elections, and the Minister of Customs had delivered the goods.

The milling industry in British Columbia, he said, was "atrociously overcapitalized" and the prairie settler was being bled to pay the interest on the watered stock.

Hon. J. D. Reid defied Mr. Turriff to name the man who had paid duty on lumber such as was mentioned in his amendment. That gentleman was a member of the House in 1907, when the 25 per cent. duty complained of was put on, and voted for it.

The amendment was declared lost in a straight party division at 12.20 a.m., on a vote of 107 to 62. The House adjourned at 12.25 a.m.

Hon. F. D. Monk announced that he had finally been able to get [illegible] on the tower clock. The time piece had a bad cold, contracted on Friday when the public accounts estimates were up in the House. He hoped the Opposition would remember this when the remainder of these estimates were under discussion.

On the motion to go into supply, W. A. Buchanan (Medicine Hat) directed the attention of the House to the serious car shortage in Alberta.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster claimed that the railways had done all they could under the exceptional circumstances of a late harvest, coal shortage and bad weather conditions.

The situation was still serious, however. The railways had nearly reached the limits of their storage facility. Further outlets or further storage would have to be provided.

The Minister of Agriculture announced, in response to a question, that he had arranged for a conference of fruit growers from all over Canada in three weeks time.

THREATENS TO KILL YUAN

Manchu Fire-eaters Anxious to Assassinate the Premier

PRINCES AFRAID OF HIM

Pekin, Jan. 24.—The advice of Yuan Shi Kai to await an attack by the rebels is distasteful to the younger princes, whose talk of war is alarming Pekin.

It is persistently reported that Tien-Liang, the former Tartar general at Nanking, who is largely responsible for the reaction, advocates the killing of Yuan Shi Kai, whose influence, he thinks, is so great that he should not be permitted to leave the capital. Yuan Shi Kai evidently foresees the possibility of an attack upon him and is adopting extreme precautions. Another 1,000 Chinese troops of the Imperial army from Paotingfu, in the Province of Chili, arrived here last evening, making Yuan Shi Kai's force of Chinese 4,000. Against these there are 12,000 Manchu troops of the Imperial army, who, it is suspected, are being incited against Yuan Shi Kai.

It is difficult to believe, however, that even the more hot-headed princes will countenance Yuan Shi Kai's assassination, which would assuredly entail the extinction of the claims, as the majority of the northern troops are loyal only to Yuan Shi Kai.

Yuan Shi Kai yesterday authorized The Canadian Press to make the following statement regarding his position:

He is inspired primarily by the desire to serve the best interests of the Chinese people, and not the interests of either the Republicans or Monarchists. That time will prove. He is seeking not selfish ends and hopes to continue in office, as Premier long enough to cause a proper election of members of the National Assembly, or otherwise ascertain the correct view of the majority of the people. As, however, a general election seems difficult to accomplish considering the attitude of the Republican leaders, he desires to bring about peace and some form of substantial government as quickly as possible. He would be willing to resign and deliver the control of the Government to any capable man who would, and could, find a solution to the best interests of China. Certain foreign legations had urged him or expressed the hope that he would continue in office, stating that they had confidence in his administration.

Expect 2,000 Delegates.

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—C. A. Magrath of the International Waterways Commission and W. A. Buchanan, M.P. for Lethbridge, yesterday entertained at luncheon the delegates who are here to secure a grant from the Federal Government towards the expenses of the international farming convention. The secretary, J. T. Burns, gave an interesting talk on the convention, which is proposed. About two thousand delegates are expected from all parts of the world.

Mr. Burns referred to dry farming as a world-wide subject of importance in that 55 per cent. of the earth's surface is operative only by that method. Eighty million acres of good tillable land still lies waiting for the plow in the dry farming districts of the west.

It is believed that the convention will not only be a decided stimulus to the particular movement, but also a large factor in the promotion of immigration to Canada.

German Loans Not Renewed.

Berlin, Jan. 24.—Despatches from New York, stating that the German banks had renewed the loans, amounting to $75,000,000, placed in New York, are described by bankers here as being incorrect. The bankers point out that the exchange rate having turned in Germany's favor, they have repaid large amounts borrowed in dollars, because it was profitable to repay at the present rate, and also that large amounts borrowed in marks have been notified for payment January 31. The bankers estimate that the remnant of American loans then remaining to Germany will amount to 75,000,000 marks at the maximum, about $18,000,000.

Farmer Ended His Life.

Chatham, Jan. 24.—Patrick Laguile, aged 40 years, suicided in a barn at the rear of his home in Edgar street last night, firing a 38 calibre revolver into his mouth. Worry over a payment on a farm he had bought is supposed to have led to the deed. Laguile was a hard working citizen and a teetotaler. He leaves a widow and a family of five children. He borrowed the revolver from a neighbor, saying his brother wanted the use of it.

Winnipeg Orangemen In Arms.

Winnipeg, Jan. 24.—The Orangemen of Manitoba have a fund of $5,415 to fight home rule in Ireland. This has been subscribed as a result of the action by the grand lodge in Brandon last March. It is to be used for speakers and halls in England to oppose home rule.

Here is a New Kind of COFFEE

And We Give You A Pot To Make It In—Free

Never sold in Bulk

To get to the heart of the coffee question, you must do as we did—get to the heart of the coffee berry. The coffee berry is protected by Nature from the insect world, by a tough inner shell or coat. This shell contains tannin and other bitter substances.

It is this shell, roasted and ground up with ordinary coffee, that causes indigestion, headaches and other ill-effects so common with coffee drinkers.

Yet there is no other beverage in the world so thoroughly wholesome healthful and delicious as good Coffee when properly made.

Never sold in Bulk

Dalton's French Drip Coffee

Is this good, wholesome, delicious coffee. It contains no chicory and by our special process of grinding, every particle of the bitter tannin-bearing shell is removed. We take out all the injurious parts. We leave the meat—the heart—the flavor—the aromatic essences that mean so much to coffee-lovers.

The Percolator, or French Drip Process, is the only way to make really good coffee. We have secured sole rights at last for a practical, economical, reliable French Drip Coffee Pot.

We will give it to you free so that you can try Dalton's French Drip Coffee as it should be made. Read our offer. We have put up Dalton's French Drip Coffee in two Blends

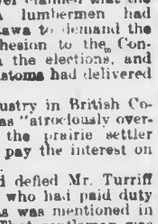
STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.



The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

GIVEN AWAY.—Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, new revised Edition, is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 31 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 50 stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet

For Schools, Hotels, Banks and Private Residences

Heretofore it has been impossible to install a Sanitary System of inside closet without water works and sewage, and you will agree with us when we say that the present outdoor system of closets are not only very insanitary, but are at the same time one of the most fruitful sources of both moral and physical ills.

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet is constructed principally for families and public bodies who live in a district where it is impossible to have waterworks and sewage. It can be placed in any part of a Residence, Store, School, Hotel, Bank, etc.

We have secured the Agency for this valuable Sanitary Closet, and invite investigation of its merits.

ANOTHER EASY WIN FOR PETERBOROUGH
TRENTON BEATEN HERE BY 17 GOALS TO 2

Locals Were Always in Front Although the Easterners Put Up Considerable Opposition at Times

LARGE CROWD PRESENT

The biggest crowd of the season saw the Peterborough team defeat their old rivals from Trenton in an intermediate O.H.A. game at Brock street rink last night in hollow fashion by 17 goals to 2. The Petes' record of not being scored upon in the second half still remains unbroken. Half way home they were in front 6 to 2, while in the second period they added eleven more, at the same time blanking Lawson Whitehead's proteges. Their victory last night was about as easy as the score would indicate. Trenton demoralized by the split in their ranks and the disaffection of Croft, had a weakened team, and although they worked hard all through, they had not the class, and the Petes, although a little off colour, especially in the first half, won under wraps.

It was a much better game than the Belleville fixture, if the hockey was not at all times of the speediest or most brilliant variety. Trenton furnished considerable opposition at times, thanks to the beautiful work of Art Armstrong, the speedy centre, who was always going, and whose stickhandling and rushing were magnificent. They had plenty of speed along the forward line and while they checked back in the first half they kept the score down. On the attack they were not so successful, Bond and Bearss holding them out in good style, forcing them to shoot from outside, and Derocher took care of the long distance heaves with his usual accuracy. Peterborough's forward line, especially in the first half, displayed a tendency towards too much individual work and glorious chances were thrown because the man with the rubber failed to pass at the proper time. The team-work was better in the second half, but at no time was the passing of that machine-like variety that should characterize the attacking department of championship aspirants. Probably the fact that they had an easy game was responsible for this, but at all events the absence of team work was very conspicuous. Individually, little fault was to be found. The forward line has the speed, stick-handling ability and they all shoot well, but they must develop better team work if they want to utilize these qualities to the best advantage.

Peterborough's defence was as good as usual. Derocher played his usual cool, careful game in the nets, looking after dozens of long shots and a few from close in in grand style. Only two beat him, one from the mouth of the net, on a combined rush and the other a beautiful shot by Art Armstrong. In front of him. Bond and Bearss proved a decidedly awkward proposition to get around. Their checking was effective all through, and both rushed well. On the forward line the individual honours went to the wing men, Kelly and Coughlin. The former's speedy runs down the left wing, and deadly shooting from the side, were decided factors in the scoring, while Coughlin's stick-handling was the best exhibition of individual work seen here this season. Capt. Park was ill and did not display his usual ginger at centre, although he worked hard all through, and, as usual, his shooting was effective. Giroux's back-checking stood out prominently, and the sturdy little rover worked overtime.

There was plenty of speed along the Trenton forward line, and what was more, they showed good combination in working down the ice. Had they tried to carry the passing game right in on the nets, instead of shooting from outside, they would have undoubtedly have made the score closer. Their shots, from well out, although in the main, accurate, were a light lunch for Derocher. Armstrong at centre, was the star of the team and no one on the ice had anything on the Trenton centre. His great speed and fine stick-handling, winding up with a wicked shot, made him always dangerous. Henry, at rover, was also effective, showing speed and cleverness, while Palmer, at right wing, was prominent in flashes. The defence was not out of the ordinary, although Pringle, in goal, kicked out some vicious shots and handled himself nicely.

Harvey Sproule handled the game satisfactorily, and had an easy task, the penalty list being light. During the game each goal keeper got nailed on the cocoa, with the gypsum, and the game had to be held up until they got their bearings.

The scoring summary shows how the goals were made. Peterborough started out by scoring the first, in thirty seconds, a speedy rush by Coughlin, and a neat pass to Park, resulting in a counter. Then Trenton held them for a period, and gave Derocher some work to do before Giroux, after six minutes' playing, scored again, on a shot from outside. Kelly made it 3 to 0, on a magnificent shot from the boards, and Coughlin added another pair, the second on a rush by Bearss. Trenton got going and secured their only scores at this stage, McGorman getting the first on a combined rush, and Armstrong, the second, on a shot following a face-off. Kelly got the last one of the half, following in his own shot and banging it past Pringle.

The second half was a procession, Peterborough getting eleven counters, while Trenton failed to score.

SOME SONGS ADOPTED BY THE ROOTERS' CLUB

The Rooters' Club has sent in the following list of songs, which will be used in the Lindsay game and in other contests during the season. There will be a meeting of the rooters at the rink on Thursday night to make arrangements for the Port Hope and Lindsay games:

Tune—"Beautiful Doll."

Oh you Peterborough team, you speedy Peter borough team,
Wait till we get through with Lindsay
Their chances will be awfully flimsy,
Oh you Peterborough team you speedy Peterborough team,
We will win the game, there is no doubt,
Everyone get up and shout—
Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh, you Peterborough team.

Tune—"If You Talk in Your Sleep, Don't Mention My Name."

Oh, we look like district winners, for we haven't lost a game
Trenton, too, we'll beat them bad,
Lindsay too, we'll make them sad
And if we work hard we'll be champions
And this is not a dream,
We're the one best best in the O.H.A.
Rah! Rah! for our senior team.

Tune—"Billy."

And when they rush they always rush by Lindsay,
For our team knows just how to rush
And when we check we always check, poor Lindsay,
For our team knows just how to check
And when we shoot we always score on Lindsay
And oh how we make them sad
And when we're through, and when we're through,
Poor Lindsay 'tis too bad.

Tune—"Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly."

Has anybody here seen Kelly,
K-E-L-L-Y,
Has anybody here seen Kelly,
Kelly of our hockey team;
His hair is dark and that is true,
He takes that puck clean through and through,
Has anybody here seen Kelly,
Kelly from old Peterborough.

Tune—"By the Old Mill Stream."

Down goes that Lindsay team
Before the white and blue,
And when we get through
They'll be in an awful stew;
It was there we knew
That we'd beat them too,
They are a dream, a lovely dream,
Is that Lindsay team.

Tune—"Just the Same Old Story."

For it'll be just the same old story
Told in just the same old way,
Lindsay cannot beat the Petes' team
For they don't know to play,
When we tell you what the score'll be
There is nothing more to say.
It'll be just the same old story,
In the same old way.

Keene Captures The District Cup By Two Shots

The competition for the District Cup took place yesterday at Charlotte street rink, with the following district clubs in competition: Lindsay, Keene, Norwood and Peterborough. Five clubs in District No. 2 defaulted.

Four games were played in the afternoon, which resulted in Keene and Peterborough qualifying for the finals in the evening. Skips Wedlock and McWilliams, representing Keene matched their skill with Skips A. Moore and G. B. Stevenson of Peterborough in the evening. As the score indicates, the game was close and neither side succeeded in obtaining anything like a comfortable lead throughout the game. A few lucky shots on the part of the Keene aggregation during the first stages of the game assisted the visitors materially however, and when the last ends were wiped off the map, they were two shots to the good. This feat on the part of the Keenites will entitle them to the custody of the District Cup for one year and they will further have the privilege of having their autograph inscribed thereon.

The summary for the evening.

The Peterborough Intermediate O. H. A. team will journey to Trenton to-morrow to play the return game with the Trenton aggregation. The Petes came out of last night's game in good shape, although Kelly received a cut over the eye, and they are determined to keep up their winning streak by beating the Trenton team at home. The line-up will be the same as in last night's game, the team leaving on the 1.40 p.m. (G.T. R.) train.

Following is the standing in this district of the Intermediate O.H.A.:

	W.	L.	G.F.	G.A.

Lindsay.	4	1	21	22
Trenton	1	4	27	41
Belleville.	1	5	17	50

The Belmont Club hereby accept the challenge of the West End Club the latter to make the necessary arrangement for the rink.

(Lindsay Warder)

The executive of the town league have been requested by the management of the Intermediates to pick a team from the league and give the Intermediates a work-out Thursday night. This request will likely be granted and if so the programme on Thursday night will be C. P. R. vs. Grand Trunk, and Town League vs. Intermediates, all for ten cents.

This special game will afford our people an opportunity of seeing our O.H.A. boys in action just before their game with Peterborough.

'Everybody turn out and see it. To w in,Peter Spratt, "Lonney" Cain, Bill Stoddard, etc., will have to travel faster than they did in Trenon. If the town league seven succeeds in defeating the intermediates "Jimmy" Primeau says he will present the team with "Bingo".

Curling Notes

(Lindsay Warder)

Toronto Telegram: Down at Lindsay the other night the veteran J. D. Flavelle, speaking at a supper to the visiting Granites, took occasion to correct a wrong impression that had gone abroad in regard to the Lindsay Club and on Tankard rinks. Contrary to popular belief, he said, the Lindsay Tankard rinks did not practise together for the Tankard competition. He believed, as did the Lindsay club, that the general welfare of the club was of more importance than the winning of trophies, and the members of the Tankard rinks had had but one game of eight ends together before starting after the Tankard this year, while the Winnipeg rink had not yet played a game together. By following up this principle, Lindsay, a town of 8,000 people, had a curling club of 160 members.

The Lindsay Warder says:

Messrs. J. D. Flavelle, (skip), G. A. Little, L. V. O'Connor and R. Butler, the Lindsay rink to play the Scotch curlers at Toronto to-morrow it is understood, have been putting in several hours of strenuous studying, and when they bump up against hte Scotchmen it will be real pleasant to hear the Lindsay players endeavouring to speak the broad Scotch dialect. The twang is not easy to get on to, but it would do anybody good to hear Skip Flavelle and his crew speaking with the Scotch accent. Just imagine Skip Flavelle saying, "Hoot mon, Georgie ye hae a we bit tae strang," and imagine the first stone man Butler addressing his chief thus: "We would sair miss ye at the foreend, nsan! ye dinna fail with that mighty right arm." Then again, listen to Vice Skip Little after he game is over, "Mon, bu I be glad whin the game is over. I hae got my speech all ready and I maun be at that dinner with Mayor Geary this nicht, to hand them doon a wee bit of good advice on curlin'." At this point just imagine Second Stone O'Connor chipping in: "My dear friends and fellow curlers (that is the way I intend to start my speech; I can't get onto the twang) I hank you one and all for the cordial reception you have given we curlers from Lindsay. Tae win a game frae the deft hands of the Scots is no light work at any time (Hear, hear). I hae tae thank ye. I'm no guid at speakin' so wi these few wurds I take me seat".

Laying all jokes aside the Lindsay curlers expect a good game with their bonny brithers from Scotland. The Scotchmen will be in the Queen City clothed in soft, sweey Scotish accents, bonnets, etc., and they are learning to curl, notwithstanding the general belief that a Scotchman is born wise and defies any one to teach him anything after he learns to talk. Here's luck to the Lindsay brithers of the besom and stane.

"SALT RHEUM"

Had It On Hands For Two Years.

ITCHED SO DID NOT KNOW WHAT TO DO.

Tried Three Doctors and Went to Hospital.

All skin diseases are more or less occasioned by a bad state of the blood, and no one can expect to be free from some form or other of skin trouble unless the blood is kept in good shape. All skin diseases can be very easily cured by the wonderful blood cleansing properties of Burdock Blood Bitters.

This is due to the unrivalled purifying action of Burdock Blood Bitters on the blood, coupled with the thorough manner in which it cleanses and expels the impurities from the body.

Mrs. Richard Coutine, White Head, Que., writes:—"I have been bothered with salt rheum, on my hands, for two years, and it itched so I did not know what to do. I tried three doctors, and even went to Montreal to the hospital without getting any relief. I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters, so I got three bottles, and before I had the second used I found a big change, and now to-day I am cured."

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for about 35 years and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

PENSIONS NEEDED

Government Annuities Do Not Solve Old Age Problem

DISCUSSION IS RESUMED

Ottawa, Jan. 25.—E. M. Macdonald, Liberal member for Pictou, N.S., yesterday afternoon resumed the debate on the resolution of J. H. Burnham (Peterboro) for a committee of enquiry into old age pensions, and made out a strong case.

The annuity system, he pointed out, did not reach the class of poor but honest men who were unable to accumulate enough to purchase an annuity. The assistance of children, urged against old age pensions, raised the point that in industrial centres the problem was one which the son or daughter had to solve equally with their parents.

"The Colony of New Zealand," said Mr. Macdonald in introducing the question, "led the way among the different nations that go to make up the Empire in dealing with this question. Their attitude and their legislation was favorably received in the mother country and was a potent factor in inducing public opinion to deal with the situation there. The result of legislation that has taken place in England has been of the most satisfactory character. Even those who at some stage doubted the wisdom of a system of old age pensions are to-day found its most willing advocates."

Canada, he continued, had been somewhat laggard in dealing with this question. We had been too busy with the material phases of our situation to deal with this important social problem.

"It is said by some gentlemen who discuss this question that we have an annuity system in Canada and that consequently we have solved the problem. I do not appreciate that proposition at all. The annuity system does not reach the class of men, honest, but poor men, who are not able to accumulate enough money to buy an annuity."

In the twentieth century, he said, the old men were being shoved to the wall in every employment of life. What was to be the refuge of these men who were told that they were too old to work?

The very least that anyone who had come to the age of 65 or older, and who had done his best, should demand inherently, was personal comfort and that they should have some idea of independence in their actions and thoughts.

How could the conditions be attained without state aid? No matter how thrifty people might be in their years of savings, they might be swept away by illness or misfortune. The old age pension system, he pointed out, would not apply where the man was able to earn his own livelihood.

The assistance of children should not be absolute. That was very fine to theorize about, but, in an industrial centre where the young people had married and had families of their own, the problem formed a successive one, to be solved by the son or daughter, just as it was in the case of the father.

W. F. Carroll (Cape Breton) declared that the trouble about old age annuities was that it was a difficult task to bring it before the public so that they would appreciate its meaning.

The "deserving poor" scheme was one worthy of adoption. No one would benefit by it unless he could show that he had not received poor relief in the days when he was capable of earning investments, and was now in receipt of an income sufficient to keep him in his old age.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux admitted the success of Lloyd-George's system in England, but was not prepared to adopt its applicability to Canada. There was no pauperism here, no "army of unemployed."

The annuity system, he thought, a more important question. It had worked well so far, though inadequately advertised.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster denied that the Government were lube-warm on the annuities scheme. Everything would be done to push it.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson feared that very little would be done with the annuities under the postmasters of the country.

Hon. Charles Murphy enquired if there was any modification to the specification for the printing of Dominion bank notes and stamps.

Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, answered that the specifications were modeled very much as in 1890, and while the tenders were open to the world, yet the work must be done in Ottawa.

T upon a little breeze stirred the calm when Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux asked if the specifications made any provision for the printing of bank notes and stamps in French.

Hon. Mr. White answered in the negative.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux: What, then, have you done in council? You will have to square yourse f with the two gentlemen on your right (Hons. Pelletier and Monk). They and their friends have crucified Sir Wilfrid and myself for the reason that we have not had those bank notes printed in French."

Hon. Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is making a speech.

Hon. Mr. White: The contract is wide enough to include any wording that may be decided upon.

Hon. F. D. Monk, in answer to a question, stated that the subsidy agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific as to the proposed dry dock at Prince Rupert, was signed on Nov. 30 last, the work to be completed within two years.

The average rate of interest payable on the public debt, the Minister of Finance informed Mr. Sinclair, was 3.398 per cent. (as on Dec. 31 last).

Mr. Carvell was informed that Oliver Asselin of Montreal had been appointed on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior to investigate the workings of some immigration agencies in Europe, at a salary of $150 per month for four months.

Light on Outrages.

Indianapolis, Jan. 25.—Through remarks carelessly made by James B. McNamara while he was having a suit of clothes fitted by T. C. Bjorm, a tailor in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1909, the federal grand jury yesterday obtained evidence which, it is said, brought about important disclosures concerning the identity of men who helped blow up places in the west.

Bjorm, who testified before the grand jury, is said to have heard from McNamara not only about the plan to blow up a hotel in Salt Lake City in December of that year, but also about the details as to how it was to be done and who was to do it. About this time, according to Ortie E McManigal, J. J. McNamara was directing the dynamiting operations from Indianapolis and the movement was being extended to the Pacific coast with a view of making Salt Lake City "a base of supply."

Japs to Crush Revolution?

Paris, Jan. 25.—A secret conference was held at Pekin on Wednesday, says a Pekin despatch to the European edition of The New York Herald, at which the ex-regent, Prince Chun, Prince Tsai Suun and Prince Tsai Tao, urged the Empress Dowager to invoke Japanese aid to suppress the revolution. The Dowager favored the suggestion and instructed the princes to ascertain its practicability. The Cabinet is indignant at the suggestion, and it is doubtful whether Japan would entertain it.

Italy Proposes to Follow Her Present Tactics

FRANCE NEED NOT WORRY

Rome, Jan. 25.—The subject of the detention of 29 Turks, said to be members of the Red Crescent Society, by the Italian authorities, who captured them on the French steamer Manouba, was fully discussed at conferences yesterday between Premier Giolitti, Foreign Minister Marquis di San Guiliano, and the French Ambassador to Italy, Camille Barrere. The conferences are said to have been very cordial, but the Turks are still held under arrest on the island of Sardinia.

Italy maintains her right to capture and search ships of neutral nations suspected of carrying contraband of war. This has been the course followed, not only in the case of French steamers, but also with British, German and Austrian.

Italy does not, however, admit any limitation of that right. It is her intenton to protect her army before the enemy. So far as the Italian authorities will speak, the examination of the Turks in question seems to have proved that both doctors and nurses were included in the group of prisoners, but it is suspected that the object of their present was to distract attention from others, who are believed to be Turkish officers, as they were in possession of arms, maps and a check for a large sum of money.

Italian officials call attention to the fact that another alleged Red Crescent expedition was once halted in Egypt by Gen. Kitchener and sent back as it was composed of belligerents.

Italy admits that France is exercising her duty admirably as a neutral power, but urges that France should not resent the wish on the part of Italy, even if a mistake is made, to exercise what she considers to be her right, as neither France nor any other nation can guarantee that, in applying all possible measures to preserve strict neutrality, she may not be deceived.

The result of the conferences has been reported to the French Government, and, so far, the two countries have been animated by such a conciliatory spirit that it is expected a satisfactory solution will be found.

Aeroplane Saved Italians.

Gabes, Tunis, Jan. 25.—Details of the engagement between the Turks and the Arabs and an Italian column near Ghirgarish, a small oasis about ten miles along the coast from Tripoli on Jan. 19, have reached here and show that at the time of the fighting the Italian destroyers had temporarily withdrawn.

Boats laden with contraband approached the shore and opened a heavy fire on the Italian forces. At the same time 1,000 Turkish regulars at Ainzara prepared to attack the Italians from the rear. The Italians would inevitably have been annihilated if by chance an aeroplane, coming out to try its motor, had not been seen by the Turks, who became so alarmed that they were unable to carry out the turning movement. They kept up their firing, however, until nightfall. The Italians lost fifty killed and thirty wounded.

Italians Meet Reverse.

London, Jan. 25.—The Daily Express' correspondent with the Turks, reports an Italian reverse after severe battle, which resulted from an attempt by the Italians to re-occupy Sensur, an oasis about 12 miles west of Tripoli. Both sides suffered heavy losses. Sixty Italian dead were left in the trenches.

The date on which the despatch was sent out is not given.

King Reaches Malta.

Malta, Jan. 25.—King George and Queen Mary reached here yesterday aboard the steamship Medina. They were accorded an enthusiastic reception. Their Majesties visited the French battleship Danton in the afternoon.

A slight mishap occurred to the Medina as she was entering port. A buoy rope fouled the propeller, but caused little delay.

The King and Queen were received in state by Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, commander-in-chief of the Mediterranean department; Chief Justice Sir J. Carbone; members of the Legislative Council, and a crowd of nobles. A drive through troop-lined streets to Government House, was followed by a reception at which most of the Maltese officials and noblemen were presented to the King and Queen.

Farm Laborer Gets Fortune.

London, Jan. 25.—Prince Goodwin Bevan, a farm laborer at Llanigon, Wales, is leaving for America early in February to claim a fortune of $1,000,000 left by his father, Richard Goodwin Bevan, who died a few weeks ago. Mr. Bevan will be accompanied by his solicitor, Thomas James, Llandrindgdon.

BOTH SIDES FIRM.

Home Rulers and Unionists Cannot Reach a Truce.

London, Jan. 25.—The home rule meeting will be held in Ulster Hall, Belfast, on Feb. 6, as arranged, and Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, and John E. Redmond, the Irish Nationalist leader, will speak, if the determination reached yesterday is carried into effect. A conference was held in the chief Government whip's office yesterday afternoon, which was attended by Mr. Churchill, Lord Pirie, for the city of Belfast, and Sir Rufus Isaacs, Attorney-General — the last named to give legal advice—and a final decision was taken to hold the Belfast meeting. Mr. Redmond is sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to ensure his attendance.

In the meanwhile, Sir Edward Carson, member for Dublin University, and former Solicitor-General, who was the leader in the fight against home rule, visited Belfast yesterday and had a conference with the leader of the loyalists. They perfected arrangements to occupy Ulster Hall from Feb. 7 until after Feb. 8, so as to prevent the Churchill-Redmond meeting. Contracts have been entered into with caterers to supply provisions for 1,500 persons in the hall during those two days.

The military officers have held a meeting in Belfast to consider means to preserve the peace.

Richeson's Cell-Mate Confesses.

Boston, Jan. 25.—Harry H. Butts, a colored prisoner, who for the past month has shared the cell of Rev. C. V. T. Richeson in the Charles street jail, appeared in the Superior Court yesterday and retracted a former plea of not guilty to murder in the second degree and pleaded guilty to manslaughter.

Butts was placed as a guard in Richeson's cell following the minister's act of self-mutilation on Dec. 20, and has apparently been regarded by the Virginian as a sort of body servant.

On the night of June 21, 1911, Butts shot and instantly killed another colored man, Robert Williamson, who he claimed had been too attentive to his wife.

Friend to Public Ownership.

Birmingham, Eng., Jan. 25. The annual conference of the British Labor party opened here yesterday.

Hen Turner, president, stated that the past year had been one of industrial unrest, which had redounded to the benefit of labor. Apart from Parliament, the working men had been able to secure higher wages, fewer hours and better regulations.

"Our business," he continued, "is to make the Labor party the dominant political party in the state. Slowly and surely the public conscience is deepening toward public ownership of the means of life. Scores of thousands of workingmen who have joined trade unions have become socialists."

Selling Manchu Treasures.

London, Jan. 25.—The sale of the Imperial treasures at Pekin has commenced, says a despatch to The Daily Telegraph, but the princes are withholding the best china and are demanding fabulous prices. An American expert, who has just returned from examining the treasures in the Imperial palace at Mukden, says that 40,000 pieces of porcelain there are worthless, the best specimens having been removed or stolen.

Low Will Keep Faith.

Ottawa, Jan. 25.—Thomas A. Low, ex-M.P., has given his formal answer to the Liberal-Conservative Association of South Renfrew. He stands by the agreement made when the Liberal party allowed T. W. McGarry to be returned to the Legislature by acclamation.

He states that Hon. George P. Graham is the choice of the Liberal party and that it will be impossible for him to accept the offer of the Liberal-Conservative Association to be re-elected without opposition. He further states that the opposition to Hon. Mr. Graham will be a breach of faith in not carrying out an honest agreement.

The Liberal-Conservatives of South Renfrew on Friday last offered the seat back to Mr. Low by acclamation, but promised Dr. Maloney of Eganville to oppose Hon. George P. Graham in case Mr. Low did not accept the offer. He was given a week to decide, and yesterday sent a definite answer to the Liberal-Conservative Association.

TO WELCOME THE DUKE

Plans Are Complete for His Reception at White House

ARRIVES THIS AFTERNOON

Washington, Jan. 25.—Arrangements for the reception to-day of the Duke of Connaught were completed by the White House and State Department last night. The uncle of one king and brother of another will be received as simply as possible, consisting with etiquette. The duke will go through the program arranged for his reception, unsupported except for the British ambassador, James Bryce, the staff of the British embassy and his military secretary, Col. Lowther.

During most of his six or seven hours in Washington, he will be on home territory, within the acre of two covered by the British embassy.

According to the official announcement given out at the White House, the duke arrives in Washington at 4.20 this afternoon. Major A. W. Butt, personal aide of the President, will meet the duke at the Union Station, and with the British Ambassador and the embassy staff, will form his escort to the embassy. White House automobiles will convey the duke from the station to the embassy.

At 5 o'clock the duke is expected to reach the White House. He will be whirled away from the embassy in a White House motor accompanied by a squadron of cavalry. The cavalry will form an escort of honor to the portico of the executive mansion and will deploy on the driveway in front while he enters to be received. Just in front of the porte cochere the fifteenth cavalry band will be stationed and as the royal visitor enters it will play "God Save the King."

The duke will be received by President Taft in much the same way as new ambassadors are received.

Following this Mrs. Taft will serve tea for the duke and the ambassador in the red room. Members of the Cabinet and their wives have been invited to be present. The duke will leave the White House after this informal reception is over and the band outside will play "The Star Spangled Banner."

The squadron of cavalry will escort him back to the British embassy and shortly after he has stepped on British territory again, the President, accompanied by Major Butt, will return his call.

So far as the Government is concerned, this will conclude the duke's visit to Washington. Afterwards the duke will be the guest at dinner of the British ambassador, and it is understood he will hold a reception for diplomats and Government officials.

"THE SECRET OF PAUL FARLEY"

By JOHN MARCH

"I do. I say so. What his back and shoulders are like I don't profess to know, but the parts exposed, one side of his neck, one cheek, and hand, are seamed with livid wales almost as big as my little finger; they stand up like whipcord. From one ear, the lobe of the right ear, you have drawn blood, and the neckband of his shirt seemed jagged and torn to shreds. It's the most cruel, the most cowardly, piece of work I've met with in the whole course of my professional experience."

Felix took the pipe from his mouth, pitched the book on the table, and rose.

"I don't intend to be bullied and insulted in my own house, Hunter," he said, towering on the hearthrug, "so you will desist or go."

"I don't mean to quarrel with you, Fleming," he said firmly, "that won't answer my purpose, but I certainly shall speak my mind as a surgeon in relation to his patient. I found Farley unconscious; I had some trouble to bring him round, and my honest opinion is that he is seriously hurt. I am positive a few more such blows would have ended his career for good and all in this sphere. What did you do it for?" he asked, as he saw Felix wince.

"To teach him to leave a respectable woman alone."

"You need not have troubled to do that, my dear boy; you might have left that job to me. I am the right person to chastise the lad if he requires it."

"How do you make that out?" Felix asked, his nostrils swelling. "I had my sister's interests to protect."

"And I my future wife's interests."

"Since when have you become engaged to Agnes?"

"Since I found Farley. You don't object, Felix?"

"Has Agnes given you the history of this unpleasant fracas?"

"Every detail; I am thoroughly conversant with the facts, both great and small."

"Apparently you don't see any harm in he escapade."

"No I, Felix, it's too paltry," he said earnestly. "The burdens of life are neither few nor light. There are real ills enough without trying to brew some for ourselves out of passing trivialities. I come in contact with too much sorrow and trouble to care to make much of the petty plagues of life. My work in the midst of sickness, penury, and toil, has taught me a certain kind of philosophy. Our journey through life has to be made, whether it be fair weather or foul, and a wise traveller will take courage from his many comforts and carry his sunshine with him."

"Of course," Felix said, knocking the ashes from his pipe and refilling it, "your engagement to Agnes alters the complexion of affairs, and quashes any scurrilous chatter. I have nothing further to say on the subject, except to offer you my congratulations."

"Thank you," he said quietly. "I thought perhaps you might shy and cringe at the disparity between us. I can't help feeling myself—"

"Nonsense, Jack," he said, wringing the doctor's hand. "Barring years, you are in reality a younger man than I. Hard, unselfish work and a holy conscience have warded off the result of this, and, what's more, I can't see a trace of Time's handiwork, and shouldn't care a jot if I could. I'm glad, Jack, honestly and heartily glad, and with all my heart I wish you joy and happiness."

He unlocked a cupboard in an arched recess, and brough out a small cobwebbed bottle.

"This brand of champagne I keep for special occasions," he said, producing a couple of glasses from the same receptacle and uncorking the bottle; "we'll drink health, happiness, and porsperity to the union, Hunter."

"I can't very well refuse to do that," he returned, laughing, and drawing a chair to the fire, "although I have one more visit to pay before I've finished my rounds. I don't seem to have met with a suitable opportunity to tell you why I dropped in here to-night."

"Why, had you any other motive than a desire to see Agnes" he asked, holding the glass on one side to prevent undue effervescence.

"Yes, I had no intention of proposing to Agnes just yet. I meditated feeling my way a little first, but circumstances brought it to a head with a rapidity that took my breath away. I was really anxious to find Farley somewhere, anywhere in the vicinity of Weyberne, and knowing he was here four nights out of every seven, I concluded this was the right place to look for him. I never felt so pleased to see the boy in my life as I did when I saw him stretched out there in the shrubbery.

Felix handed the glass to his friend and Jack Hunter thought the access of colour in his face could not have been caused by the slow and careful process of pouring out the wine.

"Lady Hargrave sent for me this evening," he resumed, after touching his glass against the Squire's, "to see Judith, but when I arrived she was gone."

"Gone where" he asked, setting down his glass and staring at the doctor.

"Don't know; mooning about the grounds, I concluded. I waited some time, but she couldn't be found; anyway, it was soon bruited about that Mr. Farley was not in the house, and then, as seems a natural sequence where that fellow is concerned, Sir Thomas and Lady Hargrave looked at one another with that kind of intelligence which conveyed the impression that they had solved the mystery. I said I felt convinced he was here ,and would find him, and send him home. I did find him, and sent him to the Hall in my trap, and said, I suppose, that unjust suspicion."

"I like that lad, Felix," he said, after another sip. "I take an interest in him; and I am sure he is a good lad. No one with any discernment wants to look into those beautiful eyes of his without feeling pretty sure there's a beautiful soul, mind, and character behind them. Heavens! if the lad were mine, how proud should I be of him!"

He looked at Felix, but the Squire kept his eyes on the fire and gave a reluctant unsatisfactory grunt.

"I'll never believe," he resumed, "a great mind, a mind like Farley's, capable of idle, evil thoughts. Impurity, sordid craft, liberty of license, or treachery, are not indigenous to a mind like his; vice couldn't flourish in such a soil."

"Farley has a champion in you, Jack," Felix remarked grudgingly.

"The lad needs one, everybody seems to have their knife in him somewhere, for some reason. The fellow is persecuted, and it makes my blood boil."

"I don't see that," the Squire said looking at his pipe to see why it would not draw. "Because I happen to object to his hanging round Agnes it doesn't follow that other people—"

"But you are not everyone, Felix, my dear fellow," Hunter interposed with a smile and a friendly grip on his knee, "other people have grievances. Now, for instance, I was at Farmer Ashwood's this morning, and they told me young Mr. Farley at the Hall was engaged to be married to Mrs. Wycherly; this evening it is delicately hinted he has eloped with Miss Hargrave; and later I hear he is horsewhipped for kissing Miss Fleming. The boy's back isn't broad enough to hold the amount of mischief these busybodies will want him to take upon himself. I should like," he said in a peculiarly impressive tone, looking steadily into the Squire's eyes, "I should like for two reasons to get him out of this neighbourhood."

Felix took his pipe from his mouth and gazed inquiringly at the doctor, while a little pain, very small and shy at first, came creeping, turning, twisting, and gradually wormed itself into the core of his being, and there commenced to tug at his heartstrings.

"I was at the Ashwoods' this evening, as you heard me say," he continued, pulling his chair closer and bending forward. "I was called in to see Jennie, the youngest girl, the pretty one, she's a little queer, and the symptoms all go to make up a suspicious case. When Farley's engagement was mentioned a look passed between Jennie and her mother which satisfied me that whenever I choose to give the indisposition a name the responsibility will be laid at Farley's door."

"Does he know the girl?" Felix asked, beginning to walk up and down the room.

"I saw him speaking to her once, and from what I could gather he was directing her somewhere. The hussy had a mind to speak to him, and, probably feigning to be a stranger, asked the way."

"And your other reason?" he asked coming to a standstill before the doctor.

"It's worse and more important than the other. I am afraid—mind you, Felix, only afraid—that Judith Hargrave's mind is giving way."

"Great heavens, Jack, how horrible! Why are women brought up without being taught to control themselves? You must be mistaken, Jack."

"I hope I am," he said fervently, "I hope I am, Felix."

He buttoned his coat and looked around for his hat.

"There's some kind of dilemma, too, at The Larches, isn't there?" he asked.

"Yes," Felix said in a constrained voice, "I believe there is—at least I know there is. If I had been a trifle less hasty I might have been able to tell you the truth about the matter."

"Well, see to it,' he said, holding out his hand for a parting shake, "see to it, there's a dear, good fellow. That innocent reserved lad is no manner of match for a woman like Mrs. Wycherly. You'll see to it, Felix?"

"I will,' he said, crushing the doctor's hand in a vice-like clasp, "if he will let me, and it's in my power, and—I say, old man, you spread it on rather thickly about Farley, eh, didn't you, Jack?"

"No, on my honor, I did not," he returned gravely, "a man of your powerful physique and blinded by passion—why, it's only a miracle, Felix, you didn't kill him."

The Squire dropped his hand, picked up his pipe, and kicked a chair out of his path.

"No, don't come with me; I'll say good-night to Agnes and let myself out," and with a conscious laugh the doctor closed the door.

Felix lighted his pipe and smoked. He leaned back in the leather chair with his teeth clenched on the amber mouthpiece hour after hour, but he did not draw much comfort or solace from its soothing fumes. His head ached and his heart ached, and his mind went persistently back to the scene in the shrubbery. Paul's white face and the agony in the beautiful eyes haunted him. The vision had ceased him before, but he had kept it under cool, moderate control while his wrath lasted, and his fierce sense of injury was like a live coal. The anger, the resentment, the indignation, had died hard, but it was quite out, gone now, and he was sorry, more sorry than Paul would believe or perhaps ever know. Agnes married and at East Weyberne, Farley gone from the neigborood, the old loneliness ,the solitary evenings back! He shivered, and the demon remorse clutched his heart and sent a spasm of pain to his throat.

CHAPTER XV.

The Widow's Warning.

Paul sat at the writing-table in the library at Weyberne Hall. His elbows were on its polished surface, his head supported by his large thin hands. A book—a new edition of Herodotus in Greek—was face downwards on the table, a roll of manuscript, a half written sheet of foolscap, and a newspaper lay within his reach. Presently he moved his chair back in a gentle, cautious manner, rose stiffly, and walked slowly, with evident difficulty, across the soft velvet pile to the other end of the room.

He stood there a space and raised his arms carefully above his head, bringing them down again slowly, and clasped them loosely behind. He went heroically through the exercise several times, gave one or two little groans, sighed, returned to his chair, and pushed it nearer the fire. He sank painfully into it, a few beads of moisture on his forehead, fatigued, but elated and satisfied with his physical endurance and his strenuous strength of mind.

"I'll run my eye over the letter again," he said to himself, drawing a thick, cream-crested envelope from his breast pocket and unfolding a sheet of fine, close, sharp writing and fixing his eyeglasses more accurately, he read: "My Darling,—Two days have gone, and I am starving for a glimpse of your dear face. I have lived a lifetime since you went, Paul, and yet I can still feel the tremble of your arms. It is almost midnight ,and I am tired out with watching for you, but I must write. Paul, for such a swarm of clamouring love-thoughts cannot be denied. I am sitting by my window facing Weyberne Hall. The world is sleeping; there's nothing to distract me but the stars, the nightingale in the thicket,and the murmur of the distant waterfall by the Marsh Mill. My home is very beautiful to-night,Paul. There's a red gold moon and it's shining on the holly and on the yews and among the briars woven in the hedge. At the end of the drive the gate is open, gaping wide for you, Paul, for its master, for my master. When you come to-morrow, my darling, I shall be kneeling here among the moon beams, in the chilly night air, watching for your black shadow to cast a darker shade over the autumn's mellow tints. A little bird has flown by and whispered fairy news—hey, presto, my lover went to London yesterday, and birdie told me what took him there. It was the little jewelled bauble, the rivet to the links we forged so many hours ago. You will bring it to me, Paul or—shall I come to you? No power on earth shall keep my sweetheart from me; I want him, I must have my husband and soon. The sun in heaven is hot, but not so hot nor so parched, Paul, as the waiting heart you've quickened, darling!"

"There's a veiled threat in it, and I should understand its nature if I were cute enough to read between the lines," he muttered, limping to the window.

He stared across the green lawny stretch of upland, smiling beneath the October sunshine, a far-away musing look in his eyes.

"I wish he could see it: I would give a good deal for his bold opinion," he muttered: but, parbleau! the milk's spilt, and I can't afford to grizzle over it. I'll face the odds alone; the struggle will hearten me. She shall not ruin me. I'll stay my time, even if the tide is strong against me. I must leave the rudder to swing round, but, indifferent narsman as I am, I'll pull or perish!"

An imperious, bold knock on the door by hard, strong knuckles, performed simultaneously with its swift opening, startled him, and Dr. Hunter stepped in with a genial "Morning, Farley."

"I went straight up to your bedroom, young man," he said, taking him unceremoniously by the shoulders and turning him to the light. "I expected to find you there after my strict injunctions last night."

"A fellow who has his living to get can't indulge in capuan holidays, doctor," he quickly expostulated, flushing and backing a little. "If I can by any possibility crawl I ought to be up attending to my duties."

"With those Spartan principles you ought to get on in this age of enervating ease and lazy superficial refinement. But how are you? Tell me exactly how you've been, else I shan't know what physic to send you. Sick?"

"A little last night," he owned reluctantly. "I have a headache, I'm stiff and sore, of course, and a bit chilly and seedy, but it might have have been worse. I am thankful to be able to get downstairs."

"Let me see you walk," Hunter said.

He limped back to the lounge by the fire, and the doctor followed him, drew up a chair, and sat down facing him.

"Don't you think you would find some relief in abusing Fleming a bit?" he asked, laughing.

Paul shook his head and smiled a little.

"I committed the offence, Mr. Fleming saw me, and some sort of correction was no doubt merited, but not the severe punishment he resorted to; the punishment exceeded the crime, doctor."

"It did, Farley; it was a very cruel flogging, and Felix realizes it now."

"I'm afraid that I realized it more than he," Paul said, wrinkling his forehead as he moved in his chair.

Doctor Hunter laughed, and stroked his knee.

"I don't know whether I would rather be in your or Fleming's shoes," he said; "it must be worse to be mentally sore, and beside Felix feels that he has made something of a fool of himself."

"Why; he was right in the main."

"Was he? Well, I did not object; I was not inclined to take it up."

"But what had you to do with it?"

"Only this, I am engaged to Agnes, and I wish the matter to drop; it's to utterly foolish to make a song about."

Paul sat up with a decided show of interest.

"You are engaged to Agnes?" he exclaimed, a smile breaking over his face, "a la bonheur! That is good news; it's just a flash of brightness through all the heaviness. I am pleased."

"I believe you are, Farley, genuinely pleased. I don't think that you have a spark of feeling against me."

"Against you! Why, you have my warmest sympathy, my heartiest wishes and regards. It's a splendid idea. I wish you no end of luck and happiness. You've couldn't have told me anything that would give me more pleasure—it's glorious news!"

"Then it's all right, Farley, I am quite satisfied. My happiness has come to me rather late in life, and I want to enjoy it to the full, without feeling I had stepped on another's heart to reach it—you understand, lad?"

"I quite understand," he answered, a dewiness in his eyes, "and all I can say is, Agnes Fleming is the luckiest woman I know."

The doctor laughed and laid his hand on the arm of Paul's chair.

Salt Rheum of Ten Year's Standing Healed as if by Magic Hands Cracked so Could Not Work —Cures Effected by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

It does not take long for Dr. Chase's Ointment to prove its magic healing power. A single night is often sufficient to produce the most startling results.

Internal treatment for skin diseases is nearly always disappointing. By applying Dr. Chase's Ointment to the diseased parts relief is obtained almost immediately, and gradually the sores heal up and disappear. Here are two letters which will interest you:—

Mrs. Chas. Gilbert, Haystack, Placentia Bay, Nfld., writes:—"I was a sufferer from Salt Rheum for ten years, and had about despaired of ever being cured, so many treatments had failed. Reading of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Chase's Ointment, I commenced using it, and was entirely cured by eight boxes. I want to express my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Ointment, and to recommend it to all sufferers."

Mr. Stanley Merrill, Delaware, Ont., writes:—"For years I was troubled with my hands cracking, often becoming so sore that I could hardly do any work. I got some of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and happily find that one or two applications of same to the affected parts make them well. I have had no trouble since using the ointment for sore hands."

They Thrive on it

Tillson's Oats

If there is any food that has in it ruddier cheeks or sturdier legs than Tillson's Rolled Oats, nobody knows what it is. It's the food that children thrive on.

An underlying principle of proper diet is that the food one takes should furnish to the body energy and tissue in the ratio that the body consumes energy and tissue.

This ratio is 5½ parts energy to one part of tissue. Tillson's Oats provide that ratio more nearly than any other food except milk.

In giving children porridge it is a mistake to add a quantity of cream and sugar, because the dish is then too rich. Oats are most healthful when eaten with milk and a sprinkle of salt, or possibly a small portion of sugar.

Oatmeal Gruel for Children

To one cupful of cold porridge made from Tillson's Rolled Oats, add one-half cupful of boiling water and one cupful of milk. Strain, still mixed, into the double boiler for one hour, stirring occasionally. Add a little sugar if desired and serve.

Your grocer has Tillson's. Two sizes — 10c and 25c. Each 25c package contains a handsome piece of English Porcelain Tableware.

A Sunday Morning Visit to Park Street Baptist Church

(By Roy Gilray.)

A Sunday Morning Visit to the Park Street Baptist Church.

(By Roy Gilray)

The corner stone of the new Park Street Baptist Church was laid October 17th, 1908, by Hon. J. R. Stratton, and the following May the opening services were conducted by Rev. W. A. Cameron of Bloor Street Baptist Church, Toronto. Since that time the church has made rapid strides under the able pastorate of Rev. W. C. Riddiford. The Sunday school has increased from 167 to 300, and the church membership from 120 to over 300. Once a month special evangelistic services are held, at which the workingmens choir assists in the singing.

This church is the home of the workingmen, and they are proud of the distinction.

The honest workingman has a creed—not very elaborate, but true as steel:

"I believe in my job.

"It may not be a very important one, but it is MINE, and it is Gods job for ME.

"I believe in my fellow man.

"He may not always agree with me. I'd feel sorry for him if he did, because I myself do not believe some of the things that were sure in my own mind a dozen years ago.

"I believe in my country.

"I believe in it because it is made up of my fellow men—and myself. If it is not the best country in the world it is partly because I am not the kind of man that I should be.

"I believe in my home.

"It isn't a rich home. It wouldn't satisfy some folks, but it contains jewels which cannot be purchased in the markets of the world. Its motto is service; its reward is love.

"I believe in to-day.

"It is all that I possess. The past is of value only as it can make the life of to-day fuller and freer. There is no assurance of to-morrow. I must make good to-day."

This church is keyed to the many forms of human need. Its pastor and people consider that it is the business of the church to "cry aloud and spare not" in all matters pertaining to the public welfare.

There is always something of interest happening down at Park Street. One never knows what is morning next. One Sunday they held a workingman's service, at which they discussed the many phases of that complex problem, Capital and Labor; another time they endeavoured to decide the kind of men that should be chosen for the City Council; while on another occasion they considered the question of dead-beats and debtors, and came to the conclusion that churches as well as men should avoid debt as far as possible. The indebtedness of this church, with a property valued at $27,000, amounts to $8,000, which they will liquidate on the debenture plan. The lives of eight men are insured for $1,000 each, the policies maturing in twenty years.

Park Street is truly a "problem" church. Some people would have ministers leave problems strictly alone, claiming they should preach the pure Gospel, and that only. Yet the pure Gospel is the best cure for a drunken beast of a husband. (Ask the wife and children.) The pure Gospel is the best cure for a gambling, dissolute youth. (Consult the broken-hearted, white-haired mother.) The pure Gospel is the best cure for a profane, bullying boss. (Interview the employees under him.) If these are not problems which must be confronted by the churches and their leaders, then what are our churches for? Who will carry the temperance flag to victory next January if the churches and other religious organizations are not behind the movement?

The missionary work of the Baptist Church occupies a large share of their attention. Mr. Patrick Morgan visited this congregation last week in the interests of the Grande-Ligne Mission of Quebec. The work in this place has been carried on for seventy-five years, having been founded by Henrietta Feller, who gave her life in all its loveliness, culture and noble purpose to the enlightenment and evangelisation of the French people of this continent. The substantial progress made by the Feller Institute (a seat of learning much like the Baptist College at Woodstock) has been most gratifying, especially when one considers the powerful influences that have been and are at work against them.

The work among the young men is particularly strong. The Men's Helping Hand Bible Class is deserving of special mention. Its efforts are intensely practical, implying all that the name suggests. Their primary object, of course, is to win men to Christ, but their activities are widespread, as indicated by their motto: To help ALL men in ALL ways that are ALL right. They not only help their own people, but extend their tender mercies to anyone that comes to their attention. I am informed that not one man out of a membership of over 100 has been out of employment during the year. This feature of securing work for its men accounts for the fact that in four years only one family has received help from the relief fund, and they returned the coal or its equivalent a short time after the husband obtained work. Considering that the congregation is by no means a wealthy one, this record is one of which they might well be proud. Though they meet on Sunday afternoons with the Sabbath School, they take up special studies of their own, having definite subjects arranged one year ahead. A perusal of their topic card reveals an ideal course, and if the men that listen to these addresses are not materially benefitted, then there must be something radically wrong with their receptive faculties.

* * *

Last Sunday was another ideal day for attending church, but once again we beheld a number of empty pews. It is possible some were tempted to wander up to Knox Presbyterian to see what it felt like to see a man dressed in kilts with the weather five below zero.

The people of Park Street are proud of their new church. The interior is bright and inviting. The floor slants well to the front, affording every person an excellent view of the pulpit from the comfortable seats which are arranged in a semicircle. There may have been some icicles outside, but there were none inside. Everybody seemed to be very friendly.

A study of the architecture of the south-end churches is very interesting.

Knox Presbyterian is, perhaps, the best planned church in the city. With three streets on three sides, it will always have plenty of light and ventilation. The edifice is well proportioned throughout, even the massive tower is in perfect keeping with the general outline.

All Saints possesses a splendid gray stone structure, but its tower is abbreviated for the present, and the rear wall is in an unfinished state, awaiting the erection of a Sunday School building. It is unfortunate that the old red brick mission was built so close to the street. If the completed church is to show up to advantage this building, as well as the terrace behind, will have to be razed to the ground.

St. James' Methodists have the Sunday School building up, well set back, awaiting the construction of the church to face north on Romaine street. They, too, have an abbreviated spire, but it lacks the bottom end instead of the top. The architect seems to have been in a great hurry when he finished the job. Apparently he picked up only the top section of the pinnacle, and, for the want of a better place to put it, chapped it on the beltry.

The man who looked after the finishing touches of the spire on the Park Street Church seems to have been more painstaking in his work, but unfortunately he used too much muscle in planting the steeple, for he jammed it too far down in its octagonal setting.

* * *

Rev. Mr. Riddiford chose as his text part of Luke 2:49, xxx: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

Christ left Heaven to do special work for God His Father. While healing the blind man he said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work." Christ had a deep conviction of His life work. He realized His great responsibility to His Father, and His tremendous obligation to the world. He knew He had a work to do before His life came to a close.

When will the Church of God wake up to its task of saving the world for Christ? It sometimes seems as if we have too many denominations, and that more work would be accomplished by a return to the simple ways of the early Church.

Some churches seem to say, "We must have a great literary orator, a real bandbox preacher, one who knows how to bow and scrape to the cliques; our choirs must be gowned and adorned in the latest fashions; the preacher must not lay his fingers on the sins of the world, such as tobogganing, or golfing on Sunday. Oh, no! or some of our influential members may stop their subscriptions."

The churches of to-day are bound down to materialism. They desire everything done to please themselves rather than God. What we want is more of that life, that courage, that faith of the Puritans. It will be a bad day for Canada when she lets go her Sunday. From that time she will commence her downward course. We need to do business for God in God's way.

Christ's work was a good work. He died on the cross to redeem a sinful world. Peter, in his short biography of Christ in Acts x:38, says, "God annointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil; for God was with him." His work was a good work; he made hearts rejoice, homes brighter; he forgave men their sins and prepared them for a light of righteousness. He came to save a lost and ruined world.

The influence he left on the world is without measure. So in our lives: a good life has an influence for lasting good, while a bad life has a telling influence for everything that is the opposite of goodness.

Young man, learn wisdom which says, "I must be honest; I must be kind; I must be pure, respecting every girl as I would my own sister or mother; I must accept Christ; I must be a worthy Christian."

Young woman, learn wisdom, which says, "I must be pure; I must die rather than lose my womanhood; I must keep my faith, and not let it go."

The work of Christ was not only good, but it was costly. Christ paid the price in full. The speaker, by way of illustration, referred to a sign he had seen on George street recently, which read, "Cheap Goods Sold Here." They were cheap. Good goods cost money. It cost Lincoln his life to liberate the slaves. It costs a business man something to incorporate Christian principles in his business. A student must pay the price for his degrees. There is a great deal of Socialistic nonsense going the rounds these days prompting the men with the pick and shovel to do murder to their arch enemy the rich man. Poverty and hate, which go hand in hand, are mostly produced by drink and laziness, which are inseparable. It costs something to live right, to be pure, to be holy, to be a Christian; but it is worth while. We enjoy liberties to-day because our forefathers paid for them with their life's blood.

Jesus left his heavenly home and trod the rough ways of Palestine; he forsook his imperial throne and pillowed his weary head on a stone to lift us up to everlasting glory.

Christ's work brings suffering. The heroes and heroines of the past ages were willing to pay the price in suffering and persecution. Luther, when summoned to the Diet of Worms, was persuaded by his friends not to go, but he replied, "I must. I will go, if every tile on every roof were a devil." He went, and though standing before seven hundred dignitaries of Rome, he fearlessly exclaimed: "The just shall live by faith." He bore testimony to the truth that he knew. Italy was made free because Garibaldi was willing to pay the price. India in the better and Baptist history the richer because Carey sacrificed the best part of his life.

Christ's work was misunderstood. Herod thought he was to come as a King. Even his own family and the apostles hoped he had come as a prince of war to rid them forever of the yoke of Rome. Instead he came as the Prince of Peace. His work is misunderstood to-day. Some people would have you believe that the barroom business is a good business. Any traffic that makes drunkards of men is contrary to the gospel of Jesus Christ. He came to save the world.

Christ's work brings lasting results, a finished work. It has stood the test of ages. Countless religions have sprung up and have faded away. Christ's religion stands to-day the greatest fact in history.

One thing we may learn from Christ's work: we may trust God for results. Many of us worry about the results; we spend too much time thinking over our shortcomings. Instead, we should be willing to do any work in the Church, keeping ever before us, "I must do the work he has sent me to do."

Another lesson is: We are responsible for our share of the work. We should not sit down and watch the other fellow do the work, but should be willing to undertake our part and do it to the best of our ability. The only way the world can be saved is by the co-operation of his followers. With Christ we should be able to say, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

RECONCILIATION

(By Olive Roberts Barton)

Vivian McKellar sat in his own dining room alone, smoking. The low dome of rich glass threw a warm yellow light over the lined and silver on the table.

He blew some smoke rings, which floated lazily into the dark shadow above him. Then he blew more, and they, too, thinned and faded. Tiuro was a long time coming.

Tiuro was the faithful Jap he had brought home with him when he was war correspondent. That was before he married Elise. And now they were alone again, he and the Jap, as they used to be, and Elise—Elise was back home as she used to be.

And Tiuro "valeted and butled and chefed and chauffeured," as McKellar told his envious friends, with equal skill in all.

Tiuro had adored Elise, and much as he was devoted to his master he had pined since she left a month before to go back to her father's home.

McKellar had sent Tiuro for a paper. He must have gone a distance to get it, he was so long away. The man went into the living room. It looked emptier to-night than usual. The piano in the corner was closed—had been for a month. And he never failed to notice the empty spot beside the book rack where Elise used to lay her embroidery.

He flipped a dollar and watched it settle on the hearth. Tails! He would go to the opera. He had rather hoped it would be heads, for he preferred the club. That was what had started the trouble—but no use going over the old story. McKellar shrugged and stooped for the coin.

Something seemed to be wrong in the street. he apartment was on the first floor above the ground and he walked to the window.

A crowd stood around an automobile in front of the building and McKellar could make nothing out of the confusion. Then the sharp clang of an ambulance bell rang out on the night air and the crowd disappeared. It was then he saw the prostrate form on the asphalt near the car.

Suddenly the door of the living room was flung open behind him. He turned and faced Elise, her face pale with terror. She gave him no time for word. Even as she spoke a policeman appeared in the hall beside her and touched her arm.

"Quick, Vivian, go down. I have run over Tiuro with my car. They want to take him to the hospital, but make them bring him up here, won't you?" Then turning to the officer of the law she said simply, "I am ready to go with you now."

Vivian had to let her go alone. The poor, crushed body of the little Jap required all his attention. He laid him tenderly on his own bed and sent for the best doctors he knew. Until they came he could not leave.

At last he was at liberty to go. But at the police station he was told that Elise had been allowed to go. Her father had signed the bond for her temporary freedom and taken her home.

McKellar turned wearily away. The feeling of relief at finding her free was overcome by the overwhelming sense of his uselessness to her. He was not needed. He never had been. Elise had a home as good, better than his, and her father was true, she did not need him.

He learned at the station that she was driving her car alone when it ran over the Jap. Why she was without a chauffeur he did not know. Then the feeling of uneasiness returned. What if Tiuro should die! It would be unpleasant for her. The old feeling of responsibility, of wanting to protect her was strong in him.

He bowed to the inevitable, and when he opened his own door again he looked like an old man.

The doctors had gone. Tiuro lay sleeping quietly. He was unconscious of pain. Vivian sat near watching him. He had refused to have a nurse. The little fellow who had sat night after night watching him while he tossed with fever at Port Arthur and nursed him back to life should know what gratitude meant. He was going to fight for his life. The battle had already begun.

The night light was turned low. McKellar in dressing gown and slippers had allowed his magazine to slide to the floor unnoticed. He was awake but dreaming. How he longed for Elise. Every fibre of his body cried out for her. Then the barbed shaft sank into his heart for the second time that night. She had ceased to need him, ceased to care for him. His head bowed as though under a burden he could not bear.

It was time for the medicine! He sprang up guiltily, brushing his hand over his eyes to banish the bitter thoughts.

Was he mad? Had trouble dimmed his brain, or had the dim light attracted the world of spirits? He looked again. Elise was standing before him all in white. Her fur cloak had slipped to the floor and her hair and the long white veil across her shoulders sparkling with drops of melted snow. But her eyes—her eyes, how they shone!

The man trembled. The sudden shock weakened him. Why had she come to mock him? It was hard enough to bear without this. He stood silent. He had no words for her; he could think of nothing to say.

Elise moved slowly toward the bed. "Do you know what this boy has done, Vivo?" It was the old name. "He sacrificed himself for us—to save us. Don't you see? I have thought it all out. He did this to bring us together. He saw me alone in the car out there and threw himself in my way. He knew you were in here, that you would come out to—to help me. He must have seen me night after night pass by and look up at your windows. He knew you cared and that I—I still cared and he was generous enough to risk his life—to break down our pride."

"Elise."

She turned her eyes full of the old love light toward him. "Vivo, will you take me back? We must not make this sacrifice in vain."

Tiuro sighed and opened his eyes, then turned his head toward them. The ghost of a smile lighted up his face, then another sigh and he slept again.

Vivian folded Elise in his arms and touched his lips to her hair. "Thank God for this," he said, "and we will nurse him back to life together."—Buffalo News.

HE HAD TO PAY

A farmer calling at the village school was asked by the master if he would like to question the scholars.

So he said to the class: "If either of you can tell me the weight of the moon, the depth of the sea and what I am thinking about, I will give a prune of sixpence."

There were twin brothers in this class named Sam and Joe. Now, Joe put up his hand and the farmer said, "Well, Sam, what is your answer?"

Joe replied: "The weight of the moon is four quarters, the depth of the sea is a stone's throw," and then he paused.

The farmer responded: "Well, Sam, what am I thinking about?"

"Why, you are thinking you are talking to Sam when it is his brother Joe!"—Ideas.

Sulphur is a Natural Element of the Hair

When there is not a sufficient amount of sulphur in the hair, it loses its life, color and strength, turns gray, and falls out. BALDNESS CURED

For two or three years my hair had been falling out and getting quite thin, until the top of my head was entirely bald. About four months ago I commenced using Sage and Sulphur. The first bottle seemed to do some good and I kept using it regularly, until now I have used four bottles. The whole top of my head is now fairly covered with hair, and it keeps coming in thicker. I shall keep on using it a while longer, as I notice a constant improvement.

BATTLE WITH SHARKS IN MIDOCEAN

THRILLING Experience of a Coal Passer, Who, After Being Swept Overboard, Fought for Hours Slaying with a Clasp Knife Monsters of the Deep That Attacked Him

ANDREW ANDERSON was born in Aarusa, Denmark, thirty-five years ago. When fourteen years old he went to sea and he is still following the life. He was reared on the waterand says he thinks he swam before he walked, for which he is very thankful. Anderson is a great reader and is well informed. He told the following story to a representative of this paper in Galveston, Texas. The log books of the Nollsement and the Melton bear him out. He, with a companion, was adrift on the Pacific Ocean for two days with but a pint of water to drink.

I DO not know that all I saw was true. It is hard now to believe, here where all is rational and commonplace, that such monsters live even in the unsounded depths of the sea. Perhaps some of the sights which tortured my fever racked brain were children of my own imagination, but whatever may be true of the sights I saw the things I felt were real. The great gashes cut in my naked body were not dealt by imaginary teeth, nor was the black spiked fin that cleaved the water close to my side and cut deep into my muscles a hallucination, for when I was taken from the water my body was tattooed with jagged wounds.

I was fourteen when I went to sea before the mast. With the passing of the sailing vessels I took to steamships, but the life was not the same. I was not fitted for the work. After varying fortunes I became a coal passer on board the British steamship Melton, bound for St. Vincent. The work isn't that of a seaman. It's more like mining. Down in a grimy, dark tunnel you lift and wheel and shovel the black food on which the great vessel lives, and the dust chokes your nostrils and blinds your eyes and soaks into your skin when the pores are open with perspiration. Sometimes you have to fire the boilers.

It is light in the boiler room, at any rate, and the ventilating shafts pump down air that just reminds you there must be a real world somewhere with freshness and light and sun. But every time the great furnace doors are opened the heat of an inferno blasts against your dripping body and face. After two or three years of that you go crazy, and unless you die you either do some one harm or are shut up in an asylum.

It was four o'clock one morning, on board the Melton, when, my shift being relieved, I climbed through one of the dingy, dirty hatches to smell the fresh air and just reminded myself that here were stars and sunrises and things that a sailorman loves. They always gave us coffee at the end of a spell in the hold, and I was in the habit of going on deck to drink mine. We were in a heavy gale that day, and the crash of the waves against the side, the sting of the salt spray in the face and the black, angry, scudding clouds exhilarated me.

With my cup in one hand I leaned over the rail, watching the water surge and roll. I stood to leeward. Suddenly a giant mound of water lifted the other side of the vessel high above me. The deck seemed almost like a wall, rising sheer from the sea. I gloried in it for a fraction of a second; then the ship dipped. A mound of water, green and cold, swashed over the side and deck. I was caught and twisted and wrenched. I felt myself sweeping away from the vessel. Some mysterious force dragged me downward till I thought my lungs would burst with the holding of my breath. The twisting and turning dizzied me; then as suddenly I was shot upward and thrashed wildly about at the surface of the water.

Rolling through the seas, a heavy black trail dragging low over her stern, the Melton was pounding along under full speed. At times I could see the propeller race and churn the water, which it only half clutched. I knew the noise it was making and the grinding of the machinery, yet I foolishly wasted breath shouting and yelling at the top of my voice. It was the frenzied, unthinking strength wasting of a madman, and when the first shock of my catastrophe had passed I began to collect my thoughts.

There was little use to yell. I had stood entirely alone on the deck. None would miss me for an hour or more, and there was not the slightest chance of the Captain putting back, not for the life of a coal passer lost—none could tell how long in that turbulent sea.

Being an old sailor, I carefully followed the course of the vessel and I knew that we were about two hundred miles from land. In a calm sea I would perish before making quarter of the distance. Black as the sky seemed my chances for rescue, and the sickening thought of what I might endure in a prolonged struggle for life tempted me to give up, to end it all and save the anguish of thirst and hunger and cold and gradual death.

Yet the tonic of the cold salt water stimulated me and I struck out diligently, somewhat preserving the warmth of my body by cleaving through the water. Since childhood the water had been as home to me. I had never reached the limits of my endurance in swimming, and for what was probably the first hour in the sea I suffered little physical hardship. The tossing of the waves made it hard to breathe, but my muscles did not tire.

It very soon appeared that the gale was blowing itself out. Dark lowering patches of clouds skittled across the skies, and here and there a little glimpse of dull blue showed. Gradually light grew, and then all the glory of a sunrise, breaking through the watery heavens, lighted the east.

The scene was beautiful beyond description, but all its warm, live loveliness struck terror into my heart. The light and the air and the great salt sea I loved, and all these I should have to give up for darkness and gloom and strange surroundings in the terrific depths of water. Life seemed good and I did not want to lose it. Then I pictured the struggle that would ensue, saw the battle which would be fought out there amid all that cheery light and under the torrid rays of the sun. I felt in my fancy the pangs of thirst, the chill bite of the water after it had sapped my strength, and thought of that last desperate struggle when, thrashing and lunging with nerveless arms and legs, I should be swallowed up by the ocean, beautiful and cruel.

Rage flamed in my heart. I would have beat upon that unfeeling sea and wasted my strength in worse than foolish temper. I raised my hand to curse the heavens, but with the act the sea closed over my head. The water was ready there to take advantage of every opportunity I offered. With the least relaxation on my part I should be dragged down, overcome. My foe was tireless, vigilant, absolutely unmerciful.

In the Grip of the Sea.

In that moment I despaired and doubted. I steeled my heart to end it all, and then, just as I was about to sink, the sun, emerging from a little bulk of cloud, danced on the water, and a wave, far off, smiled at me with the reflection of the light.

In every man there is something stronger than courage, stronger than fear, more powerful than hope or despair. It is the primal, instinctive passion for life. When reason whispers that the life is not worth the living then comes this great passion.

For a while I tired myself with frantic swimming, whither I knew not. With the first feeling of exhaustion I came to my senses and realized that my sole hope was to merely keep myself afloat until some passing vessel should pick me up. The struggle resolved itself into a cold, reasoning fight. My chances were better that way. I realized that it was my duty to preserve life to the last breath. In what followed I showed no bravery or courage. I can truthfully disclaim anything of heroism. It was merely a fight for life such as would be waged by a dog or a fish or a reptile.

Cold began to weaken me. My skin was goose flesh with the chill, and I shivered terribly. This was another element to fight against, for with no nourishment and no rest the cold would eat away my strength faster than would the struggle.

When I fell overboard I was clad in trousers and shoes. The shoes were not laced and it was easy to kick them off. The trousers would have slipped from me, too, but with a foolish, lurking thought that they would help preserve my warmth I dreaded to cast them away. It was silly and inexcusable, but later it proved my salvation. I had heard of a man adrift clinging to his garments with almost a superstitious idea that he would be warmer and had laughed at him, yet when my time came I clung stubbornly to the same belief. Besides, it seemed that with the loss of my trousers I would sever my last connection with mankind and with the life of the world. Can you believe that they furnished a feeling of companionship? In some way which I am not psychologist enough to explain they linked me to the life of men.

All this time the enervating influence of the water was tiring me, and I began to know fatigue. Muscles that had been elastic reacted sluggishly and all but refused to do the work demanded of them. The strange currents of the sea had drifted me into warmer water, and although I no longer endured the intense cold the comfortable feeling lulled me into relaxation and there was not the same stimulus to physical effort.

I must have been in the water two hours when with horrible suddenness I felt a rasping touch against my foot. Had I suffered a wound it would not have been so bad. At first I thought I was losing my mind, then there wriggled against my other foot a live, unimaginable body. If I could only have seen it perhaps the horror would have been less. I reasoned that it must be a small fish, but the touch chilled my soul. It gave me a foretaste of the grewsome scene which would follow the end of the struggle.

Then there was an unmistakable, vicious nibble at my heel. The frightful scavengers of the sea were not even to wait for my death. The fish or monster, whatever it was, that had nibbled at my foot was not a large one, from the feel of the cold, rasping mouth. I kicked viciously and frightened it away. Then it was that I blessed the superstition which had led me to retain my trousers at the expense of a little physical fatigue. In them was a great clasp knife, large enough to be a formidable weapon against man or beast. Kicking strong to keep myself afloat, I managed to wrench open the ugly blade and waited for the return of the horror I was sure would come.

With each stroke of arms and legs I imagined slimy, wriggly sides sloshing against me. The terror of suspense was worse by far than the actual contact had been. Then something thudded, with a live motion, against my ribs, and I would rather have been bitten. I shuddered so that I could scarcely swim.

A great black brown body lumbered to the surface just ahead of me and I struck out with my knife. At the same instant a terrific pain shot up my left leg and vibrated up my spine. Something had gripped the flesh just above the ankle and was pulling insistently. I doubled in the water and struck a terrific blow with the knife. The steel sank into something, which wriggled free of the blade and swam away, leaving a dull, dispersing trail of red in its wake.

Hungrily I scanned the horizon for the smoke of a vessel or the sunlit white of a sail. I shrieked and called aloud, and cursed the men who had steamed away to leave me there to die, to be eaten alive. A stab in my side brought me to my senses. Some horrid live thing of the sea had torn the flesh under my armpit. I was too late with the knife, and in a second I felt another nibble at my leg. I thrashed and kicked wildly, screaming in fear and pain. Into something solid the knife bit, and the contact of it steadied me a little and comforted me. When there was something physical to fight it was not so bad. When there was a chance to give and take part of the horror of the thing was dispelled.

Fighting a Sea Monster.

Just to the right of me I heard a swishing and thrashing. Before I could turn to fight there was a great, spiny black fin, cleaving the water in a white streak. As I was in the very act of striking out with the knife the fin disappeared beneath the surface. It had been cutting in a straight line for me, and the terror of those ironlike spikes made me climb and climb, trying to throw my body up into the air. I could not dodge. The black fin tore my flesh, and excruciating pain doubled me almost into a knot. I believe it was a shark that wounded me.

Dimly, beneath the water, I saw another great hulk darting at me. I dived to dodge it. The white of the great fish's belly glistened in the sun, and I saw my chance. Kicking upward with all the force of my legs, I drove straight at him. The force of my body shooting toward the surface and all the strength of arm and shoulder was behind the blow I dealt, and the knife sank clear to the hilt in the soft flesh of the monster.

My weapon was wrenched almost from my hand, but I clung to it desperately. It was my one hope of salvation, and I would drown in the effort to extricate it rather than let it from my grasp. My life would not be worth the price of the blade if I let it go. The fish turned on his back and careened through the water at a terrific rate. I was dragged, half drowned, after it. At times I was almost clear of the water. Then again I was pulled under from the very speed at which we travelled. Twice the monster dived, and I thought that all was over, but he did not seek deep water and rose again when my lungs were all but bursting from the strain.

I must have been dragged a hundred yards before the knife pulled free, and, battered and lacerated, I was allowed to rest. Sharp fins and spines had torn my sides. I was all but drowned, and the beating and thrashing of the frantic body of my enemy left me sore and stiff. I had not regained my breath when, without warning, there was a crash against my side that seemed to loosen every bone in my body. I thought my back was broken, and I believe this blow nearly finished me. I sank at least once, but the sting of the salt water in my nostrils and the choking revived me, and I struggled on, panting and sobbing for breath.

I seemed now to be in the midst of a school of fish, which scuttled against me and bit and nibbled. The pain of the water in my wounds maddened me. I was frantic and dealt knife blows right and left, sometimes striking home and sometimes cleaving nothing but water. The sea grew red about me at times, and besides the fierceness of the struggle it sickened me.

A great finny thing darted at me and turned on its back to bite. I stabbed it almost in the maw and shuddered as I realized that it was a shark. The knife wrenched free, but the shark drove at me again. I struck effectively and wounded him, but once more he returned. Once as I lunged at him he tore my arm, and I was afraid that he had disabled it, but the fight continued. We closed with each other, almost like wrestlers, the fish biting and thrashing. I diving and twisting and slashing with the knife. At least ten times I struck home before the end was finished. Then I gloated as the lifeless body floated away.

Hours I had certainly been in the water, and I could not bring myself to believe that days had not passed. The sea was comparatively quiet, but I prayed that a storm might blow and that I might perish quickly—drown in the waves fighting against odds, grand nature instead of being devoured piecemeal by those fishy monsters.

The wound in my arm pained terribly and the limb was stiffened. I feared poisoning and sucked the gash to disinfect it. In a spell of quiet I realized that the sun was beating down upon the water with terrific force, and my head ached with the heat, while my body was cold and weak from long immersion. The water I had swallowed distressed me and my thirst was torturing. Add to that utter exhaustion and intense pain from a multitude of wounds and gashes, and I was all but frantic with my plight. Just when reason began to desert me I know not. When the last real monster wounded me and the chimeras of my imagination began to plague me I do not know, but the anguish of the nightmare onslaughts of monstrous dream things was quite as real as had been the actual struggles with physical enemies.

It was worse. Before, the bite of the knife into cold flesh, the rasp of steel against bone and spine had steadied me and lent the joy of primal fighting, but the fever sights had no flesh. No bone was there when the knife sank deep into the sides of some creature which seemed attacking me, and I shrieked with terror. I struck and my hand and arm sank straight through the body of the thing.

For ages, it seemed, I swam in pursuit of a big green thing which turned a serpent head and laughed at me, and from its gills issued smoke and the red flare of furnaces. Real it was to me, and I exhausted myself pursuing it until at last it turned, and in the act of swallowing me faded into the air.

Slimy creatures played in the waves about me. To some I tried to talk, but they only laughed and mocked and I raged against them and tried to stab them with my knife, but they parted in twain where I struck, and then, the parts swimming off, joined together again and mocked me. I looked to heaven and the skies, and the fleecy clouds tantalized me. I buried my face in the water and the sights I saw beneath the surface were indescribable.

Then I saw land close by, and wondered how I had missed it for so long. I was very thirsty and tired and thought I must have stayed in swimming too long. As I struck out for the shore my thoughts turned to my clothes. I tried to remember where I had left them. How was I to go home if I could not find my clothes? As I looked a foamy white stream cascaded over the side of a cliff and I could not think how it was I had not noticed that at first.

Visions of a Crazed Man.

The land began to dance toward me, then rolled with the motion of a ship and I could hear the water splashing over the falls. My parched throat yearned for it. Suddenly the rushing water laughed and the whole scene disappeared. Yet I could hear the stream falling over the cliff. First behind me, then to the sides, the splashing water sounded, but when I turned to look it was not there.

Time had ceased and I merely struggled on through eternity of suffering. Then there loomed in the distance a new monster. Black and high out of the water it was, and ploughed up foam before it, so fast did it forge ahead. It was dim in the distance, but I clutched my knife more firmly and swam to meet it. Closer and closer it drew, and its breath was black and dirty and streamed out behind it. I knew I must kill the thing and swam sturdily for it. I was close now and astounded at the size of it. Then I saw that it was not one monster I must fight, but many, for out from the side of the mother animal darted a fleet little white monster with many legs and white sides.

This I swam toward to despatch it before attacking the greater one. As it approached it roared with many voices and its many legs churned the water. One of the voices soared in a sing-song, regular manner, and I thought I had heard something of the kind before. Then we closed. Viciously I stabbed with my knife, but it struck a side like steel and was battered from my hand. Now all would be over.

In a dreamy way I felt something warm and strong wrapped about my body. I knew I gasped as I was lifted from the water, and then I saw a pair of eyes—the eyes of a man; the eyes of my own kind. That was the last I remembered.

I awoke in a cabin of the British steamship Nollsement, bound for Buenos Ayres. I had lost my knife attacking the wooden side of the whale boat which had been sent to drag me from the sea. Captain Young told me it was only by chance the first mate had sighted me and had watched me for an hour through the glass, thinking I was some strange fish. The Nollsement had passed the Melton at six o'clock in the morning, two hours after I had fallen from the vessel. The log of the Nollsement shows that I was picked up at half-past nine in the morning, after I was in the water five hours and a half.

As I say where the real left off and the imaginary battles began I do not know, but my wounds were real enough and gave the surgeon of the Nollsement a deal of trouble.

Perilous Adventures Told by and of Living Persons

"At Times I Was Almost Clear of the Water."

WHEN BROTHER FRED CAME

(By Claudine Sisson)
(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Seated before a bright grate fire in the library, with a good cigar in his mouth and his feet in another chair, Tommy Glens was content. Without was a winter blizzard, with snow piling up to the tops of the fences and a gale chasing itself down the country highway; within the house was no other human being. The mother had gone away the day before on a short visit, and te cook had been given two days' holiday. Tommy had felt himself able to wrestle with skillet and coffee pot, and had been left to do it. Tommy Glens gravitated between the city and his mother's manor house. He was supposed to be studying for the bar, but he wasn't wearing out his brains. He had been at it a year, and yet he doubted if he could fill out the blank spaces in a bill of sale. Tommy, being twenty-four years old, was supposed to have his eye out for matrimony, but he hadn't. Tommy wasn't looking for trouble in any direction. He just wanted to be let alone and take comfort.

And so the gale roared, the snow fell, the drifts piled up, and Tommy Glens smoked and read and yawned and wondered why so many people spent so much time in kicking when the kicks did no good.

A mile away, an hour or so before the lone young man sat down, Miss Nellie Grafton looked from the window on the storm for a minute and then turned to her mother and said:

"Why, mother, it's growing worse all the time!"

"Yes."

"It's a regular blizzard!"

"I guess it is."

"But I've got to drive to the depot with the cutter to get Fred. He isn't very well, you know, and he couldn't walk a mile and a half through this storm. He'll try to, though, if I'm not there."

Brother Fred was to come from the city on the 7 o'clock train. Had his train come through he would have been with it, and just outside of the depot he would have found three snow-covered objects representing his sister and a pony and cutter. The train had left the city on time, but lost two hours bucking the snow drifts. No sister, no pony, no cutter to greet him when he at length arrived! No hotel at the country station, and the man in charge of the depot said it was against orders to permit suspicious persons to pass the night in the waiting room. It was therefore Fred for home; and some time before midnight he got there. It was to find that the pony had arrived an hour before him dragging the cutter on its side and carrying a great hump of the fleecy on its back and the mother walking the floor and wringing her hands.

"She's been tipped over in some drift and is freezing to death!" was the wail.

Brother Fred should have stumbled over the victim if she had kept to the road, but as he hadn't he had to take it that his sister had staggered aside before falling. Of course he must return over the road. The pony was brought out to face the storm again, the whip vigourously applied and the search for a freezing or frozen girl was on.

As the pony made his slow way through the drifts the brother had time to wonder what a frozen sister would look like. Would she begin to freeze at her ears or her toes first? Would there be a smile on her face or a look of terror? Would her hands be folded over her bosom or would they be extended at full length, as if reaching for the aid that never came? In lifting the poor girl into the cutter might she not break in two and have to be carried home in halves?

Tommy Glens was so content to hear that old blizzard raging outside while he was so comfy where he was that in time he dozed. In time he he dreaed that he was with Dr. Cook within 2,000 miles of the north pole and that he was listening to cries for help. Those cries awoke him, and then he heard them in reality.

Bareheaded and in dressing gown and slippered feet, Tommy made a rush for the arctic circle, which was the highway, and when he returned to the house he bore the half insensible form of Miss Nellie Grafton in his arms. A quarter of a mile down the road, as she was returning home, the pony had tried to climb the fence and had upset things, and then started off for his warm stable.

The girl had made headway until exhausted, and the point reached happened to be in front of the Glens house. Three or four calls for help, and then Miss Nellie was a huddle in the snow. She only dimly realised it when she was carried into the house and the warm library and placed in the big rocking chair, and to this day she is not sure that Tommy Glens danced around her and exclaimed:

"What shall I do—damn it, what shall I do? It's a girl, and if I don't do something she'll die!"

Tommy had done nothing as yet—not even to look for the brush broom to brush away the snow, when the victim revived enough to say:

"A little wine or brandy, please."

In 30 seconds Tommy had the decanter from the sideboard, and the drink he poured out would have made a horse dizzy for the next three days. Miss Nellie only sipped it, and about five sips made her sit up and say:

"How silly of me! I thought I could face the storm all right."

"You would have frozen to death but I happened to hear your cries. I guess you are all right now, though. Let me turn the chair to the fire."

"I'll wait a few minutes and see if the storm doesn't let up. Your mother has retired, I suppose?"

"She's away."

"What!"

"And so is everybody else and I'm alone in the house."

"You here alone!" exclaimed Miss Nellie as she rose up and staggered towards the door. "I—I——"

"Oh, come, now, Miss—Miss Grafton, I think it must be—you can't go out into this storm!" pleaded Tommy.

"But you see—you see——"

"You go back and sit down and I'll go out myself. I'll go up into the garret. I'll go down cellar. I'll find a nice warm snow drift. My name is Tommy Glens, if you don't know it, and I'm perfectly willing to have my ears frosen for your sake."

The girl halted, smiled and returned to her chair to say:

"I'm afraid you wouldn't look well with your ears amputated. Sit down and we'll talk. I have met your mother, and a dear old lady she is, but I have not seen you before. You may have met my brother, Fred?"

"N-o-o, but I shall very soon now."

"But we are to talk about reciprocity, the tariff, woman suffrage and all that, you know. Now, then, begin; and I will take the other side for argument's sake."

It was two hours later that the desperate brother, Fred, after being almost frozen in looking for a quite frozen sister, stumbled up to the door and rang the bell and disturbed a heated argument as to whether old maids should be given the ballot along with the rest of the sex. There were exclamations and explanations, and in the midst of them Tommy drew Fred to the front door and outside it to say:

"Mr Grafton, we are having a blizzard."

"Well?"

"And I want your permission to pay my addresses to your sister with a view to matrimony."

"You've got nerve to drag me out here in this storm to tell me that. But I like nerve. Go ahead."

And as the other sex admires nerve up to a certain point Mr. Tommy went ahead.

CONTRACTED HEAVY COLD

Was In Bed Two Months.

DOCTORS DID NOT SEEM TO DO HER ANY GOOD.

A cold, however slight, should never be neglected, for if it is not treated in time it will, in all possibility, lead to bronchitis, pneumonia, asthma, or some other serious throat or lung troubles.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains the lung healing virtues of the Norway Pine tree, which, combined with other absorbent, expectorant and soothing medicines, makes it without a doubt the best remedy for all coughs and colds.

Miss N. McCumber, St. Martin's N.B., writes:—"In January last I contracted a heavy cold which kept me in bed nearly two months, and the doctors didn't seem to be able to do me any good. I tried several proprietary medicines, but all in vain. One day a friend advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and when I had taken three bottles I was completely cured, and I feel as well to-day as I ever did, and I am sure my lungs are once more sound, thanks to that wonderful remedy."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

WILL NOT FREEZE

NEW YORK, JAN. 17.—All the people on earth will not freese to death in 1913. That has been attended to by the Hopi Indians in Arizona. This information is official, and the authority for the statement is Col. Hugh L. Scott, U.S.A., former superintendent of the military academy at West Point, and at present commanding the famous Third cavalry, one of the regiments now on duty on the Mexican border. He had to wait three days for the wise men of the tribe to conjure back the sun.

In addition to being one of the army's best known soldiers and most erudite scholars, Col. Scott enjoys the distinction of being the one white man now living who thoroughly understands the mysterious sign languages of the North American Indians. There is no more beloved soldier in the army, the Indians being his devoted servitors, and when everything else h s failed to settle a dispute in which the Indian is involved, Col. Scott is generally selected to settle the matter, and the records show that he always succeeds.

"The turning back of the sun," a feat that the Hopis think they have accomplished, was witnessed by Col. Scott during a recent visit to the Hopi villages in North-Eastern Arizona. He had been sent there on the request of the department of the int rior to find out why the Hopis refused to send their children to the government schools. For months the government had been trying to get them to patronise the schools, but they persistently refused, and finally Col. Scott was called on to deal with the problem. He is called the "Mole Tuquop" by the Indians, which, in England, means "He talks with his hands." The colonel was transferred temporarily from the war department to the interior and intrusted with the mission to go to the Hopi country and settle the differences that had arisen between the Indians and the White Father at Washington.

CROSSED PAINTED DESERT.

A few weeks ago Col. Scott left Washington and proceeded by rail to Holbrook, Aris., from which place he went on horseback over the Painted Desert to the Hopi villages. After a long and tedious ride he arrived at the village where the head chiefs of the Hopis were assembled. He found them busy "turning back the sun."

They were glad and happy to meet "Mole Tequop," but even one so beloved as he would have to wait until the ceremonies incident to the control of the sun had been completed, they informed him. Col. Scott accordingly postponed official talk until after the sun had been properly attended to. In a letter to a New York friend, which was received the other day he tells of the interesting ceremony of which he was a privileged witness.

"Your letter," Col. Scott wrote, "was delivered to me in the Painted Desert of Arizona on my way back to the railway station from the Hopi towns. I wish you could have been along, for I know you would have enjoyed it and you would have got a lot of interesting information. The Hopi towns are among the oldest in North America and the Indians are extremely primitive.

"When I visited them they were engaged in ceremonies preparatory to the turning back of the sun. I was informed that if they did not attend to this for us the sun would get clear away from the earth and never come back again, and we would all freese to death."

Col. Scott did not refer to the official part of his journey or indicate whether his mission had been successful, but from another source it is learned that he accomplished all he was sent to do and that by now all the little Hopi boys and girls are probably busy with the "three R's," with everybody in the Hopi country happy.

HIS WORD IS LAW WITH THEM.

"Col. Scott's word with the Indian is law," said a Governors Island friend, "and it is a safe bet that he settled the Hopi controversy in short order and to the entire satisfaction of everybody else, but he never loses his faith in Col. Scott. Among them just as he is to the Moros of the Sulu Archipelago, Col. Scott is looked upon as a father, firm but always kind, honest and just.

The records in Washington show that Col. Scott has seldom failed to settle any Indian controversy that has ever been intrusted to him. Three years ago a little Indian war seemed imminent in the Four Corners section of the west, so named because the states of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona met there. Col. Scott and a sergeant went to the scene of the trouble and in three days the war zone was as peaceful as a New England village.

Col. Scott for a long time was governor of the Sulu Archipelago in the Philippines. He gained the trust and affection of the Moros just as he has that of the Indians, and when he left the Moros gave him the original copy of the Koran, which had been the most treasured possession of the Mohammedan chief priests for more than five centuries. The Moros are still begging that Col. Scott be sent back to govern them.

ASTHMA

Mrs. Farndel of Clementsport, N. S., Suffered All Her Life From Asthma, But Was Permanently Cured by Catarrhozone After All Other Means Failed.

Mrs. Farndel gives the following statement of her case for the benefit of others who are suffering from asthma, and hopes that many will follow her example and use Catarrhozone:—

"I am now in my eightieth year and cannot recall the time when I was free from asthma. I had always a choking cough, feverishness, spasms difficulty in breathing, headache and nausea. My druggist advised Catarrhozone one day, and I bought a large outfit. It gave relief in five minutes, and helped me very much in one day.

"I inhaled Catarrhozone ten minutes every hour, and by the time two bottles were used I was completely cured. I am as free now from asthma as if I never had it. My perfect recovery is due entirely to Catarrhozone. I prize my Catarrhozone inhaler next to life itself."

SCOTT HOUSE

(Short Story.)

Close on the bank of the Indus River, where it flows into the Arabian Sea, Hubert Scott had built a house after his own fancies. There were countless balconies and cupolas of uniform design. The most luxurious sunset was the roof of many-coloured glass which covered the main hall. At mid-day when the sun shone fairly upon this ceiling it resembled a garden of flowers deep in colour. As the shadows moved across it the stems seemed to bend as in the wind. They were not mystical flowers of Arabia, but the proud blossoms of England, the choicest of roses. The whole charm of the picture was centered about the graceful figure of a girl bending over the flowers which she was picking. Each day, when it was cool enough, luncheon was served in this spacious hall, not for guests, but for the young master of Scott House.

A general curiosity had lately been aroused among the servants. A rumour was circulated to the effect that young Mr. Scott was about to choose a wife from among the Hindoos. Others said that his associations with Bela Kota were merely friendly. As the weeks passed he was often seen on the shore with the black-eyed Hindoo girl, but he never brought her to his house of dreams. He had loved a girl in England with a wealth of golden hair and eyes that were clearer than the waters of the sea, but she had been taken out of his life forever. What could it mean, that he should be so infatuated with a girl so unlike her. His house of roses was built in memory of Rose Allen, and now he was swearing his love to another when he knew that he could not ask any girl to enter Scott House.

One afternoon they sailed on the Indus and Bela Kota's eyes seemed to threaten him as he told of his love for her, and when she finally spoke he knew that he had read her eyes rightly.

"You love me as a toy, Hubert, not as you should. Isn't there someone living who treated you badly? Is that why you came to Koree?"

His head was turned away from her. She thought his cheeks were flushed and that his teeth moved on his lips. She hated him at times for the queerness of his love and the instinct of her race sent a thrill of wickedness through her body, a feeling that she would like to take his life and destroy it as he was destroying her heart. He did not answer, so she spoke to him again, but changed the conversation.

"How beautiful Scott House is from here. The towers are like the minarets of the houses of worship. People talk weirdly of the roof of glass. Some day I hope to enter your sacred shrine."

He turned and looked angrily at her. "No one on earth but my servants from England have ever seen the inside of Scott House, and no one ever shall."

"You're young to have had a love affair of this kind," and her laugh caused the man at the wheel to look up, "but don't let it ruin your life; it's a weakness of the English."

Perhaps what she said was true. He drew her close to him, and she was startled at the tenderness in his voice. "Dear one, you are the only one who has made me want to leave this house of sorrow that I have built for myself. I must get away from it to-morrow. Bela, I am young yet. Could you try to make me forget a great disappointment, of which I shall never tell you? Do you care enough to go away from your people as my wife?"

It was what she had longed to be asked for weeks, and at the landing she left him, feeling that Brahma was kind.

As Hubert Scott climbed the stone steps leading to his home he stumbled on into the darkness and did not raise his head until a sound came to him from the valley; it was Bela Kota singing a chant of the Hindoo.

That evening he dined in the hall for the first time. The small candles cast a flickering light about the table as he leaned wearily back in his chair before the untouched supper. He heard the doors close after the servant, but still felt that he was not alone. His hand moved toward a small black button on the wall near him and rested motionless for a second upon it. Then his fingers moved and he uttered a sound like a groan as the roof of flowers was lighted artificially for the first time. Rose Allen was stooping over the bed of roses and the flowers were slipping from her hands; the blossoms were fading, and as he forced himself to look at the image of the girl he had loved he crumpled the napkin in his strong fingers. How could he have said he would leave her? There was a loud rumble outside and he knew that a bad storm was coming in from the water. He thought of how he had vowed that nothing but the cruel working of nature could take this picture of her from him; and that very day he had given his word that he would leave it all.

Every light was turned out suddenly in Scott House and a strong wind roared louder than the fearful rumbling overhead. The young master sat alone in the darkness still staring upward. There was a flash of light outside which showed once more the bed of roses and the beautiful girl bowing over them; the face was bright like the flowers, but only for an instant. A strange snapping followed, and as Hubert Scott jumped from his chair with arms stretched upward, he heard the deafening roar of thunder and wind, and then he was crushed to the floor.

The terrific noise brought the servants hurrying to the hall, but there was nothing to be done; the storm had wrought its work.

Down in the valley Bela Kota had been watching the lightning play about Scott House, and after the fatal flash she hurried up the rough hillside and in through the door unnoticed. Silently she gazed on the beautiful face in the glass, all that was left of the work he had erected and which had taken his own life. Bela Kota was a Hindoo, strong in her belief, and so she knelt in the house of dreams and roses and sang a chant to the stars as they twinkled happily down on the ruins of Scott House.—Boston Post.

A LEAP YEAR TIP HOW QUEENS PROPOSE

Of the famous women of history who have proposed marriage, few have taken advantage of the leap year privilege of womankind. Although tradition credits several notable women with tales of how they proposed marriage to men, who in some cases rejected and in other accepted them, the more gallant facts of history give credit only to royalty for the exercise of the prerogative. Among the queens who proposed were,

Marie Therese, Empress of Austria, and Queen of Hungary, was sole heiress to the Australian dominions when she met the Archduke Francis Joseph of Lorraine in 1735. With the imperiousness that characterized her, she chose Francis for her husband and ordered the ministers of her father, Charles VI., to notify him of the honour. Francis was, fortunately for her, enamored of her wonderful beauty. He accepted formally, but their marriage proved remarkably happy for a royal one. Marie Therese made Francis her coregent in 1740, and emperor in 1750.

Elizabeth of Russia, daughter of Peter the Great, dispossessed of her rights by the Regent Anna Leopoldowna and her son Ivan, came back to the throne of her father through the conspiracy achieved by Alexis Razumovsky. After her accession to Russia's throne, Elizabeth proposed marriage to Razumovsky, a request equivalent to a command, and married him morganatically in the palace chapel. Although Elizabeth had one daughter, she made Peter of Holstein, husband of the famous Empress Catherine, her heir. The marriage of Elizabeth and Razumovsky was not happy.

Elizabeth of England in the thirteenth year of her reign found her kingdom in such a perilous crisis that she sent an ambassador to the Emperor Maximilian at Spires, informing him that she would be willing to make alliance with his brother, the Archduke Charles. The emperor replied that his brother "had turned his thoughts on another match, and was now engaged to a princess with whom there could be no disputes on the subject of religion." Elizabeth naturally grew wroth over the ungracious refusal of her proposal, declaring "that the emperor had offered her so great an insult that if she had been a man instead of a woman, she would have defied him to a single combat."

Catherine Parr, stepmother of Elizabeth, and widow of Henry VIII., proposed to Thomas Seymour, brother of the Earl of Hertford, shortly after Henry's death, and before the reading of the dead king's will. Seymour was declared to have been in love with the Princess Elizabeth, and to have become betrothed to Catherine simply for ambition, hoping that she would be made regent during the minority of her stepson, Edward. But the Earl of Hertford had been designated for that office. Seymour and Catherine were married in the chapel at Whitehall, with Elizabeth for a witness, 30 days after Henry's death, but Catherine died, heart-broken by her husband's neglect and coldness, a few years later.

Victoria of England proposed marriage to Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha in 1839, a year after she had been crowned Queen of England, succeeding her uncle, William IV., and when she was but 20 years of age. The Princess Victoria had been raised in retirement by her mother, the Duchess of Kent, and her aunt, the Duchess of Northumberland, and without any expectation of the necessity of asking one of the royal gentlemen of Europe to become a prince-consort. Upon her accession to the throne, however, the eligible royalties of Europe were diplomatically brought to her attention. Her interest, however, was won by the obscure prince of Saxe-Gotha. The story goes that Queen Victoria made her proposal to the prince with maidenly modesty—in the public view of Kensington Gardens! Their marriage was one of the most domestically placid in the history of royal families.

The most recent marriage consummated through the known proposal of the woman was that of Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands to the Prince Consort Henry. Queen Wilhelmina, who had ascended the throne as a child with her mother as regent, had an experience very similar to that of Queen Victoria. With the eligible royalties of Europe at her disposal she selected a prince whose principal diplomatic claim was his obscurity. The details of the proposal method were more carefully guarded than those of her predecessors in the art, but the Dutch people greeted their queen's betrothal with acclaim.

A Poor Proposition.

Frank A. Munsey, the publisher, is noted among his friends as a close reasoner.

A New York reporter submitted recently to Mr. Munsey a proposal for a new magazine on novel lines. Mr. Munsey proved in a closely reasoned argument that this magazine would fail. Then, in conclusion, he said.

"Or, if the magazine did pay, it would pay so little that its publishers would be like an editor in the neighbourhood of my native Mercer.

"Near Mercer, Me., lived an editor who once printed in his weekly paper this editorial announcement:

"'In view of the fact that we are unable to pay the road tax of $8 assessed against us we have been sentenced to a period of confinement by the authorities. Consequently, there will be no issue of this paper for the next month; but, as the state will have to board us, we figure that we shall come out some $15 ahead."—New York Tribune.

New Home for Roman Boat.

The delicate operation of removing the Roman boat which was found in the bed of the Thames on the site of the new London County Hall to the orangery in Kensington Palace Gardens was completed recently without misadventure.

The boat was found embedded deep down in the substratum of the river bed during excavations last year, and since it has been exposed to the air the beams have hardened, cracked, and shrunk. The whole structure is so brittle that it was necessary to build a frame completely round it. The keel had to be enclosed in a box, as otherwise it would probably have dropped out altogether.

When the timbers came to be moved a quantity of bones were found in a very decayed and brittle condition. These have been enclosed in wire netting, and included the rib of a man and other human remains and also the jaw of a dog.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Jan. 24.—There was an increased demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat to-day, but cables were easier and prices 1d to 2d lower, but notwithstanding this fact sales of about 250,000 bushels were made for nearby and May-June shipment. The demand for oats continues good and a fairly large business is being worked to all ports and especially so to Antwerp for May-June. There was quite a boom in local prices for oats to-day, as they advanced 1½c per bushel owing to the good demand for spot goods and the small offerings. Sales of round lots of extra No. 1 feed were made at 43c ex-store, but the holders at the close asked 43c.

There continues to be a fairly good enquiry for spring wheat flour, but millers state that the bids are 6d to 9d per sack out of line. A good local trade continues to be done at firm prices. Bran and shorts are scarce and wanted. Cheese, firm. Demand for butter good. Eggs, fairly active. Provisions in fair demand.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Jan. 24.—At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market the offerings this morning were 850 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 1650 hogs and 200 calves. There was no change in the condition of the market for cattle, prices being firm, owing to the continued scarcity of good to choice stock, in fact there was none of the latter obtainable and only a few loads of the former and as buyers generally were short of beef, they were obliged to turn their attention to the lower grades. Consequently the demand was good and a fairly active trade was done. The top price reached for good steers, $6.30, but buyers would have paid $6.75 to $7 for choice if they could have been had. Sales of choice cows and bulls were made at $5.50 per cwt.

The market was also bare of choice sheep, lambs and calves, and in consequence the prices realized were not as high as on Monday, owing to the difference of the quality of the stock offered. The top price paid for lambs was $6.75 and as the sheep were very common only $4 per cwt. was paid for them, while the highest paid for the calves was $13 each.

A weaker feeling prevailed in the market for hogs on account of the increased supplies and prices declined 10c to 25c per cwt., and even at this reduction, drovers found it impossible to make a clearance, but the stock that was left over was of a poor quality.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $6.75 to $7; medium, $5 to $6.50; common, $3 to $4; canners, $2.50 to $3; choice cows, $5.25 to $5.60; medium, $3 to $5; bulls, $4.50 to $5.50; milkers, choice, each, $60 to $65; common and medium, each, $40 to $55; springers, $50 to $60. Sheep, ewes, $4.50 to $4.75; bucks and culls, $3 to $4.25; lambs, $6.50 to $7. Hogs, f.o.b., $7. Calves, $3 to $12.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Jan. 24.—Cattle—Receipts, 50; market, slow, steady; prime steers, $7 to $8; butcher grades, $5 to $6.75.

Calves—Receipts, 200; market, active, firm; common to prime, $5.75 to $10.25.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 11,000; market, slow, 10c lower; choice lambs, $6.50 to $6.65; cull to fair, $5 to $6.40; yearlings, $5 to $5.50; sheep, $1.75 to $4.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 1700; market, active, 10c to 15c higher; yorkers, $6.30 to $6.40; pigs, $6.25; mixed, $6.30 to $6.40; heavies, $6.20 to $6.30; roughs, $5.90 to $6.15; stags, $4.75 to $5.25.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—Cattle—Receipts, 14,000; market firm; beeves, $4.15 to $8.85; Texas steers, $4.40 to $6.75; western steers, $4.85 to $7.10; stockers and feeders, $3.60 to $6.50; cows and heifers, $2.10 to $6.60; calves, $5.50 to $8.75.

A MAN FROM THE COUNTRY

BY W. BOYD KING.
(Short Story.)

The minister had been ordered abroad by the doctor for three months' rest, but before going he left behind him an urgent request.

"I want,' he said to his leading helper, "the man whose name you will find on this card to fill my place while I am away."

Mr. Howell adjusted his glasses and looked at the card: Rev. "John Grant."

He turned from the card to the minister.

"Well?"

"I know a good deal about the young man," the minister responded. "He is vouched for by men in whom I have the utmost confidence. He is a young man, ambitious, energetic, a born worker."

Mr. Howell looked back at the card. "Where is he? What is he doing?"

"He has charge of a tiny country village, and they tell me Grant has been doing great work there."

Mr. Howell looked a little doubtful. "A country village," he muttered. "This is no country village, you know. We're conservative here to the core. We like big men to preach."

"No doubt of that," laughed the minister. "Well, it will be a great chance for Grant—and that, evidently, is what he needs. Come, let me have your influence, Howell. I've set my heart on this. In fact, I've given my promise that he'll be welcomed here."

Mr. Howell slowly shook his head. "That was a little rash," he said. "But, of course, you know you've got a strong hold on us and that we're ready to do anything reasonable to oblige you. Some of our folks would be well enough pleased to follow out the old custom and fill the pulpit with transients—getting a good one now and then, but I'll tell you what I'll do, Mr. Dover. I'll favour giving the young man a month's trial."

"Good," cried the minister. "That's all I hoped for. Give him a trial and he'll do the rest. And that reminds me, he's on his way here now."

"On his way?"

"Yes. I meant to meet him and introduce him, but since we changed our date of sailing I'll be gone when he comes. I know you will look after him. I gave him your name the last time I wrote."

Mr. Howell called up a smile.

"All right," he said. "Just what you are getting us into nobody knows. But we'll take a chance on a month of it. See you this evening." And he turned away.

"Grant should be here some time Saturday," the minister called after him.

"All right," Mr. Howell called back.

But he was muttering to himself as he passed down the street, and his mutterings seemed to turn on the incongruity of a country village supplying a pulpit in enlightened Manchester.

William Howell was a man of hard business sense, upright and respected. For many years he had been the head of affairs in the church and had helped to build up a large and wealthy congregation. He was the minister's right hand man, which explained why the latter came to him with the proposition—a proposition over which he shook his head as he sat in his private office Saturday afternoon and wondered if the wanderer from the country would appear—and half hoping he wouldn't.

And then the door opened and the man came in. He was a tall young man ,a little gaunt and heavy boned, a dark young man, with thick dark hair and dark eyes and a resolute chin. He was dressed in a serviceable grey suit, something the worse for wear, and his hat was a soft one, grey and wide-brimmed. He laid it on the table as he stepped forward.

"I am John Grant," he said with a quick nod and smile. William Howell arose and put out his hand.

"Glad to welcome you," he said. "Sit down." The young man smiled as he took the seat.

"I'm glad to hear that you are pleased to welcome me," he said. "I had an impression that you might be awaiting my coming with some anxiety."

Willia Howell flushed a little.

"We are slaves of conventionalities," he said. "I'll admit the anxiety." He laughed as his keen eyes looked the young man over. "When did you get here?"

"Early this morning. I've been looking about the town. It's a fine place—in spots."

"I expected you would come direct to me," said William Howell. "I had a boarding-place picked out for you—a very good home in a convenient location."

"Thank you," said the young man, "but I have already found a place. It is in Rossiter Street. It is the home of a widow. I saw the card in the window. She has given me a large room with plenty of windows. She is a poor widow woman—her husband was killed in a cotton mill last year—and she needs the money."

The old merchant looked at the young minister more closely. "I begin to have an impression;" he said, "that you are going to keep yourself busy while you are with us."

The young man nodded gravely.

"I expect to find plenty to do," he replied. Then he arose. "Pardon me," he said, "but I have an engagement at four. During my wanderings this morning I met a very interesting man. He promised to take me through the mill district this afternoon. Will you excuse me?"

"Yes," Mr. Howell answered. "Although I'm sorry you can't take a ride about the town with me. But that will keep. However, I promised Mrs. Howell I'd bring you home to dinner—just ourselves, you understand—and, of course, that engagement must be kept. At 6.30, then. My home is just opposite the church."

"I have seen it," replied the young man. "Thank you for the invitation. I will be there." He paused for a moment. "Mr. Howell," he said, "I believe we are going to be very good friends. I know that I am different from town young men. I've had a different schooling. The men with whom I have been associated know nothing of diplomacy. They speak right out, with no thought of the consequences. If you find me abrupt and brusque charge it to my training and my surroundings."

The old merchant quickly extended his hands. "I am glad to hear you say we are going to be good friends. Good-bye for the present." He looked after the minister thoughtfully. "A singular young man," he murmured. "He's so shockingly in earnest."

There was a second guest at the dinner table of Mr. Howell that evening, a young girl, and John Grant was speedily made acquainted with the fact that she was Miss Ruth Harvey. A little later he was told she was the daughter of the leading supporter of the church, Morgan Harvey, the owner of the big cotton mill just outside the town.

Miss Harvey was a quiet girl who had little to say, a fact that was emphasized by the further fact that it was John Grant who did most of the talking. He was an excellent talker and warmed to his subject as he proceeded, and when he finally hesitated they urged him to go on. "You need no moving pictures to make your stories graphic," said Mrs. Howell, a fine old lady, who beamed across the table at the young man in a motherly way.

John escorted Miss Harvey home that evening—it was only a walk of two streets—and after he left her at the door of the big house he paused at the first corner, and seizing the collar of his coat, violently shook himself.

"That's a splendid girl, John," he said, "but don't you dare get sentimental."

He preached the next morning on the contrasts of poverty and riches, on the abrupt transition from comfort to distress—an abruptness that never struck him so forcibly as in Manchester, where it was but a step from society's realm to the darkest slums. And then he went on and talked of poverty—of its bitterness and its nearness—and closed with the fervent hope that the time was close at hand when the visitor to the town would not have his attitude aroused by these disgraceful words: "This is our slum section."

That evening the church was crowded, but the young minister handed out no sensations. Instead, he talked of the broadening effect of St. Paul's wanderings, and begged his hearers to see their own country before going abroad—promising them an increase of both pleasure and patriotism.

That was a busy week for John Grant. His time was taken up by calls and investigations, and dozens of minor details, but he found time to play football with the town amateurs, and played it as he played everything else, with enthusiasm and a large measure of success. And he took a ride in Miss Harvey's motor car, and inspected the day nursery, of which she was the patroness.

It was on the following Sunday that he preached his long-remembered sermon on the white plague, and followed it with a touching appeal for funds to be used in sending the sufferers to a helpful climate—if possible, to a sanatorium in the South of England, that had helped so many patients.

The next Sunday the man from the country preached on the public duty of the millowner. He called attention in a scathing way to the curse of child labour. He deplored the lack of proper workrooms, of proper lighting, and of proper ventilation. He traced the town's high death-rate from pulmonary ailments to these neglects. He gave the figures and the comparisons. It was a sharp sermon with a moral that all could grasp.

And little Mrs. Howell pressed her husband's arm and said, "Splendid, wasn't it?"

But the old merchant shook his head. "It was fearless, all right," he said, "and true, no doubt. But I fancy the youngster has cost us our richest supporter."

"No, William," laughed the wise little woman. "Just before I left the church I heard Morgan Harvey invite John Grant to dinner, and John went away with the father and daughter." Her voice suddenly dropped. "By the way, William, haven't you noticed that Ruth seems greatly interested in John?"

There was no romance in William Howell.

"I don't wonder," he responded. "John Grant is a real man, and rich girls don't often get a chance to meet one."

After church that evening, John Grant walked home with the old merchant.

"Mr. Howell," he said, "I'm sure you'll be glad to know that Morgan Harvey will begin to rebuild his mill very soon. He has commissioned me to engage an expert in ventilation and sanitation to prepare plans for that part of the work. It is all to be as modern and death-proof as a mill building can be made."

The old merchant stared at him.

"John Grant," he said, "you were engaged for one month. I know that I'm echoing every voice in the congregation that's worth an echo, when I ask you to stay the full time out."

"I'll do it cheerfully," said John, as he grasped the old man's hand.

Nearly four months had passed since the departure of the Rev. Dover, and that good man was understood to have turned his face homeward. John Grant—it was strange how few persons called him "reverend"—was walking up the main residence street of the town with Ruth Harvey—his helper in many ways—when he heard his name called.

A little man with a fiery face and a big blonde moustache was rapidly overtaking them. As he came nearer he took off his big soft hat and waved it.

"Why, it's the blacksmith!" cried John, and caught the little man by both hands. "So glad to see you, Tucker. Miss Harvey, this is Mr. Bob Tucker, better known as the blacksmith; one of my best friends in the country."

Ruth gave him her hand with a charming smile. Whereat his face grew more fiery.

"I came to see you, parson," he hurriedly said. "It's a matter of business, and the folks sent me. They want to see you. Even if you can't stay, they want to set eyes on you again. Won't you come back?"

John Grant looked at the little man and then he slowly turned his gaze towards Ruth. And the gaze of the blacksmith followed.

And suddenly Ruth placed her hand on John's arm.

"I believe it would be a fine place to visit on a wedding journey, don't you, Mr. Tucker."

And the blacksmith flung his soft hat on the ground, and took the little hand Ruth extended to him.

"God bless you, Miss," he cried.

THE CHIEF DIFFERENCE.

Mayor Dahlman of Omaha was talking about the high rate for electric lighting charged in a neighbouring city.

"A boy from that city," he said, "was asked by his teacher:

"'What, if any, is the difference between lightning and electricity?'

"'Please, ma'am,' said the boy, 'lightning is free.'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Calf and the Augur Hole.

Jim Hudnell, who resides near Pohick, Va., recently opened a tanyard in that small hamlet and offered himself to the public as a purchaser of hides. There being no sign-painter within a score of miles, he bethought himself of a cheap and novel method whereby folks might be informed of his line of trade. Boring an augur hole in the door of the yard, he cut the tail from a fresh calfskin and stuck the butt end of it in the hole, proclaiming thereby to the world that he was a dealer in hides, hair, and such like wares.

The day after he had flung to the breeses this hairy emblem of his calling he looked forth from his window and saw standing before the tanyard door a chin-whiskered farmer, silently chewing a straw and gazing in deep contemplation upon the calf tail. Him Jim approached.

"Want to sell any hides?" he asked.

"Nope," was the laconic reply.

"Want to buy any?" was the next query.

"Nope," came again from the steady gazing farmer.

"Want to buy any leather?" was Jim's further question.

"Nope," answered the hayseed.

"Well, what do you want and what are ye anyhow?" exclaimed Jim in irritated tones.

"I reckon I'm what ye call one o' these hyah scientists," returned the farmer, whose eye had never left the calf tail. "I'm trying ter figger out how in tarnation that ahr calf ever got through that ahr augur hole!"—New York Times.

THE MINISTRY ARE ALARMED BY THE REVOLT OVER THE NE TEMERE

Whips Will Have to Tread Softly at the Next Caucus—Vote Was Not True Index.

SECRET COMPROMISE

OTTAWA, JAN. 25.—After the late sitting of last night the corridors of the House of Commons were pretty well deserted this morning, and not many members were to be found to discuss the big debate of yesterday. Mr. Lancaster was very late in leaving the House, and did not get around this morning.

The Liberal feeling is, however, exactly that expressed by Clark, of Red Deer, last night, when he said that Ontario at least did not vote almost solidly Conservative last September with the idea that the burning marriage question should be shelved.

"It was an extraordinary spectacle," said a leading member on the Liberal side this morning. "We saw Premier Borden bestowing a benediction on the ne temer decree and Hon. L. P. Pelletier waving the British flag".

The sudden stampede on the Conservative side, when member after member arose and flatly disagreed with his leader shook the Conservative leaders seriously. So sure were they that the rank and file of the party would follow where they led that there was no preparation for the debate in caucus, and the Cabinet was amazed to find the Ontario men breaking for cover in every direction. This morning the few prominent Conservatives around the buildings do not care to discuss yesterday's proceedings at all beyond saying that it would have been futile to introduce legislation ultra vires of the House.

Must Tread Softly.

The next family council of the Conservatives wil be an interesting meeting. Their House leaders are annoyed as well as startled by the way in which so many members threw party allegiance to the winds, but the mal-contents are so strong numerically and are so thoroughly up in arms over the whole matter that the whip will have to tread softly.

The vote, as recorded, does not show the real strength of the opponents of Mr. Borden's policy. Captain Tom Wallace, of Centre York, and W. B. Northrup, to instance only two members, went on record against the policy of relegating the whole question to the Privy Council, yet voted for that very thing a short time later.

That some sort of compromise was effected goes without saying. It seems hardly probable that a promise to Mr. Lancaster that his bill would be submitted to the Privy Council along with a stated case would have satisfied him. There is no doubting his sincerity in bringing the bill in, and his refusal to withdraw it was very significant coming from so staunch a party man as is the member for Lincoln. Of course the bolters, as good party men, were only too glad to find some way out of the impasse, and the compromise mentioned above would go a long way towards satisfying them.

Laurier's Position.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke without a trace of passion, and at a time in the debate when the atmosphere of the House was charged with electricity. While not agreeing that the big question should be shelved and nothing done for the two or three years that will elapse before a Privy Council verdict can be obtained, he yet did not agree that the authority of the Federal House should be imposed upon the Provinces unless there was absolute assurance that this could be done legally.

How "Our Member" Is Making A Mess Of His Mission

Everybody will remember how the Conservative member for West Peterborough made a hobby of the Ne Temere decree, paraded it in the papers, punched and pounded it in the intimacy of the Federation conclaves, slang-whanged the Church of Rome on the head of it, vilified its pastors, and used it in public and private as a stalking horse to help him on his way to Parliament.

We know how he packed the Ne Temere decree in his bag and took it with him to Ottawa like an ogre in chains; how he brought it out in the House, in his blundering enthusiasm or obstinacy, to the dismay of his leader and his party colleagues, who would have preferred—to vary the saying—to "let sleeping decrees lie."

We all know of his flippant query, "Are we married or are we not married?" and how on that text he preached a sermon upon the awful awfulness of the fate the Decree was bringing upon the country.

He was trapped very easily into asserting in the House that the Ne Temere decree played an important part in the unholy campaign of prejudice and appeal to passion waged in winning Ontario to the support of the Conservative party.

Mr. Burnham admitted that he owed his election to the dust that was blown off the three-hundred-year-old Ne Temere decree into the people's eyes.

And when he went to Ottawa he would be the new St. George that would slay the dragon.

He made a brave show when he had only to talk, but when it came to action on Monday he forgot his champion ship. He, who had demanded the head of Wilfrid Laurier on a charger, because he "skulked" behind the limited jurisdiction of Parliament, and refused to kill the Ne Temere decree, fell into the arms of his leader, who proposed the very course Mr. Burnham condemned in Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

His position attracted the more attention in the House because of his having become in relation to the Decree a champion in the eyes of his constituents and a nuisance to his colleagues and political leaders.

Here, as reported in the Toronto dailies, is described Mr. Burnham's attitude in Parliament last Monday to a bill, which was to do all that Mr. Burnham had demanded that the Liberals should do and had not done. The Globe report says:

> "Mr. Burnham (Peterborough) created laughter by saying that he favoured both the bill (to kill Ne Temere) and the Premier's proposal to refer the matter to the Privy Council (to kill the bill.)"

Mr. Burnham will show a great deal more equestrian skill than he has ever yet displayed if he can ride two horses at the same time, each going in an opposite direction. The Mail and Empire report is this:

> "Mr. Burnham said there was never a more magnificent opportunity for settling the problem now agitating the people. He suggested that Mr. Lancaster's bill (to kill Ne Temere) be sent forward to the courts (to die of old age)."

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in power, no court reference, no shifting, no evasion, no delay, for Mr. Burnham,—the Grits must pass a law to settle the question, for Mr. Burnham, knew as a lawyer, that they had the power. Then as soon as Mr. Borden comes into power, as soon as he and Mr. Burnham are in a position to act instead of spout, the Dominion Government's power to kill the Ne Teme decree by law, suddenly disapears, and Mr. Burnham falls in with Mr. Borden's shirking of responsibility, and voted for delay on a subject which he declared could be settled by Parliament in a day. The Toronto World reports Mr. Burnham in Parliament on Monday as follows:

> "J. H. Burnham (Peterborough) taunted the Opposition with their silence on the question."

The taunt was ill-timed; the Opposition did not want to get mixed up with the Conservative family quarrels; and besides, they were not called upon to talk. They were in opposition and had no power. Mr. Borden and Mr. Burnham, according to his pre-election claims, had the power to pass the legislation Mr. Burnham had been clamouring for for years and months, and he shirked his responsibility and showed himself false to his trust. In voting against what he had been preaching and praying for, in shirking thus the issue on which he was elected, as in supporting the Government that in power went directly contrary to what they were elected to do, Mr. Burnham demonstrates that he is enjoying his seat on false pretences, and if he is as honest as he claims to be, he should resign his seat. He is the round man in the square hole—there are corners of it he doesn't fill.

CRISIS OF 1895 RECALLED BY DIVISION IN THE HOUSE

The Late N. Clarke Wallace Resigned a Portfolio Rather Than Vote Against Rights of the Public

(Toronto Star)

Toward the close of 1895 the Conservative Dominion Government issued a "remedial order," practically restoring Separate schools in Manitoba, which had been abolished by the Greenway Government. Mr. N. Clarke Wallace, then Controller of Customs, resigned his place in the Government, as a protest against this interference with the rights of the Province. Mr. Wallace afterwards joined with the Liberal Opposition in a vigorous resistance to the remedial bill, intended to carry the order into effect. In consequence of this resistance the bill was withdrawn.

Capt. Tom Wallace, son of the late N. Clarke Walalce, finds himself face to face with a somewhat similar situation. He is probably less uncompromising than his father. During the debate he said:

"I just want to say," he exclaimed "that I am completely in accord with the member for Lincoln, and shall vote accordingly."

The division came at 2 a.m., but Mr. Wallace did not vote exactly the way he had intimated.

CHURCHILL GOING TO BELFAST

Press of England Urge Upon the First Lord of the Admiralty Not to Go But He is Firm

REGIMENTS CHOSEN

Special Wire to the Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., JAN. 25. — The press of England, beginning to recognize the real threatening aspect of Right Hon. Winston Churchill's decision, reiterated to speak in Belfast, Ireland, with Redmond, on February eighth, and the journals of moderate Liberal views as well as the Unionists are appealing to the impetuous young Lord of Admiralty in strong editorials this morning, to change his mind and decline to go to Belfast on that occasion. Churchill remains firm, and at noon to-day he again stated that he would go, no matter what threatening conditions existed. It is believed that in this decision he is thoroughly backed up by Premier Asquith and his colleagues, who take the view that some member of the cabinet must break the ice for passage of the Home Rule bill for Ireland, and do it right in Ireland, no matter what the immediate consequences will be. The war office has carefully chosen for special service in Ulster next week regiments whose sympathies, owing to national and religious feeling, would not be sympathetic with the Ulsterites who threaten to have recourse to arms to prevent the Redmond-Churchill meeting. These include detachments of the Inniskillen Dragoons and Dublin Fusiliers it is understood.

However, the foreigners here are taking no chances and reinforcements of protecting troops of the Great Powers are anxiously awaited.

EMPLOYEE OF AUBURN MILLS CAUGHT IN BELT

Sustains Broken Shoulder and Other Minor Injuries While Adjusting Belt

HE WILL RECOVER

While attempting to throw a chain belt on a revolving pulley at the Auburn Woollen Mills yesterday, Jerry McCormack, an employee of the mills, was caught by the belt and whirled around the shaft. He sustained serious injurious about the head and body as a result, including a broken shoulder. But for the fact that the foreman of the department and another employee were standing near the scene of the accident at the time of theoccurrence and were thereby able to render prompt assistance, a fatality might have resulted.

The unfortunate victim was soon released from his perilous position and a hurry call sent for a doctor and the ambulance. Both were soon on the scene and after medical attention had been given the injured man, he was removed to St. Joseph's hospital. Upon inquiring at the hospital to-day it was reported that the victim was resting easily and no serious results are anticipated. Dr. McClelland is in attendance.

Mr. McCormack resides in East City and has been employed at the Auburn Mills for some time.

Text Of Lancaster's Bill To Annul The Ne Temere Decree

Which Mr. Burnham, Contrary to All His Claims and Promises, Voted Against

Mr. Lancaster moved:

1. The Marriage Act, chapter 105 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by adding thereto the following section:

"3. Every ceremony or form of marriage heretofore or hereafter performed by any person authorized to perform any ceremony of marriage by the laws of the place where it is performed, and duly performed according to such laws, shall everywhere, within Canada, be deemed to be a valid marriage, notwithstanding any differences in the religious faith of the person so married and without regard to the religion of the person performing the ceremony.

2. The rights and duties as married people, of the respective persons married, as aforesaid, and of the children of such marriage, shall be absolute and complete, and no law, or canonical decree or custom of or in any Province in Canada shall have any force or effect to invalidate or qualify any such marriage or any of the rights of the said persons or their children in any manner whatsoever".

The Marriage Act referred to merely states: "A marriage is not invalid because the woman is a sister of a deceased wife of the man, or a daughter of a sister of a deceased wife of a man."

PARTY BLIND.

The Globe mentions, as a remarkable fact, that a blind man has been elected president of the North Renfrew Agricultural Society. There is nothing new in that, in view of our electing every day, blind men to our legislatures and parliaments— (men with vision closed to every consideration but that of party advantages— men who, at the call of party, will vote in repudiation of principle and solemn promises. Mr. Lancaster's bill to annul the Ne Temere decree was mauled to death by the partizan club. He says that if the Conservative members from Ontario who were pledged to relentless opposition to the Ne Temere and all that it stands for, had voted consistently with their pledges and promises to himself, as well as their general pledges at time of election, the government's plan for shelving the matter would have been defeated.

Apart altogether from the merits of Mr. Lancaster's bill, and the competency of Parliament to deal with the matter involved, the outstanding feature of the situation is the evident insincerity of the men who were elected on appeals to the religious and racial prejudices, that inflamed the country at the last election. They have disappointed and deceived those who were induced to support them on these grounds. If they have not the courage to live up to the conditions upon which they were elected, they should either confess themselves recreant and apologize for the press and platform abuse heaped upon one class of their fellow citizens and admit that they took a stand in the way of promise that they refuse to carry out in performance.

THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

The Dominion Finance Minister has given notice of a resolution authorizing the appointment of a tariff commission. This is a proper and desirable step. The Examiner was the first newspaper in the country to advocate the establishment of a tariff commission. Tariff adjustments, so as to adequately protect all the interests affected, consumer and producer, is a matter attended with many difficulties, and demands a knowledge of trade industrial, and other conditions, which no Minister has time to place himself in possession of. This work, the Commission can do, and so place the responsible minister and the government, as a whole, and parliament, also, in a position to deal intelligently with the most important matter of tariff regulation. The duties of the Commission are thus defined:

(1) To make, under the direction of the Minister of Finance, in respect of any goods produced in or imported into Canada inquiry as to: (a) The price and cost of the raw materials in Canada and elsewhere, and the cost of transportation thereof from the place of production to the place of use or consumption; (b) the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere; (c) the cost of transportation to the place of use or consumption, whether in Canada or elsewhere; (d) the cost, efficiency and conditions of labour in Canada and elsewhere; (e) the prices received by producers, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, retailers and other distributors in Canada and elsewhere; (f) all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada; (g) generally all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada, as compared with other countries, and to report to the Minister.

(2) To make inquiry into any other matter upon which the Minister desires information in relation to any goods which, if brought into Canada or produced in Canada are subject to or exempt from duties of Customs, and to report to the Minister.

A Commission charged with such responsibilities and clothed with ample powers to make investigation effective, can be of the greatest service to the country and greatly help in the solution of the many problems which, in a country of very-ing resources and diversities of interests as between the several sections, makes tariff adjustment on just and equitable terms a delicate and difficult matter. We have many questions, that press for solution, involve great difficulties, and assume great importance, but none, perhaps, as difficult and important as the wise and equitable adjustment of the tariff There seems to be a great conflict of interest between the requirements of Western and Eastern Canada in this regard. In fairly reconciling these differences, so as to give the balance an even poise, large exercise of prudent statesmanship is demanded, and if this can be helped by the work of a Tariff Commission, its establishment is called for and justified.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We have now added to the yarn that Bacon wrote Shakspere, the claim that Bacon wrote the Bible we have had for 300 years. The "Higher Critics" who can't believe the Bible, will have their disbelief strengthened, by the new "yarn," which they will believe, as it tends to justify their contention that the Bible is in many respects a myth.

The battleship-cruiser Lion, of the British fleet, made a new eight-hour record of speed of 31 knots, thus eclipsing the performance of the German armoured cruiser Moltke, which held a record of 29 knots, made during her trials. The British vessel is, in all but name, a battleship, and the speed maintained during her trial is phenomenal. Thirty-one knots an hour is equivalent to nearly thirty-three highway miles, a fair rate of speed for an express train.

The Borden government is really a government of progress—backward. Mr. Borden allied himself with the Nationalists; and Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Monk have "scrapped" the Canadian navy, sunk it fifty fathoms deep in the bay of delay. Now Mr. Borden has shelved for years the Ne Temere decree decision, not that he and his followers love the decree more, but the danger of handling it less. The extreme loyalists, the ultra-religionists of a certain type, have been fooled. They asked, they voted, for action in both cases, and they have got, delay.

A CHANGE.

(Montreal Herald.

With Mr. Borden saying there is nothing to be done about the Ne Temere decree, and Mr. Monk saying it is only a question of the best line of ships, two of the most interesting features of the election have undergone a sea change. What the principal topic of election controversy was in Quebec we all know, and we all knew then (it was anti-navy and nothing else). In Ontario the Ne Temere decree was found to have been an important electoral issue, but it did not get much to the platform. It was talked of on the sidelines and outside the school houses. The central organization of the party at Toronto are said to have had a list of people who might be influenced by literature on this and other phases of the organization of the Catholic church in Quebec. Men used to post themselves at the doors of a Liberal meeting place and demand of those who went in whether they were sure they were married, whether their children were legitimate. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was paraded as an unscrupulous tool of an intriguing hierarhcy, and Mr. Aylesworth as a cowardly lawyer, afraid to assert the full authority of the law. All this did much to put Mr. Borden in the office he now holds. He is very glad to have the office. But when it comes to a demonstration there is nothing to distinguish his position from that of Sir Wilfrid. Of course, the main object of those who made the fuss was to get him into office.

"THE GIRL AND THE TRAMP"

To see Fred Byers is to laugh, and his new vehicle, "The Girl and the Tramp," as produced Saturday, matinee and night, at the Grand, gives him plenty of opportunity to create that mirthful sensation without drawing too much on his own personality. The audience which will attend the theatre will enjoy an entire evening of fun, and when the curtain finally descends on the finish, everyone will be glad that they were there to witness Mr. Byers' undoubted success in the role of Happy Jack, the tramp, who, with the assistance of the adopted girl, Flo Randall, rescues the home and happiness from the clutches of the scoundrel, Philip Redman.

Special mention might be made of each member of the excellent cast brought together to portray the different characters of this production.

From the time Happy Jack makes his appearance in the yard of the Merton home singing, "Any Old Place I Hang My Hat is Home Sweet Home to Me," to his declaration in the last act that he intends to be more than a casual acquaintance to Flo Randall and to the Merton family, there is a continual flow of bright speeches and amusing situations, and there is not a dull moment during the whole evening's performance.

C.N.R. SOLICITOR REPLIES TO REBUKE

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, JAN. 25.—When the Canadian Northern Railway in the House of Commons Railway Committee, this morning, received a mild rebuke for having so many charters for lines in Ontario, and other Provinces, with little or no work done on them, Gerald Ruel, Solicitor for the Company, said that when members of parliament asked Sir William Mackenzie, President, for a line through their constituencies, he invariably asked his legal: "Have we a charter in that section?" and if the answer was "No," Sir William says: "Well, why in blazes haven't we? Get one at once."

The temperature has taken another downfall, and last night the thermometer registered 17 below zero. This date last winter was quite mild and spring-like. There was not as great a depth of snow on the level as at the present time. W. P.

SCIENCE NOTES

The final extremes of heat and cold, which are life and death in certain measure, are as yet unknown. From the several thousands of degrees of heat developed in electrical reduction down to the absolute zero, only a very small section of the scale of temperature is endurable by man. Beyond this limit in either direction lies death. We commonly speak of heat as life and cold as death, since man can endure more of the former, as measured from a determined point, than he can of the latter. It is needless to add that this point is purely arbitrary and was established by men of science for the sake of convenience in the measurement of heat and cold.

The low point in this scale is called the "absolute zero," which has been fixed at 459 degrees lower than the familiar zero mark of the Fahrenheit, or common thermometer. Ever since Prof. Dewar most nearly approached this point by his astonishing feat of liquefying air and hydrogen the world's chemists have carried on their experiments in the hope of getting nearer to the "absolute."

WARMED BY ENTHUSIASM.

Trying to produce the greatest cold, like seeking to reach the North Pole, is a chilly proposition and of questionable value to posterity; but there is always the glory of achievement for the winner, and one may be warmed by enthusiasm. Prof. Dewar's effort fell short of the mark. His liquid air was a revelation of what strange effects great cold may produce. But the greatest cold, the "absolute" zero of their quest, had not been reached. It remained for Prof. Onnes of Leyden, Holland, to make the nearest approach by liquefying the rarest and most volatile of all gases. He succeeded in reducing helium to a visible fluid, determined its temperature and made the incredible discovery that it is only a little over four degrees from the long-sought point.

In order to appreciate the vast significance of Prof. Onnes' achievement it is only necessary to recall the means by which the air is kept at zero temperature in a cold storage warehouse. As every one knows, evaporation causes cold. It is the evaporation of the water with which you bathe your face—not the temperature of the water itself—which produces the sensation of coolness.

According as the evaporation is slow or rapid, the cold produced is less or greater. So, in a cold storage plant, ammonia gas, which is extremely volatile, is allowed to evaporate, either directly into the air or it is released in the presence of brine (which freezes only at less than zero temperature) and the brine, taking the temperature of the evaporating ammonia, is then distributed in pipes throughout the establishment. Thus the desired degree of cold is imparted to the storage rooms.

GETTING COLDER.

Just imagine a cold so great that beside it the deadly chill from ammonia gas would seem hotter than boiling oil. Call this the temperature of liquid hydrogen. From this new point of departure try to imagine a cold so much greater than before that beside it liquid hydrogen itself is as boiling oil, and the frozen heat of an ice plant is hotter than the bowels of a smelting furnace, and you have some conception of the temperature—if it can be called temperature—of liquefied helium.

This discovery, to a mind of scientific imagination, is fraught not alone with the most alluring possibilities for the well-being of mankind, as it may be applied to the increase of comfort and health, but with possibilities of destruction and death beside which the engines and munitions of modern warfare are playthings!

When you consider that liquid helium is as much colder than vaporized ammonia as a piece of ice is colder than molten lava you will realize the appalling consequences of its power as an agent of death, should it be employed as an instrument of war or private vengeance. Suddenly liberated in a battleship it would not only instantly freeze to death every man on board, but the inconceivable cold would at once cause the ship itself with all its guns and machinery to fall in pieces.

DEATH'S POWERFUL AGENT.

An office building cooled by the medium of liquid helium could be wrecked in an instant by the hand of a maniac or one bent on revenge, and every one of its occupants transformed to ghastly statues of ice, whose fingers would break like glass.

While the diplomats were protesting friendship at some state banquet wires could be laid secretly and a whole metropolis suddenly transformed into a splintered ruin, its inhabitants frozen solid at their occupations. This is just as possible as was the telephone not so very many years ago. In short, with such a powerful agent at command the possibilities of working destruction even pass beyond the concept of vivid imagination. Aside from all this, the liquefaction of helium opens the door to possibilities of which the students of refrigeration have been aware for a long time, but which thus far have been beyond their reach in actual practice.

It is apparent, for example, that if we can distribute ammonia chilled brine from one room of a cold storage warehouse to all the other rooms in it, we should, theoretically, be able to distribute it from a central point to houses, office buildings, theatres and the like; at a distance, as is done with gas and steam. But the size and cost of the plant required, the impossibility of developing a degree of cold which will not be dissipated in transit unless pipes of prohibitive size are employed, has placed the idea in the category of laboratory dreams. Even the use of liquid air or liquid hydrogen would not obviate this last objection. The cost of production and distribution would outweigh the benefits.

And so, all that remains of the great discovery is the glory of achievement, unless cheaper means of production and greater means of control can be devised also.

Advertise in The Evening Examiner and watch the results.

ANNUAL BONSPIEL OPENS WITH BIG LIST OF ENTRIES

District Clubs are Largely Represented and Competition for Grand Challenge Cup Will be Keen---Results of Primary Fixture.

The annual bonspiel, in competition for the Grand Challenge Trophy, got away to a good start yesterday. With a big entry list, and seven sheets of good curling ice, a banner time is anticipated. The pick of the Lindsay, Port Hope, Cobourg, Oshawa and other district clubs, are here and are prepared to do or die in an endeavour to wrest the silverware from its present owners. If they succeed in their aspirations they will have to go the limit; for, camping right on the scene of hostilities, is that formidable element associated with the Peterborough Curling Club, headed by such worthy foemen as Skips Giroux, Stevenson, Lang, McDermid, Connal, Davidson, Wightman, and others of note. Emerging with honours, from their recent contest with the Scotch curlers, they are prepared to defend their supremacy in the curling arena at Charlotte Street Rink with all comers.

The advent of the Scotch curlers has served to stimulate the "roarin' game" to a higher plane of significance, both with the curlers and the outside public, with the result that considerable interest is being evinced in the bonspiel, which is now under way.

In the primary fixture yesterday, the local curlers succeeded in landing nine out of the twelve games played yesterday afternoon and evening, giving them practically a winning position in the second round, which is being played this afternoon. Secretary Ferguson has been a busy man the past few days receiving entries and assigning same to their respective position in the bonspiel.

PETERBOROUGH INTERMEDIATES ARE IN TRENTON TO-NIGHT

The Peterborough Intermediate O. H. A. team left on the 1.40 (G.T.R.) train for Trenton this afternoon, where they will meet the Trenton team in the return game. It is important that this contest should be registered as a win for Peterborough and the locals are determined to add another to their list of victories. The team to-night will be as follows:

Goal—Derocher.
Point—Bearss.
Cover—Bond.
Rover—Giroux.
Centre—Park.
Spares—Denison, Weatherstone.

BIG CROWD TO SEE THE BEAR CATS' NEXT GAME

For the first time in three weeks, the Peterborough Junior O. H. A. team will have a game at home, on Monday night, when the Bear Cats will play the Port Hope Juniors in the last game in this district of the Junior O. H. A. There will be a grand crowd of fans out for this contest, as many people who have not seen the Bear Cats in action, will be on hand to see them perform on Monday. The great work of the youngsters, in winning five games, right off the reel, three of them on foreign ice, has aroused the hockey-lovers, and they are all pulling for the game little team. While the game will have no effect on the standing, as the Petes cannot be headed, it will be one grand little contest. Port Hope gave the local youngsters about the hardest battle they have had on the road, the game going into overtime and they will make the contest here a hard-fought one all through. The Bear Cats had a fine practise last night, and with another workout to-morrow night, will be in the best of shape for Monday's battle.

Baseball Talk

Hugh Jennings' declaration that he could "count the good college baseball players of the country on the fingers of both hands" has been strongly protested in different parts of the baseball world.

A Chicago critic offers this team of college players as being an almost ideal outfit: Pitchers, Mathewson, Bender and Coombe; catchers, Dooin and Meyers; first base, Chase; second base, Eddie Collins; third base, Harry Lord; shortstop, Barry; right field, Bescher; centre field, Birmingham; left field, Campbell.

It is pointed out that such a team would win a pennant in any oganization ever devised, and that it would outclass any team comprised of "sand lot" players.

Not that Manager Jennings needs support, but just speaking offhand, this team might be offered as opposition: Pitchers, Johnson, Walsh and Alexander; Catchers, Stanage and Archer; first base, Daubert; second base, Lajoie; third base, Baker; shortstop, Wagner; right field, Jackson; centre field, Cobb; left field, Crawford.

Just as a matter of argument, it might be said that the "sand lot" selection would give the college team a game, and it "might" come through with a victory once in a while.

Rooters' Club To Meet At The Rink This Evening

The Rooters' Club will meet to-night at 8 o'clock at Brock street rink. All fans in the city who wish to join are asked to be on hand sharp on time in order that the club may be in good shape for the games next week. Following are some more songs. Cut them out and keep them for reference.

Tune—"My Own Irish Girl."

"Our own hockey team, our boys in blue and white,
We'll show our class in Lindsay on Tuesday night;
But we're not to blame, for speed's our middle name,
We'll sure win this game to-night, with our hockey team.

Tune—"When in Town."

When our team is in town, in Lindsay town,
Beat them up, beat them up. We'll be happy to show them
They way that we play, any old day,
For they're just as welcome as the flowers in May,
And we'll hang Bill Stoddard on the sour apple tree,
It's awful, but kid 'aint it right,
For the rooters all talk, we'll win in a walk,
Lindsay town, Lindsay town good-night.

Tune—"Good-bye Betty Brown."

Goodb-ye Lindsay, good-bye Lindsay team;
All your pennant hopes are just a dream.
Hang some crepe in your dead old town
We're going to win to-night and win hands down.
Don't you feel too bad, and dry you tears,
Perhaps you'll win a cup in fifty years,
Way up on the Scugog river,
Good-bye Lindsay town.

Tune—"Brother Noah Gave Out Checks For Rain."

Park scored first and Kelly second,
Sproule refereed the game,
Coughlin went down the ice like an arrow,
Giroux and Bond the same;
Bearss at point, played the game of his life,
Derocher in goal won fame,
The Peterborough crowd all went wild
When they heard about that game.

HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

There will be plenty of hockey at Brock Street Rink to-night. The hours are as follows:

5-6—Cereal Works office teams.
7-8—Machine Shop of C. G. E.
8-9—Tool Room of C. G. E.
9-10—C. P. R. and G. T. R.
10-11—Bell Telephone Co.

The biggest upset of the hockey season took place at Midland Tuesday night when Collingwood defeated Midland on the latter's ice in an intermediate O. H. A. game. Midland had beaten Collingwood in Collingwood, and were odds on favourites for the game in Midland, but the visitors furnished a big surprise. The next and final scheduled game in this series is Victoria Harbour, at Midland on Friday night. A victory for the Harbour will give them the championship of the district, while a win for the home team will make it a three-cornered tie with Midland, Victoria Harbour, and Collingwood. In case of a tie-up the teams will draw and play off on neutral ice.

Referee Jack Moxon says that Norman Armstrong of the Trenton junior O. H. A. team is one of the finest hockey players he ever saw, and agrees with Chaucer Elliott that he is the best in the East. Armstrong all the referees report, is a fair, clean gentlemanly player, a hard, sure checker, with the "poke" down to perfection and is a grand rusher. In every game with Trenton this season Armstrong has been the star performer.

In answer to the challenge of Green's Foundry Hockey team, Manager Hatcher of Hall's Foundry hockey team wishes to announce that he has had so many challenges from outside points that he cannot accept their challenges until a later date.

It must be understood that all players are to be bona fide express employees. If this is satisfactory to the Canadian Express Co. management, Mr. Skitch might release one of his homing pigeons with instructions to fly over to the Dominion Express Co. office, where he can make the necessary arrangements.

F. SANDY SANDERSON,
Manager.

MR. LUSHMORE'S BIRTHDAY

The birthday of Mr. Lushmore of the Park Slope in Brooklyn came around last week. It is the custom of the Lushmores to celebrate their birthdays all by their lonelies in about the same way that they observed Mr. Lushmore's anniversary the other days.

When he returned from the office in the evening they had dinner at home. Then they came over to Manhattan and saw a good play, followed part of the crowd to a restaurant, blew out the subway at its Brooklyn end at about 1.30 a.m. and were soon home in the Lushmore flat.

Mrs. Lushmore was quite willing to retire and go to sleep. Mr. Lushmore found the atmosphere of the flat rather stuffy and said he would go out and tramp two or three times around the block. He handed his watch to his wife and threw his breast pocket book on her bureau, saying that if he was waylaid outside she would be so much in. She opened the pocket book and saw that he had $42 in it and handed it back to him, with the remark that he wouldn't be robbed, but if he were they would have the melancholy satisfaction of knowing how much they were out.

Mrs. Lushmore awoke and saw it was daylight. She stepped softly to the door of her husband's room and parted the portieres. Lushmore was not there. She put on a wrapper, hurried to the kitchen and asked the maid if any telephone message had come from her husband or concerning him. None had.

Greatly alarmed, Mrs. Lushmore went to the front of the flat and raised a window. The morning was foggy and a drizzle rain was coming down. She closed the window and called the maid to help her dress in a hurry. She didn't know what she would do, but she was going to do something. Just then the telephone bell rang and the following conversation ensued:

"Hello!"

"Hello! Is this Mrs. Lushmore? Yes? Well, we're Gus and Willie and our friend, Mr.—Mr.—(Aside—er—I don't recall your name. Henrickson? Oh, yes.) Mrs. Lushmore, we are Gus and Willie and our friend Mr. Henderson. Mrs. Lushmore, permit me to introduce our friend, Mr. Huddleston. Mr. Higginson, Mrs. Lushmore."

"I am pleased to meet Mr. Higginson, but what about my husband? He hasn't come home."

"Oh, Lushy is all right. Just parted from him down at the corner of the avenue. He's on the way home now. Sorry to have kept him so late in the evening. Little 50 cent game—and you know. Good-by."

Mrs. Lushmore went to the front window again. The sun was breaking through the fog and the rain had stopped. Around the corner came a taxicab and drew up in front of the house.

The door of the taxi swung open and a lighted lantern appeared, held on the arm of a man wearing a raincoat and with the visor of cloth cap pulled down over his eyes. The man descended gingerly to the curb, swinging the lantern back and forth in front of him as if to see where he was stepping.

As the man straightened up and looked around, Mrs. Lushmore saw that he wore dark goggles with black gauze wire binders. He held the lantern in front of him and picked his way carefully up the vestibule steps.

Mrs. Lushmore heard the buzz of the front doorbell in the flat beneath and went over the landing in the hall outside her own door. As she looked over the banisters she saw the shifting glimmer of a lantern on the walls below and heard heavy footsteps.

The lantern and the man made their way cautiously to the landing where Mrs. Lushmore stood. The man raised the lantern so that its light fell on her face. Then he said in broken accents—badly broken:

"Beautiful of you, my love, to wait up for me. Terrible night. Gus and Willie and our friend Mr. Pendleton fitted me out with this coat and cap and borrowed this lantern for me. Don't know how ever I would have got home without them."

Mrs. Lushmore took the lantern from his hand and gently steered him into the flat. She stood the lantern on the floor and piloted him to his room, where the dark window shades had been drawn. She turned on the electric light, helped him off with his coat, trousers and shoes and saw him rolled up in a heavy camp blanket and heard him murmur "Good night, love," as he was becoming dead to the world.

"I guess he's been waylaid all right," said Mrs. Lushmore as she drew the pocketbook from his inside coat pocket and found it empty. "I wonder if he's lost his gloves and handkerchief," she said to herself, digging into his outside coat pockets.

From one pocket she pulled out his gloves and a wad of bills fell to the floor. In another pocket she found a teacupful of poker chips. As she picked up his trousers his keys and a shower of silver coins poured out. The other pockets yielded more bills and silver and a few chips.

She went to the hat rack and investigated his overcoat pockets, where she found half a dozen $1 and $2 bills, the butt of a cigar and a handful of toothpicks.

Then Mrs. Lushmore went to her room and took an account of the proceeds. She straightened up enough crumpled $1 and $2 bills to count up $38. The silver coins amounted to $3.35. The value of the poker chips on the basis of the 50 mile limit that had been mentioned to her over the telephone was something she couldn't calculate.

While looking vacantly at his newspaper over his breakfast at 11.30 in the forenoon Mr. Lushmore inquired:

"Did you notice what time it was when I got in last night?"

"Never mind, dear," replied Mrs Lushmore, "even if you have disgraced the block. It was your birthday."—New York Sun.

STORYETTES

"Isn't it strange the Baileys should have married each other?" mused Mrs. Kirby. Not that she was particularly interested in the Baileys' marital affairs, and if Mr. Kirby had murmured a comfortable "h-huh!" from behind his evening paper her mind would have speedily reverted to a less personal topic.

But instead, he had unexpectedly replied, "Strange? Not at all, my dear. They are unusually well mated—as well matched as Ezra Pinney's oxen," and so Mrs. Kirby had been forced to an immediate defence of her position.

"Why, William Martin Kirby!" she exclaimed, laying down her sewing and leaning forward in her chair. "How can you think so? He is so big and handsome and indolent, and she hasn't a lazy bone in her thin little body."

"That's just what I said, Marcia Edgerton Kirby," returned her husband, "but in your zeal for an argument you entirely overlooked my simile.

"In that remote and 'dark ages' period of my life before I knew you they offered a prize at the county fair for the best matched pair of oxen.

"There were some beauties brought in, so that everybody laughed when Ezra Pinney came driving along a great, handsome, slow-moving ox hitched up beside a wiry, scrawny little beast that took two steps to the big fellow's one.

"'Lottin' on first prize, ain't ye, Tzra?' called out one of the men, ironically. 'That's a finely matched pair o' oxen!'

"'So they be!' agreed Ezra, complacently. 'So they be! The best matched pair o' oxen in Wood county. One's willin' to do all the work an' t'other's willin' he should!'"—Youth's Companion.

A young New Haven man, returning home from a health trip to Colorado, told his father about buying a silver mine for $3,000. "I knew they'd rope you in!" exclaimed the old man. "So you were fool enough to buy a humbug mine!"

"Yes, but I didn't lose anything. I formed a company and sold half the stock to a Connecticut man for $7,000."

"Y-you did?" gasped the old man as he turned white. "I'll bet I'm the one who bought it."

"I know you are," coolly observed the young man as he crossed his legs and tried to appear very much at home.—"Argonaut."

Lord Guilford tells a story of a young lady's resources at a bazaar. Business was in full swing when a young man strolled around the various stalls with no intention of purchasing anything. As he passed a large, beautifully decorated stall the young lady seller detained him. "Won't you buy a cigarette-holder, sir?" she asked.

"No thank you, I don't smoke," was the curt reply.

"Or a pen wiper worked with my own hands?"

"I don't write."

"Then do have this nice box of chocolates!"

"I don't eat sweets."

The young lady's patience was exhausted. "Sir," she said grimly, "will you buy this box of soap?"

The young man paid up.—Ideas.

DATE CANDY

One cup granulated sugar and one-fourth cup water. Cook the sugar till a little lifted on a fork or spoon spins a thread. Do not stir while cooking. Remove from the fire, and stir till candy thickens and looks cloudy. Add flavouring. Drop immediately on a greased paper or plate. Make this cream into small balls with fingers, ready for dates. Remove pit from dates and fill with cream you have made. Melt one-half cake of chocolate and cover the dates. Put on oil paper or buttered pan.

SPRINGVILLE CHURCH IS IN FLOURISHING CONDITION

The annual meeting of the Springville Presbyterian Church was held last night, with a fairly large attendance, in spite of the intense cold. On motion, Dr. Marsh was appointed chairman, and Mr. Robert Robinson, secretary, of the meeting.

All the reports from the different church organizations showed that an advance had been made during the year, and that the work of the church is in good condition. The funds of the congregation were in better shape last year than they have been for the past twenty years, all organizations showing an advance in giving and a nice balance on the right side.

The congregation will, henceforth, stand alone, as Bethany will be separated from the Springville church after Feb. 1st. On motion it was decided to do this without any outside financial aid, with an increase in the minister's salary.

The Board of Managers was re-elected.

"Letters of sympathy will be sent to Mrs. A. Reynolds and Mr. John Wilson, who are in the hospital, and to Mr. William Rutherford, who was recently bereaved by the death of his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford were regular attendants at Springville church for many years. A letter of congratulation will be sent to Mr. John Cathcart, who has returned after a successful operation in Toronto General Hospital. The thanks of the congregation will also be forwarded to Messrs. Ruth and Condin, for their gift of hymn book racks for the church seats.

Five pupils of the Sunday School wrote on an examination on Biblical knowledge, with the following result: Annie Brown, 95 per cent.; George Whitfield, 95 per cent.; Della Bidgood, 92 per cent.; John Whitfield, 80 per cent, and they were awarded suitable prizes last night.

Rev. Dr. Marsh is starting his sixth year in the pastorate of the Springville Church, with the congregation in energetic working trim.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"IT'S the accessories, even more than the big things, that decide whether a woman looks well dressed or not."

The above is the statement of a woman who, although she has but a small income, always contrives to look smart. We were discussing the ever absorbing topic of clothes the other day, and I happened to characterize an expensive veil which she had just purchased as extravagant. It was then that she made the above statement.

"You should see," she added, "the different ways in which I am treated by the saleladies, when I go shopping with and without that veil. The other day I went to town to look for a suit and wore the veil. The saleswomen showed me suits ranging from thirty to fifty dollars. In the middle of the day, when I lunched, I took my veil off, and instead of putting it on again, being in a hurry, tucked it into my bag. At the very next shop I visited, the saleswoman looked me over and sized me up—you know the way they do it while they are asking you what you want and placing a chair for you—and said: "Something about twenty-five dollars?"

"Believe me, my dear, it's the accessories that count. I decided that a long while ago, and now I usually buy a good, plain, tailored suit every other season, and go in for expensive and stylish accessories like this veil, smart shoes and gloves, exquisite neckwear, and a nice bag. Really, if I were willing to put up with inexpensive or shabby accessories, I could have a new suit every season, but I've found I get a much better effect this way."

The lady's point of view is piquant, but not by any means unique. I was at a young girl's home the other day, when she came back from an afternoon's shopping. She went to town to buy a new silk waist. Instead she had bought a pretty bag of the very latest fashion, a pair of smart looking gloves, and a lovely jabot. Idecided I'd rather wear my white waist wth the jabot to dress it up, and have these things to go with it," she explained. Her father laughed at her and her mother reproved her, but after all, from the point of view of the girl who wants to look smart, I wonder if she wasn't pretty near right.

To be sure, it isn't good taste or economy to fritter away one's money on every foolish little fol-de-rol that happens to have caught the fickle, feminine fancy. But I wonder if it isn't clothes wisdom for the woman of small means, to make up her mind to be content with few and simple clothes, and to grace them with the finest and most attractive of accessories.

At least one woman has found it so.

ANNUAL MEETING OF MURRAY STREET BAPTIST CHURCH LAST NIGHT

Encouraging Reports Were Presented at Business Gathering of the Congregation.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The 5th annual meeting of the Murray street Baptist church was held last evening in the basement of the church.

A large representation attended the meeting and considerable interest was centred in the business. The financial affairs of church were found to be in a flourishing condition and the reports of the various organizations in connection with the church show that good progress has been made during the past year.

The first item of business was the reading of the pastoral letter in which the Rev. J. R. Webb said that in many ways the year had been the most blessed of the five. Between twenty-five and thirty-five new members had been received into the fellowship, while two members had passed away. There had been eight marriages during the year and though only two of their members had passed away, he had been requested to officiate at nineteen funerals. In concluding his letter the reader said: "The future of this church depends upon the faithfulness of its members during the coming year."

The Reports.

In giving his report the church clerk, Mr. G. Pringle said: "During the year 1911 the church has received 32 members, 110 of these being by baptism and 22 by letters. There have been removed by letter 15 and by the hand of death 2. At the close of the year we find there has been a net gain in membership of 15 members.

The pastor then read the financial report for the year as follows:

	$3820.21	$3820.21

The Deacon's report followed, from which it was learned that satisfactory progress had been made.

Chief Thompson read the financial report, in which he said: "As most of you are aware, we started the year 1911 with a debit balance of $172.32, but that by means of duplex envelopes we find ourselves at the end of this year with a debit balance of $162.28.

A report of the Ladies' Aid Society showed that there was a slight increase on the membership over 1911.

At the February meeting, read the secretary, it was decided to increase our funds by means of a calendar year, with one lady representing the year for which privilege she should pay $10, 12 ladies representing the months and paying $5 each; 52 ladies representing the weeks and paying $2 each, and 365 representing the days and paying from 50c. to $1 each.

The treasurer's report showed receipts as $506.55 and expenses $54.78 and balance on hand $451.77.

The report of the Ladies' Mission Circle was left over for the first quarterly meeting on account of the absence of the secretary.

A satisfactory report was received from the Willing Workers Society.

The secretary read the report of the Sunday school and the financial report. The total receipts amounted to $409.76 and the expenditure $284.08 with a balance on hand of $125.68.

The Librarian's report showed the cash receipts as $268.51 and expenditures $13.90. Balance on hand, $254.61

The Mission Band had collected $56.20, which was disposed of as follows:

Foreign Missions $39.00
Home Missions 14.00
Expenses 3.20
	$4.50 $4.50

In reading the report of the Young People's Union, the secretary, Mr. W. H. Yelland, said:

"During the fall term we adopted the plan of dividing our society into two classes. One of these classes has been ably led by Mr. Pettit in a course of teacher training and the other, under the charge of Mr. Webb, in Baptist doctrines." The average attendance had increased to 35.

Following is the report of the Baby Band:

Number on the roll—45.
By members' fees $4.50
To Foreign Missions.... ..	$2.25
To Home Missions	2.25
	$4.50 $4.50

The fellowship fund had received $148.08 and paid out $135.29 leaving a balance on hand of $12.79.

In reading the Building fund balance sheet the Rev. J. R. Webb said that the church will probably cost them $10,000 less than the lowest contractors tender. The estimated cost of the church was $47108.29. The balance sheet at present reads:

Material, wages, etc., to Dec 27th $24475.29
Amounts yet to be paid 16968.00
Balance (estimated) 5675.00
Estimated cost of church ..$47108.29

The matter will be discussed at a special meeting to be held on a date yet to be decided upon.

FINGERS WERE AMPUTATED

Mr. John Bell, a Smith Township farmer, who had the misfortune to have both his hands severely frozen, a few days ago, is progressing favourably towards recovery. The nature of his injuries necessitated the amputation of two fingers of one hand, and, for a day or two, it was feared that the remainder of the hand would have to be sacrificed to save his life. He is at present confined in Nicholls Hospital, and it is expected that it will be several days yet before he will have sufficiently recovered to enable him to return to his home at Chemong.

W.C.T.U. NOTES

The Matter Under This Heading is Supplied by the W.C.T.U.

As we had an encouraging meeting of representatives of temperance on Tuesday, 23rd inst., and in view of the coming local option campaign, will quote for the encouragement of those interested an item on How Newmarket is Booming Under Local Option.

Newmarket is booming under local option. The Office Specialty Co. have doubled the capacity of their plant during the past year and now employ some 600 hands instead of 350 as formerly. A number of strong, enterprising men, deeply interested in local option and the welfare of the community at large, purchased, enlarged and greatly improved a hotel, making it one of the best $1.50 per day hotels in Canada. They also employed a manager at $1,000 per annum, and in addition supplied him with all comforts and conveniences required by a man in his position. At the end of the first year the enterprise, after paying its shareholders 6 per cent., had a balance to the good of $1,140, to be devoted in any way to further the comfort of the travelling public. The hotel has good sleeping apartments, a fine dining room and sets an excellent table. Newmarket is but a short distance out of Toronto, but in spite of good trolley service into that city, the Newmarket hotel pays. The express charges on liquor sent into the town under license amounted to about $65 per month. Under local option the express charges has fallen to about $1.25 per month. This is an argument in favour of local option that cannot be gainsaid.

To Make a Contrast.

The town of Aurora, some five miles distant, watched with jealous eyes the outcome of the campaign in Newmarket. The citizens of the town said to each other, the business men of Newmarket will not go in for local option, and if it should be carried in Aurora, and not in Newmarket, of course business will go to the license town. To-day they are, no doubt, asking themselves if their fears were groundless. The business men of Aurora who defeated local option are not enjoying nearly so much prosperity as Newmarket. These towns furnish a splendid answer to the false statement so often made, that local option destroys business.—R. M. H.

How long, oh righteous God, how long
Till suffering earth and silent skies
Shall shout o'er this atrocious wrong,
'Tis fallen never more to rise?
Till once for all the galling chain
That hell keeps forging, link by link,
Falls shattered and no bonds remain
On human souls through curse of drink.

Our next meeting will be on Friday, 26th inst., at 3.30 o'clock.—A Member.

St. Paul's Church Has Its Annual Meeting—Reports Are Presented

The annual congregational meeting of St. Paul's Church was held in the Sunday School Auditorium Wednesday evening, January 24th, 1912.

The meeting was opened by devotional exercises, led by the Pastor, Rev. Robert Pogue.

After Mr. J. Crane had been elected to the chair, he called on the Secretary to read the minutes of the last annual Congregational meeting, which was held January 25th, 1911.

Reports from the different organizations were then called for and read all of which were accepted.

From the reports given, it was learned that a very successful year had been completed.

After the Session's report had been read and adopted, Sheriff Hall moved a resolution, which was seconded by T. A. S. Hay, as follows:

"The congregation of St. Paul's Church at htis their fourth annual meeting, since the induction of their Pastor, the Rev. Robt. Pogue, desire to place on record their cordial and hearty appreciation of his services during these years of faithful and efficient ministry.

They rejoice in the renewed activity manifested in all the departments of Christian work, and especially in the forward movement on the part of the congregation in connection with the Mission work of the church, which they feel is, in large measure, due to the earnest and devoted efforts of their pastor."

The meeting was a representative one of the congregation and a decided interest was manifested in the different departments.

The following managers were elected; Messrs. J. Crane, T. H. Gillespie, E. Lewin, and W. Scott of the old Board, and J. S. Keys, to fill the vacancy made by D. H. Moore's resignation.

Messrs. W. H. Hill and P. S. McLean were re-elected auditors.

After the Pastor had expressed his appreciation regarding the services rendered him by the congregation, as a whole, the meeting was dismissed by the Doxology and prayer.

Our Stocktaking Commences February 1st and we shall offer some exceptional Bargains in FURS to reduce our stock.

West End Club Holds Smoker

The West End Club held a very enjoyable smoker in their club rooms last night. There were about seventy five people in attendance. Progressive euchre was indulged in. Mr. Grant and Mr. Williamson carrying off the first and second prizes, respectively. Solos were rendered by Mr. Lang, Mr. Morphet, and Mr. Millburn. Mr. F. H. Dobbin gave a very interesting address on the Early Days of Peterborough" and Mr. Frank Clark delighted the gathering by the skillful rendition of several banjo solos.

Mr. H. H. Dimsdale, President of the Club, occupied the chair. At the conclusion of a varied and interesting programme, refreshments were served by the Club members.

PARALYZED LIMBS

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Hossburger, 19 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: 'Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years.'

Ice Cutting Is Prohibited

A letter to the Morning Times, signed "Medical Man" and recommending that the Board of Health take the Medical Health Officer's advice to stop ice cutting in the Little Lake, is slightly behind the times. "Medical Man" must have been napping, or been absent from the city a week, as the Board of Health has already taken action. Notices prohibiting ice cutting are up all over the lake, and no ice has been cut there this week. A number of men have been working down on the ice with teams for the last few days, apparently preparing a race course, but no ice has been cut. Some is being taken out of the river above the power house at Auburn.

A number of farmers are cutting ice in the river immediately above the point where the sewer empties into the river, opposite Rye's boat house. The ice is about 1 ft. 10 in. thick at that point, while on the Little Lake it is only about 14 in. thick. Where it is being taken out above Auburn, it is about 14 in. thick and very clear and pure.

Solicitor's Opinion

BERLIN, ONT., JAN. 24.—Town Solicitor Millar and Sims have given an opinion to Mayor Schmalz on behalf of the Board of Park Commissioners that the proposed agreement to be entered into by the Board, and Geo. O. Philip for the lease of the athletic grounds at Victoria Park on condition that a new grand stand, band stand and quarter mile track be costructed, is illegal, and cannot be entered into.

It is contended that no fee or rental can be charged for admission to lands acquired under the Parks Act, and entrance must be absolutely free This decision will result in grounds being acquired by private interests for athletic and amusement purposes, but it is doubtful whether it will be done this year. It is practically assured that the Berlin Canadian League team will play in Waterloo this season.

Brantford, Jan. 24.—Manager Kane of the Brantford Club, has signed up a number of new players for this year. The signed contracts were received yesterday of Harold Alden, Randolph, Mass., third baseman; Damey Elgo, Watertown, N. Y., pitcher. Others signed are as follows: Vincent Cassani, shortstop; J. J. Slattery, second base; Hart and Burrill, outfielders, all from New England. The Red Sox team will be almost entirely new this season, and players will report here May 1.

OBITUARY

MRS. JOHN SHERWIN.

The death occurred last evening, in the Nicholls Hospital of Fanny Stevenson, relict of the late Mr. John A. Sherwin of Grafton.

The deceased lady was fifty-nine years of age, and was born in Alnwick Township, Northumberland County, removing, later in life, to Grafton. On the death of her husband, some ten years ago, Mrs. Sherwin came to Peterborough, and has been a resident thereof ever since. Three weeks ago the deceased lady visited her sister, Mrs. M. J. Carter of Lindsay, but as she complained of indisposition, she was brought to the Nicholls' Hospital, where she passed away, yesterday.

The late Mrs. Sherwin is survived by two sisters and one brother, namely, Mrs. M. J. Carter, above mentioned, Mrs. Rollison of New York, and Mr. J. Stevenson of Michigan.

The funeral will take place at 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, in Thackeray's cemetery, near Rosenath.

Glorious Hair For Women

Your Money Back Says Wm. Madill if PARISIAN SAGE isn't the Most Delightful Hair Dressing, Grower, Beautifier and Dandruff Remover You ever saw.

Try it ladies on that fair and square basis. Surely you don't want to experiment with common commercial tonics, when a large bottle of PARISIAN SAGE costs but 50 cents.

There is a reason for the phenomenal sale of PARISIAN SAGE since it was first introduced into America, and the sales this year are breaking all records.

And the reason is plain to all: PARISIAN SAGE does just what it is advertised to do.

There is no reason whatever why any man or woman should fail to take advantage of the above generous offer.

But one thing that has made PARISIAN SAGE so famous is its peculiar power to turn the harsh, unattractive hair that many women possess into luxuriant and radiant hair in a short time. Women of refinement the country over are using it and it never disappoints.

Sold by leading dealers everywhere and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill for 50 cents a large bottle. The girl with Auburn hair is on every carton.

Drawbacks To Matrimony

A Short Story.

"This getting married," remarked young Mrs. Allison, "isn't all that it's talked up to be." She picked up her embroidery and resumed operations on a large butterfly.

The other embroiderers looked shocked, with the exception of the fluffy-haired blonde, who giggled appreciatively. "Is Fred developing dyspepsia?" she inquired with mirthful solicitude. "My dear!" cried the young Mrs. Allison, with wide-eyed protest. "Fred can eat anything, I'm happy to say. I ran completely out of ideas about meals day before yesterday, so I had fried sole for dinner, to break the monotony of steaks and chops and roast, and chops and roast and steak, and roast and steak—"

"That will do!" sternly interrupted the young matron with auburn hair. "That way lies madness. Some of us are housekeepers ourselves, you may remember."

"And," went on young Mrs. Allison, meekly, "Fred ate this sole with positive enjoyment, though I couldn't even bend my own. No, Fred is not dyspeptic."

"Well, then," said the fluffy-haired blonde, "he must be getting the club habit."

"Wrong," said young Mrs. Allison, promptly. "Fred doesn't belong to a single club except the Beethoven. He hates smoke, and he likes women, and he thinks that men's clubs are little short of relatively clean pigpens. Guess again."

"Well," said the fluffy-haired blonde, after a judicial pause, "there are only three causes that make a happily married woman sore on matrimony, if you will pardon the phraseology. They are dyspepsia, jealousy and lack of money. Is lack of money the canker that's eating the blush from your damask cheek, or words to that effect?"

Mrs. Allison shook her head again, emphatically. "Nobody has enough money," she said, with conviction. "But that's nothing. That's the least of my troubles, and I have as much money as is good for me, no doubt. Besides, a woman's a fool to let money worry her, if it's only a matter of luxuries."

The fluffy-haired blonde nodded assent. "Right you are," she said. "And, what's more, there are fewer fools than people would believe, when it comes to that. But whatever is the trouble, Celeste?"

Young Mrs. Allison sighed lugubriously. "What I object to in matrimony," she explained, jabbing her needle vigorously into the left wing of the blue insect, "is this sensation of permanence. Married people feel so digustingly settled in life, and I loathe feeling settled."

Everyone smiled.

"Well, times are changing," remarked the auburn-haired matron, with a suggestion of scorn. "Do you notice married people feeling so dreadfully settled these days?"

"I mean decent people, of course," corrected young Mrs. Allison, concisely. "The sense of being hopelessly settled descends upon you when you come down to breakfast the first morning after your honeymoon trip is over and it continues with you from that time on. When I go to the matinee, or to teas, or to the settlement, guild, or anywhere like that, and see a lot of girls of just my own age, whom I went to school with, and who haven't married—old maids like you"—she indicated the fluffy-haired blonde, who rose and bowed profoundly—"and see how positively juvenile and effervescent they look, and how delightfully unsettled they are in their attitude toward the world, I get pessimistic, that's all. I say to myself, 'Brace up, Celeste! You're a married woman, so hurry home or Fred will be there first and will wonder what keeps you.'"

"I tell you," went on young Mrs. Allison, "you can just reverse what the old negro mammy said about spinsterhood and apply it to matrimony. "I'se done hyar'd,' she said, 'as hit ain't so bad when yo' quit strugglin'.'"

Everybody laughed and young Mrs. Allison joined in doubtfully.

"By the way, Celeste," remarked the fluffy-haired blonde, abruptly, "you always used to go South with the Merrits to stay through January. You'll go this year, I suppose?"

"I should say not," answered young Mrs. Allison heatedly. "Do you suppose I'd go away for a whole month and leave Fred, when he simply couldn't go, no matter how badly he might want to? Why, what an idea! Are you crazy?"

There was another chorus of laughter.

"Oh, well," conceded young Mrs. Allison, with a smile, "one might as well make the best of one's troubles."—Chicago News.

HER BISQUE DOLL

BY PHILIP KEAN.
(Short Story.)
(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Fleurette was eighteen, and she had never owned a doll.

"Of course I am too old for one now," she would say, wistfully, as she passed the shop windows on her way home from work.

Fleurette was an apprentice in a millinery shop. Now and then little Fleurette sighed for luxuries.

"I have never really had a good time, you know, mother," she would say, and her mother would kiss her and sigh. "If only your father had lived, Fleurette."

The future seemed to hold nothing for them except the possibility of Fleurette's success as a milliner. She had been promised three dollars a week as soon as she learned the first principles of her trade.

When, therefore, she came home one night with a sore throat, there was consternation. "I simply can't be sick," Fleurette said, desperately. "Madame will get some one else in my place if I stay away."

She went to bed that night with her throat wrapped up, and when she struggled to her feet, in the early dawn, her head was hot with fever.

"But I must go," she insised, and at last her mother helped her into her clothes, and started her on her way.

The day was one of deadly and excruciating effort. Fleurette's hot head and heavy eyes seemed to weigh her down. Her needle in her trembling hand seemed to take stitches that accomplished nothing. Madame spoke to her sharply several times, and, at last sent her home. "And don't come back until you are rid of that cough," she said.

Fleurette, staggering homeward, felt that she didn't care if someone else did take her place. She wanted only to get to her mother, to lay her hot head on the pillow and sleep.

Her feet were so heavy that at last she stopped, and held on to the railing that ran in front of one of the big windows of the shop where there was displayed box after box of blonde and brunette bisque dolls.

"Oh, you pretty babies." Fleurette whispered, "if—if only I was little enough to curl up in that pink crib, how nice it would be——"

She said it our loud, and a man who had stopped beside her looked at her sharply.

"Hello," he said quickly, as she swayed, and would have fallen, but for his helping hand. "Look here, kiddie, you're in a bad way."

"I think," said Fleurette, looking up at him with fever-bright eyes, "I think I am very ill. But if I am going to die, I think I'd just as soon doo it right here, if you please. You—see, I've never had a doll——"

"You're not going to die," he said briskly. "You tell me where you live ,and I'll have you home and in bed before you can say Jack Robinson."

"I don't want to say 'Jack Robinson,'" Fleurette protested weakly, but she gave him her number ,and, leaning on his arm, was led down a side street to her waiting and anxious mother.

The big man stayed in the front room, while the girl's mother made her comfortable in the inner room, and Fleurette could hear him humming like a big bee as she went off into dreamland.

She had lapsed into unconsciousness by the time the big man had introduced himself to her mother. "My name is Jack Rodman," he said. "My boat came in this morning after a week's fishing on the banks. I own my own boat and in my own town you could find plenty of people who'd tell you that I come of honest folks, and that I haven't gone back on my name. I walked up town this afternoon and I saw the little girl talking to the dolls. She seemed too big for that sort of thing, so I listened, and I saw she was out of her head—but, say, is it true that she never had a doll?"

"Not since she can remember," said Fleurette's mother.

Rodman looked around the plain room. "I see," he said briefly. "Look here, may I come again and find out how she is?"

Mrs. Dubois knew that she could trust those frank blue eyes. "Yes," she said, "and thank you very much for bringing my little girl back to me."

He came in an hour later with some fruit. "I thought if she was feverish the oranges might taste good to her," he said. "Let me help you," he went on eagerly. "Here I am in this little old town, my boat has to go to the dry dock for repairs and my time hangs on my hands."

In her extremity Mrs. Dubois turned to him gratefully. "We have no friends and I can't leave Fleurette for a moment," she said. "I must have a doctor and medicine at once."

He was up and away in a moment, coming back with a kindly, competent physician, and running out again to fill prescriptions, to get a chicken for broth and milk and eggs.

"Look here," he said to Mrs. Dubois, "you let me do the cooking. I've done it lots of times on my boat—and you let me watch when you get worn out."

In the days that followed Mrs. Dubois often asked anxiously, "Isn't your boat ready to sail?" and Jack Rodman always answered with his big laugh, "There's a lot more to do on her."

It was not until Fleurette began to come back to life that he spoke of his return voyage. "In another week I must be getting home," he said.

"How can we ever repay you?" Mrs. Dubois said.

"Forget it," said Jack slangily, but his eyes were wet. "You must remember that you are my adopted mother—now that I haven't one of my own."

"If you were half as good to her as you have been to us ,she must have been proud of you," said the grateful little lady.

"Forget it," repeated Jack, with some embarrassment, "and—oh, look here, there's just one thing I want to get Fleurette before I go——"

But he wouldn't tell what it was until he came back with a long box, and unfolded from many wrappings of tissue paper a bisque doll.

Fleurette held out weak hands for her.

"Oh!" she gasped, oh!"

"I thought you'd like her, kiddie," said Jack somewhat awkwardly.

It was a happy little Fleurette who lay back on her pillows. "You wouldn't think I was really almost nineteen," she asked, "would you? It seems such a baby thing to want a doll, but then you see when you've always wanted a thing——"

"You ought to have it? Of course you should, kiddie. And now there's something else I want you to have."

"What?" asked Fleurette, and Mrs. Dubois looked at him curiously.

"A sea voyage," said Jack Rodman, unexpectedly. "I've asked the doctor, and he says it would be the best thing that could happen to Fleurette. The fishing's over, and I've a good cook, and a couple of other men on my boat, and while things are a bit rough we should certainly try to make you comfortable."

A week later Fleurette lay on the deck of the White Gull and watched the real gulls overhead. Beside her lay the bisque doll, and Mrs. Dubois sewed happily in the stern.

Jack Rodman, seated at Fleurette's feet, watched her with adoring eyes.

"If I hadn't stopped to look at those bisque babies I shouldn't have met you," he said.

Fleurette laughed. "You must have thought me a perfect child."

"I thought you a perfect—" Jack got up suddenly and went over to Mrs. Dubois. "I've got to say it," he told that lady, and his voice floated back to Fleurette.

"What?" asked Mrs. Dubois smiling.

"I got to tell her I love her," said Jack ,explosively, "but I suppose I'd better tell you first that I want you for a real mother, not for an adopted one."

"Dear boy," said Mrs. Dubois, and he kissed her.

Then he went back to Fleurette. "I want you to be first mate of the White Gull, dear," he said, steadily, "but I'm afraid to ask——"

"Why," said Fleurette, the colour flaming into her cheeks,

"Because I don't see how you can love a big, rough chap like me——"

"I don't love a big rough chap," said Fleurette, with shining eyes, "but I love a man with the kindest heart in the whole world—and the name of that man is—Jack."

AT THE SWING

(Short Story.)

Cloud mountains in the West, margined with fiery gold, flung long aerial shadows athwart the sky. There was the smell of new rain, though the turf under foot was dust-dry. A shower had come within sight across the meadows, then veered away southerly. Amy was glad it had veered. Her white frock, crisp and sheer, would have wilted in the damp of it. The rain had been too slight to do more than freshen the air—it still came warm to the cheek, but without the sting that had marked midday breezes.

At six o'clock of a midsummer afternoon roses droop on the stalk, but rose-cheeks are at their fairest. Amy proved the fact—she knew she had never looked better—therefore she was gay and proud. The Carlyns, mother and son, were coming to an early tea. It was their first approach to sociability. Ever since they moved into the old Earle place they had held themselves distantly toward the countryside.

That had not suited Amy, yet she had given no sign of her dissatisfaction. She was born ambitious—Lenox Carlyn was just the sort of man she wanted to marry, well-bred, well-to-do, above all rather distinguished. She had no mere vulgar greed for money, in spite of having had it in plenty all her life. But she did yearn to reach social pinnacles—the rare heights where the exalted had their being. Her people, the Watsons, were wholly undistinguished, nothwithstanding they were each and several, patterns of thrift, sobriety, and the moral virtues.

Secretly Amy had always envied Leslie May, her college mate, notwithstanding Leslie had had few and plain clothes, little money to spend, and never a box from home. She was an orphan, bound to work for her living—the college course was provided through the will of an elderly relative who had left a million to missions. But she was also a governor's granddaughter, and entitled to use a crest—when she could afford it. Amy would have given her string of pearls for a crest. She was bent on having one if ever she got away from the neighbourhood, where folk, knowing her pedigree, would only laugh at it.

She was glad and sorry to have Leslie as a guest; glad because her presence gave a reasonable excuse for the mild festivity; sorry, in that she felt herself, to a degree hampered by hospitality—it would not do to eclipse Leslie, either in clothes or charms. Hence the white frock, fine and lacy, to be sure, hence also the conspicuous absence of the pearls. Leslie had begged her to put them on, saying:

"You set them off so it's a shame to leave them in their case."

Instead of them, Amy had only a little gold chain, twin to that about Leslie's neck. Otherwise there were no likeness between them. Leslie's limp organdie was palpably faded, her slippers a bit scuffe, her ribbons crumpled. Further, she had done her hair in her usual severe fashion. There the rain had helped a bit, bringing the loose ends into curl, and so framing her mobile face in tendrilly wisps. She really looked her best. Amy's hair, yellow as wheat, was smooth, and beatifully dressed, modishly dresed to be sure, yet not in such wise as to deform her fine small head.

"Make haste and marry a duke—this head deserves strawberry leaves at least." Leslie had said, touching the golden softness admiringly.

Amy had smiled—she did not aspire to dukes, but it was pleasant to hear she deserved them. After all, Leslie was a good sort. When she herself was safely married, she would set about helping her friend to a like happy estate. Just now such a thing was out of the question. So she had asked young Danforth by way of balancing Leslie. He was her stand by—they had grown up together upon adjoining farm, and though gossip had been matching them since he put on long trousers, she had never thought of him as a lover.

Leslie might do worse, from a worldly point; Danforth if not rich was comfortably off, withal energetic. But Leslie would never in the world look at him—he bored her. Amy knew it, althouhg Leslie had always been too courteous to say so. Somewhat wilful, also high-headed was Leslie. She might have had half the mission-million if only she had agreed to give her life to the cause. Yet now she stood laughing and talking with Danforth, as if she were the one creature in hte world she cared to entertain.

Amy stared at her, frowning faintly—then her brow clearing magically, she said mentally:

"It is coming out beautifully—Lenox Carlyn will think they are sweethearts, if not engaged."

Lenox might have thought so, but for certain prior happenings—the fact that a year ago Leslie had been his betrothed. But since she gave no sign of recognition, he accepted the role of new acquaintance with what grace he might. Clearly he could not say to a wholly new acquaintance: "I was a jealous idiot! Forgive, O forgive me."

Lenox said it in his heart over and over throughout the high tea. More than ever he said it when, after the meal, they went in the twilight again out on the lawn.

It was wide and level, richly turfed and set sparsely with giant trees, remnant from the primeval woods. There was a swing in the biggest of them—a tall oak, but branchy. It stood apart from the rest, the big boughs spreading many yards on ach side. From he stoutest of the boughs spreading many yards on each side. From the stoutest of the boughs big rempen cables dangled. The seat was broad enough for two—Amy and Leslie ,side by side, were tossed up many times through wide areas of dusk. But they were considerate—tossing them was hard play for midsummer, no matter how gallant the tossers.

When the swing dangled empty Danforth stepped into it and began to swing himself with a pumping motion, slowly at first, but quickening, all the while strengthening until cables stood taut and straight at the check, the circle of motion bounded only by their length.

Any exhibition of srength fascinated Leslie. The full moon rising round and red, showed her heart in the eyes that watched Danforth, Lenox Carlyn, watching her, set his teeth. This bumpkin should not win by mere brute force. As Danforth stepped down Carlyn flung off his coat ,and leaped into the swaying seat, saying over his shoulder, "I could do that a long time ago—wonder if I have forgotten the trick?"

"Do you forget hings easily?" Leslie asked, merrily.

Still over his shoulder he answered, "Depends on what they are—and how much I want to remember." Then he set the swing in motion as deftly as Danforth had done.

Back and forth, back and forth, he sent it, crouching, swinging upward, the arc of motion ever and swiftly widening. He had not forgotten—the old-time aptitudes came back to him. But they could not bring gith them boyhood's absolute nervelessness. His, higher, higher, he went — the swooping was like the flight of some great bird. Then he felt himself suddenly dizzy—blind, sick—his muscles grew flacid. With a last desperate rally he clung trembling to the cables, but on the downsweep his hands unlocked themselves—he toppled to earth, and lay a crumpled heap on the turf.

"Lenox! O! you are dead?" Leslie cried, flinging herself wildly beside him, making to lift his head in her arms. He stirred, moaning faintly—the others ran to him.

"Call his mother," Leslie said clearly. "But tell her, please he is only hurt."

As Lenox groaned again, she laid his head back upon the turf, but left her arm underneath it. Amy, white-faced betwixt fear and anger, had hard work not to scream.

"Lenox! Say only you forgive me!" Leslie whispered, but Amy heard. So did the inert man, spent and breathless. "I—love—you," he murmured faintly. "It is—yours—to forgive."

Then he lasped into unconsciousness. It took weeks to come out of it. Only by a miracle had he escaped death. Leslie did not leave him—his mother would not hear to it even if her own heart had not prompted her to stay. When at last he knew them, they broke down, weeping together tears of the purest joy. And the very next day he married Leslie—to the disgust and confounding of Mrs. Amy Danforth, born Watson.—Buffalo News.

POPULATION OF INDIA

The final figures of the Indian census have now been received. The provisional total, published within 10 days of the census, taken on March 10, was 315,091,090. After elaborate checking, it has been found that these figures are slightly below the actual total, which is 131,438 more, an addition of .04 per cent. The final figures show that there are 161,320,140 males and 153,806,427 females within the British dominion in India, making a total of 315,132,537 persons. Slight vestiges of the European contest for supremacy in India remain in the French and Portuguese settlements, the only portions of India absolutely of British rule. The census of the French settlements, carried on synchronously with the British enumeration, yielded a provisional total of 282,379 persons (an increase of 3.4 per cent.), while that of the Portuguese settlements, taken in December last, yielded a return of 604,990 persons. These figures bring up the total number of persons within the geographical lines of India and Burma to the huge total of 316,019,846, as compared with 295,166,099 10 years ago.—New York Evening Post.

Government Refuses Compensation to N.T.R. Board

SERVICE IS UNRECOGNIZED

Ottawa, Jan. 26.—Quite a lively debate took place when the House was in committee on Hon. Frank Cochrane's Transcontinental Railway bill, Opposition members urging that the members of the commission, whose resignations had been demanded, should be allowed three months' salary as compensation. The Minister said he would consider the matter. One of the commissioners had resigned unconditionally, one had asked three months and the other six months' holidays.

Arthur Meighen (Portage la Prairie) was opposed to compensation. If the offices had been abolished, it was evidently because the commissioners had not been worth what the country was paying.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier defended the late commissioners. They had done splendid service.

J. H. Sinclair (Guysboro) went further and even talked of their "care in the expenditure of money," a phrase which was greeted by Government groans.

Mr. Meighen retorted by alleging some instances which had occurred before the public accounts committee the session before last. A leading Liberal lawyer of Winnipeg, he declared, had charged a minimum fee for passing all torrens titles for land purchased by the commissioners. Not only this, but he was allowed by the commissioners to divide up sections so as to mutiply his fees.

Single fees were $600 and $400. The average was six times the usual charge.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier defended the fees charged.

Dr. Clark (Red Deer) thought Mr. Meighen was trying to base a wide-spreading charge on trivial details. He commended the Government to walk in the way of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Foster), to whom had been confided "the guidance of their infant footsteps in the pathway of Cabinet duty." Even he, who looked into the "cheese-parings and candle-ends" of his Department had thought it right to do justice to the annuities' lectures.

W. S. Middlebro (N. Grey) recalled the fact that the chief engineer of the commission, Mr. Lumsden, had resigned because in one section alone, he said, $2,700,000 had been paid out to contractors by over-classification of loose earth and rock as solid rock. When his successor went over the road he reported disclassification, and in section F. J. D. McArthur had voluntarily reduced the amount he had claimed by $380,000. "And his $380,000," Mr. Middlebro continued, "the commissioners had approved against the consent of their own chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden. Now, in the face of this, have any men the right to come to us and say 'give us something to which we are not legally entitled?'"

E. M. MacDonald (Pictou) defended the late commissioners on the ground of high character, and deprecated Engineer Lumsden's reliability.

Hon. Frank Cochrane promised Sir Wilfrid Laurier to bring down a return showing the number of miles constructed and when the road would be completed, before the third reading of the bill. The leader of the Opposition agreed to this, but Hugh Guthrie (S. Wellington) thought this would not do, as these facts were at the basis of the present bill. He appealed for delay.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden said that it was not so long ago that the House had been furnished with the information asked for. The road was to have been finished in September last, and it would be hard to say when its completion would take place.

There was something radically wrong about the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway. We had had four commissioners in seven or eight years, none of whom had expert knowledge. The time had come to appoint a man who did know something about the work he had to oversee. Better results would ensue when the responsibility rested on one man.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux: "What about the commission of enquiry?"

Hon. T. W. Crothers: "That is quite another matter."

Mr. Lemieux: "What about the tariff commission?"

Mr. Crothers: "That is also another matter."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "What about the waterways commission?"

Mr. Crothers: "Oh, don't give us too much. That commission was appointed by the late Government."

Hon. Charles Murphy accused Hon. Frank Cochrane of ignoring the question of the Opposition. More courtesy on his part would expedite public business.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden moved that the committee rise and report progress and that the bill stand over till the information desired by the Opposition was produced.

Hydro For Brantford.

Brantford, Jan. 26.—As a result of a conference with Engineer Sothman and the citizens' committee, the City Council will ask that estimates be prepared for the submission of a Hydro-electric bylaw in this city. Mr. Sothman advised that Brantford apply for 2,000 horsepower, and gave an estimate that $75,000 would be required. Estimates will be submitted to the city within a month.

LIBERALS CONTROL

By Uniting With Right or Left They Rule Reichstag

SOCIALISTS NOW HAVE 110

Berlin, Jan. 26.—The complexion of the new Reichstag as determined by the final results of the three re-ballots taken yesterday, is shown by the general party groupings as follows: The subordinate or allied factions are included for convenience with the parties with which they generally vote:

Socialists, 110; Progressive non-Socialist groups, 95, including 46 National Liberals, 42 Radical people's party and 7 Progressive Peasants' parties. Clericals with Polish, Alsatian and Hanoverian Particularists, 120; Conservatives, allied parties, 70; Independent, 1—ex-Minister of the Interior, Count von Posadowsky-Wedner.

The results completely overthrow the working majority of the Conservative-Centre, or "blue black bloc," in the last Reichstag, which is now able to muster only 191, counting every possible vote, and places the control in the hands of the National Liberals, who will be able to form a majority by throwing their strength with either the right or left.

This makes the National leader, Ernst Bassermann, a commanding figure in the next Reichstag. He will be able to swing avowed National Liberals who, under proper inducements, would probably be prepared to co-operate with the Government on most questions. The hostility of other progressive groups to the so-called reactionary "bloc" apparently is too great for any working understanding, except on questions of national defence and the increase of the army and navy.

The Socialists return as the strongest individual party, bringing their total up to 110 by winning 11 of the 21 re-ballots in which they participated yesterday. This is more than double their strength, which was 53 at the time of the dissolution, and 29 above their previous maximum in 1903.

The Reichstag centre or clerical is the next strongest individual party, with 93 seats of their own, a falling off of 10, the result of widespread resentment at their share in the unpopular financial reform of 1909 and the prevalent high cost of living.

Having accomplished what the utmost efforts of Von Buelow and the Government were unable to effect in 1907, the Poles return with 19 of 20 former mandates. They had hoped to play a big role and obtain important concessions for the Polish policy as an essential factor to the new Government majority, but the extent of the opposition victory dashes their expectations.

Good Word For "Shoe Trust."

Montreal, Jan. 26.—"Since the United Shoe Machinery Co. has been established in Canada, conditions have improved wonderfully, both in the quantity and quality of the work turned out by the machines," said W. S. Mardon of the S. Mardon Shoe Co., yesterday, before the commission investigating trade conditions as handled by the company in question.

The enquiry was adjourned until Tuesday, Jan. 30.

Brockville Cuts Gas Rate.

Brockville, Jan. 26.—The municipal light and water commission has made another reduction of 12 1-2 cents in gas, bringing the price to $1 per 1,000 cubic feet.

"GOING THE PACE."

Duke Spends a Busy Eight Hours In Washington.

Washington, Jan. 26.—The Duke of Connaught went the American "pace" in his visit to the national capital yesterday. Arriving late in the afternoon, he was whirled first to the British embassy, spent 40 minutes in the White House, where he was received by President and Mrs. Taft, was then motored back to the embassy, where he was the guest of honor at a dinner, to which most of the prominent members of the diplomatic corps were invited, visited the National Press Club, and then, tired, but "delighted," as he expressed it, sought his private car. He left about midnight for New York.

The duke, the first royal visitor to Washington in many years, spent 40 minutes in the White House and President Taft returned his call at the British embassy.

Altogether the chief executive of the United States and his vice-regal visitor were together for a little more than an hour. The duke had no official message to bear from England and the President had none to give. Their conversation was of the most general character and the only formal welcome to His Royal Highness was that extended to him when he left his private car at the Union Station, by Major A. W. Butt, President Taft's personal aide. The Union Station was well filled with spectators. Three White House automobiles were waiting, and the visitor and the aides and embassy attaches were taken immediately to the embassy. From the embassy to the White House and back four troops of cavalry, an unusually large number, formed an escort of honor. Thousands of people crowded around the White House grounds to watch the duke as he passed in, but he rode in a closed automobile and they were disappointed. A dozen extra policemen kept the crowd outside the gates.

Mr. James Bryce, First Assistant Secretary of State Huntingdon Wilson, and Second Assistant Secretary Adee were the only guests outside the Cabinet. The duke's aide, Col. Lowther, who came with him from New York, and the staff of the British embassy, were presented to Mr Taft. Following the formal reception tea was served in the red room of the White House by Miss Helen Taft.

The duke chatted with all the President's guests, but spent much of his time talking with Mr. Taft and Secretary of State Knox.

Last night, the duke was the guest of Ambassador Bryce at a dinner at the embassy, which he left shortly before midnight to visit the National Press Club.

Collecting Information.

Ottawa, Jan. 26.—H. W. Whitla of Winnipeg, who has been appointed counsel to represent the public in the investigation into the charges of discrimination against the west in freight rates, has been in Ottawa for the past couple of days, conferring with the Government and the Railway Commissioners. Mr. Whitla was closeted all day yesterday with the commissioners; considerable data which has already been collected was reviewed, and plans for the coming campaign were made.

Mr. Whitla left for Montreal last night, where he will spend a couple of more days gathering information before going west. The first sitting of the commission will be Feb. 13 in Ottawa.

RIOTS MAY BE AVERTED

Churchill Will Forego Speaking in Ulster Hall

ANY PLACE WILL DO HIM

London, Jan. 26.—Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, has sent a letter to Lord Londonderry, ex-viceroy of Ireland, and one of the Unionist leaders who are opposing the proposed home rule meeting, stating that he would advise the Ulster Liberal Association not to insist upon holding the meeting in Ulster Hall, Belfast, as contemplated on Feb. 8, but that he intends to deliver a speech somewhere else in Belfast on that day.

Mr. Churchill says in his letter:

"It is my duty to keep my promise to the Ulster Liberal Association and assert the right of free speech in a public meeting. But as the main objection appears to be directed against the holding of the meeting in Ulster Hall I shall ask the Irish Liberal Association to accede to your wish. There will thus be no necessity for your friends to endure the hardships of a vigil or sustain the anxieties of a siege. Neither will it be necessary for you to break the law in an attempt to deprive us forcibly of the use of property to which we are lawfully entitled.

"It's not a point of any importance to me where I speak in Belfast. On contrary I desire to choose whatever hall or place is least likely to cause ill feeling to the Orange party.

The letter concludes:

"It has, however, become necessary to public liberties that the meeting should take place at Belfast on Feb. 8, and I intend to hold it there in the lawful exercise of the elementary rights of citizenship."

Mr. Churchill's conciliatory move is calculated to lessen the chances of rioting at Belfast on Feb. 8.

Matters had reached a deadlock, offering no except without the gravest consequences. The Ulster Unionists appeared ready to take any risk to prevent Mr. Churchill from speaking in the hall where his father, Lord Churchill, had delivered his famous dictum:

"Ulster will fight, and Ulster will be right."

The harbor commissioners of Belfast by informing Mr. Churchill that Feb. 9 would be an inconvenient day for his proposed visit of inspection, gave strong support to the Unionists. On the other hand, the Liberals made a formal demand to be placed in possession of Ulster Hall on the morning of Feb. 8, with a view to defeating the Unionist tactics.

At this point, as a result of a conference held in London on Wednesday, Mr. Churchill volunteered to accept a change in the place of meeting, and although the Unionists joyfully hail his decision as a retreat, largely due to the rebuff administered by the Belfast harbor commissioners, there is little doubt that they welcome the opportunity to escape from an unpleasant position, as public opinion seems to be going against them. Mr. Churchills letter was made public too late for the Orange leaders to arrive at a decision last night, but the general belief is that the trouble has been averted and the harbor board appear to have placed themselves in an uncomfortable position by needlessly snubbing Mr. Churchill.

In a long article in Reynold's Weekly Newspaper, dealing with the situation, John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, reminds the British public that the threats do not emanate from the general body of Protestants in Ireland, but from a small and noisy minority of Orangemen, who are opposed to every great reform for the benefit of Ireland.

Maloney Opens Campaign.

Eganville, Jan. 26.—That the bulk of the Liberal Conservative party of South Renfrew had never fostered any agreement that Hon. G. P. Graham would be unopposed in South Renfrew, that Mr. A. T. Low erred if he said that they had, and he intended to seek the suffrage of the riding, conscious that he had never broken faith with it and independent of any agreement, were the emphatic statements made by Dr. Maloney, Conservative candidate in South Renfrew, before an audience of some 700 in Eganville town hall last night.

He was backed by the presence on the platform and inclusion in the list of the evening's speakers of Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, and Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General.

It was the first shot in what promises to be one of the most warmly contested campaigns that South Renfrew has yet seen.

Gets Black Hand Letter.

Cobalt, Jan. 26.—Manager A. J. Goodall, of the Imperial Bank, received a letter signed "James Brutal, secretary Black Hand, Cobalt," demanding $2,000 to be sent to a post-office address in town. The penalty for refusal would be the blowing up of the bank. A decoy letter was sent, and the police have arrested a Finlander who keeps a boarding house.

It is said that the "Black Hand" has a strong following in this section.

Sea Serpent In St. Lawrence.

Quebec, Jan. 26.—Another man claims to have seen the "sea serpent." This time the witness is a reliable official of the Marine Department. Mr. Fafard, lighthouse keeper at Pointe Des Monts, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Mr. Fafard informed his superiors that he saw a "sea serpent" twice this winter. The monster was a hundred feet long.

Counsel Ruel Candid.

Ottawa, Jan. 26.—"A member of Parliament often goes to Sir William Mackenzie and asks for a line of railway through his constituency," said Gerard Ruel, counsel for the Canadian Northern yesterday in discussion in the railway committee of a western bill.

"Sir William," he added, "comes to his law department, and asks: 'Have we a charter there?' If we have not, he asks: 'Well, why in —— haven't you?' So we try and get them."

This was cited as a reason for passing a C.N.R. bill in Manitoba, where the members and people are pressing for a line. The bill passed.

The Barcelona Traction, Light and Power bill, a proposal of Dr. W. F. Pearson and associates in Toronto, want to operate in Spain, and seek to supplement the power the company has under the Companies' Act.

Broken Axle Derails Train.

Montreal, Jan. 26.—One passenger had his leg broken and a number of others were badly shaken up, cut and bruised by an accident which occurred yesterday morning to a mixed train on the Napierville branch of the Delaware & Hudson Railway. The train, consisting of eight coal cars, a passenger car and a baggage car, was running from St. Constant to Rouse's Point at about 25 miles an hour when a broken axle on the baggage car caused it to leave the track, dragging the passenger and some of the coal cars with it. Most of the twenty-five passengers were thrown from their seats.

Revolution In Montenegro.

London, Jan. 26.—A despatch from Cettinje, Montenegro, reports that the police there have discovered a widespread movement to overthrow the Montenegrin dynasty and establish a republic. It is alleged that the movement is being engineered chiefly by Montenegrin emigrants in the United States, who have sent $200,000 to the revolutionary committee, whose headquarters are in Belgrade.

Steel Schedule To-day.

Washington, Jan. 26.—The tariff revision debate of the sixty-second Congress will begin to-day in the House, when Rep. A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania, will open the argument in favor of the steel and iron schedule reported yesterday by Chairman Underwood of the ways and means committee.

What Value Do You Put On Your Eyesight?

We have people come to us, after they have tried all kinds of cheap Glasses, bought from some house to close trade, or picked out of an assortment of "cheap glasses" in a haphazard way. "THE SECRET OF PAUL FARLEY"

By JOHN MARCH

"I expect you have formed a very fair estimate of the trouble upstairs."

A distressed expression came into the dark eyes.

"I'm afraid that I have come very near the lamentable truth. I have been trying to persuade myself that the weakness is only temporary. Can't you predict a short journey through the woods?"

"Yes, under favorable conditions. Constant fretting has unhinged her mind, Farley, but the mischief at present is quite local; there is nothing radically wrong, nothing but what given her heart's desire, could easily be remedied. I suppose you couldn't find it in your heart to accept this overflow of affection and look upon it as a blessing in disguise"

"No, I couldn't," he said earnestly, "I coudn't."

"Not if the powers that be were brought to see the policy, the advisability of the step?" the doctor asked, persuasively, "and the arrangement were to save Miss Judith from a particularly hard fate?"

"No," Paul said again in the same pathetically earnest tone, "I couldn't, doctor. I am sorry, exquisitely sorry, for Sir Thomas and Lady Hargrave; they have my entire sympathy. I would do anything in reason, I would not spare myself help or comfort, but I couldn't marry their daughter. However plausibly you put it, in whatever pitiful colours you painted Miss Judith's sad situation, it would not alter my determination. It has not been my fault, doctor, I hope I have never acted in any but an honourable and courteous way."

Doctor Hunter looked away and smiled a little.

"Even were I willing," Paul resumed, "there is Mr. Pelham to consider. We know from experience how much his heart is bound up in her. It would be an unwise and cruel move. The proposed remedy would simply court another gun disaster."

Jack Hunter knit his thick brows and contemplated Paul's clever face and small shapely head resting against the pink silk cushion.

"It's something akin to a Gordian knot," he said, "and I'm not acquainted with an Alexander shrewd enough to cut it in twain. Poor Judith; poor Anthony. I don't see my way to helping them."

"Get them married, Dr. Hunter," he said, bending forward eagerly. "It's the only help possible. Get them married quickly with her parents and Mr. Pelham on your side it ought not to be a very difficult task."

"It would be easier if you were not here, Farley," he said, looking at him anxiously. "Is it absolutely imperative you should remain?"

A hard stubborn look came into his eyes; they glittered ominously.

"Imperative just so far as my own interests are concerned," he said, a little cynical smile catching his upper lip. "Do you think, Dr. Hunter, I am called upon to relinquish an excellent appointment, credentials, recommendations in certain quarters where a chance of preferment is only possible, for no fault whatever of my own? It's rather hard lines now that I am a few rungs on the ladder. It's like shifting the thing and throwing me to the ground, stunned for a time, and when I have recovered my senses and steadied my nerves sufficiently I can go back to the bottom, begin all over again and commence mounting from solid earth."

"How long have you been here, Farley?"

"Four months, and I must stay another two. It's little enough, too little by far, and I must insist on the six months. Of course, if you succeed in gaining Sir Thomas's ear and I am dismissed with a month's salary I am not a free agent, I take my chance; but you must not ask me of my own free will to throw up a situation like this, to cut myself adrift from all social anchorage, to fight poverty, obscurity, and starvation alone."

"Good heavens, my dear lad!" Jack Hunter expostulated, shocked. "I wouldn't turn a dog from a good home to forage for himself."

Paul smiled a nervous smile that was more touching than tears.

"I beg your pardon," he said, unsteadily, sinking back on to the cushion. "I thought perhaps you might consider it your duty to point out to Sir Thomas the wisdom of my dismissal. I know I am of use to him and that he appreciates me, but if it came to be his daughter's welfare versus his secretary's prospects, why I should without hesitation go to the wall. The true cause of my leaving and a hundred perversions of the truth would leak out, such things always do through dependents in some way or other, and it would do me infinite harm; it would simply spell social extinction. It all sounds exceedingly selfish, I know. It's self from beginning to end; but, doctor, if you knew how I have worked, slaved, striven, merely to attain the position I am now in, you would not be surprised that I cling so tenaciously to present good."

"My dear lad," he said, sitting on the arm of Paul's chair and patting his shoulders, "you shall keep it for me, and if I could I would make the good better. There will be difficulties to face here, Farley, at the Larches, and elsewhere, but you may rely upon me to befriend, should the opportunity come within my province. You wouldn't object to spend a week in town while we see what can be done with Miss Judith?"

"Not at all," he said, with a sigh of content, "I should rather like it."

"Very well—ah, that reminds me. Felix went to London this morning. He is returning by the 7.30 train. I suppose when you feel up to it you'll run in there and wish my little girl joy of her old man?"

"You are young enough in all conscience, sir," he said, laughing, "but I don't think I will call at the Manor House. I'll send as pretty a message as I can compose, by you, sir."

"Now, Farley," he said, persuasively, transforming the gentle patting into a firm grip, "don't nurse it, let the resentment die a natural death. Felix would give his ears to be friends, I know he would. He admitted last night he had been hasty, and I'm very sure he would concede and condone a good deal more this morning. He said if there were anything he could do for you with reference to this misunderstanding at the Larches, he would be pleased to do it, if you ask him. The initiative, I think, must rest with you, my boy. If you can bring yourself to meet Felix in anything approaching a friendly spirit, the rest will follow smoothly as a natural consequence. You will be serving your own interests by thinking this over, Farley."

He smiled a little, and there was an expression in his eyes which baffled the doctor's usual penetrative sagacity.

"Thank you, I will bear it in mind," he said, rising as the doctor stood up. "I am much obliged to you for your attention."

"Tut!" he said brusquely. "I am backwards and forwards to see Miss Hargrave. Take care of yourself; don't go out, keep warm, and lie fallow for awhile, and, oh, I'll let you know the exact date to fix for your little holiday," and with a laugh and swinging stride he was gone from the room.

Paul crawled to the typewriter, laid a pocketbook containing his shorthand notes beside it, and reeled off a dozen letters with scarcely the easy grace that generally characterized all his movements. He put them in their several envelopes, stamped and made them into a neat pile on the writing-table.

Once again, with clenched teeth, he went bravely through a series of exercises, extremely painful and lascerating to the nerves in his bruised condition, but essential, and of the utmost importance if he desired to preserve a remnant of agility, instead of allowing his muscles and sinews to settle into a practically paralyzed state of stiffness. He sank into his chair exhausted, breathing quickly, and went carefully through Mrs. Wycherly's letter for the third time.

"I wish he could see it," he said, half aloud. "I wonder how I could manage to——"

"I have it!" he muttered, starting up suddenly and collapsing immediately with a groan, "and I'll do it; it will be an accidental meeting, and —sapristi! can I walk four miles?" he asked himself, looking ruefully at his strained slender legs. "It will be a trial of fortitude, but I must stretch a point and snatch this golden chance. I feel," lifting his long arms above his head and grasping the back of his chair, "I feel as if the lists were set and I must have a tilt at fate. It may give dire offence and it may do nothing of the kind. Whichever way I reckoned I might be foiled. Things may just as well be for as against me. Dice have many sides!"

CHAPTER XVI.

At the Popinjay.

"Where are you going, Mr. Farley?" Tom Hargrave asked, watching Paul button himself into his thickest and warmest overcoat.

"To East Weyberne, on a little personal business."

"Are you going to walk?"

"I am going to ride shank's pony. Why?"

"Because it's a long way and you haven't seemed well all d[illegible]. If you can ride, sir, you may take my bicycle, the new one, free wheel, and all the latest improvements."

"Thank you, that's a bright idea, Tom!" he said, meditatively. "I've not ridden for nearly nine months; do you think I am to be trusted with a new machine?"

"If you could ride decently well when you left off, sir, you'll soon get into it again. Will you have it?"

"Yes, I think I will if you can put up the saddle to the right height for me!"

"I'll put it as high as it will go, but I don't know if it will be very comfortable," he said, looking dubiously at the length of Paul's legs.

"Well, if you will lend me a pair of clips, light the lamp, and wheel the machine outside, I'll try it."

Paul changed his hard hat for a cloth cap, fastened his trousers tight to his ankles, pulled on a pair of woollen gloves, and went out to the delighted boy.

"Shall I hold it, sir, while you mount?" he asked.

"Yes, if you like," Paul laughed; "I dare say I shall make a hash of setting out, but once I'm fairly started I shall do. You'll see a fine specimen of wobbling, Tom, if you wait long enough."

Between them and without so much difficulty as he anticipated, considering his stiffness, Paul mounted and set off down the avenue in a fairly straight course. Tom followed a short distance to keep him in sight, and just before Paul turned a corner he put his fingers to his mouth, blew a shrill, weird whistle, and shouted something to the effect that he was a crack cyclist, a champion rider.

The grey afternoon fog had deepened into a dark night with scarcely a star in the moonless sky, and Paul had gone but a few hundred yards when he felt a sprinkle of fine rain. The wind was rising, and dead against him, but he comforted himself with the assurance that the rain would hold off, be little more than a misty drizzle, unless the wind dropped.

The roads were good around Weyberne hard, even, and well tended, with scarcely sufficient dip along his route to form a hill. On both sides, either plantations or dense woods bordered the high road all the way to East Weyberne, increasing the gloom on a dark night, and instilling into the imaginative mind a wholesome dread of convenient lurking places for loafers, poachers, or any desperate ugly characters. Paul was not nervous, he had made the journey many times on foot alone, and had never met with a sight or sound incongruous with the lovely rustic English roads and lanes. Nevertheless, he was not sorry to see the street lamps come shivering into life as he approached the small, dull, country town.

He rode into the yard of the Popinjay, jumped off the machine, and asked the hostler if Mr. Fleming's trap was in their custody. The man touched a curly forelock, nodded, and intimated that the London train was due and the squire expected at any minute, but the mare would not be put between the shafts until the gentleman arrived to give his orders. He walked into the inn and met the landlady on the threshold, buxom and smiling, and as fresh looking as the paint on the front of the house.

"Is your sittingroom disengaged, Mrs. Radler?" he asked.

"Yes," she said pleasantly, "until Squire Fleming comes, and then he's very likely to go there and wait till the mare's put to."

"Is he sure to go in?" he asked, anxiously.

"Well, I can't be exactly sure, Mr. Farley," she returned, looking inquiringly at him; "if he was in a tremendous hurry he might not come indoors at all."

"Can't you make it a sure and certain thing, Mrs. Radler, that he does come into your sitting-room before he leaves?" he asked, slipping a sovereign into her hand, "and there won't be any necessity, you know, to say who is waiting for him."

"I'll see to it, sir," she said, looking up into his face a little startled. "I'll manage so he does come, Mr. Farley. The train is in, sir," she added quickly; "we can always hear the engine shut off steam when the wind lies this way."

"Thank you," he said, walking down the sanded brick passage into the sitting-room.

He seated himself on the hard, horsehair sofa, his heart beating furiously, and contemplated the fire with the door ajar. Very few minutes elapsed before he heard the Squire's voice outside in an animated discussion with the Popinjay's hostler about the mare's collar, and then he came into the bar and complimented Mrs. Radler on her robust and flourishing appearance.

"Will you have anything to take, sir?" Paul heard her ask.

"Yes," he said briskly, "give me a whisky and soda."

"If you will go into the sitting-room, I'll bring it in to you," she remarked in an easy, natural tone, and Paul, with heart almost in his throat, rose hastily from the couch and stood palpitating on the hearthrug.

"No, thanks, Mrs. Radler," he said, contentedly, "I'll drink it here."

Paul's heart stood still. For an infinitesimal space his galloping pulse seemed to suspend itself and then rush on again in hot, tremulous haste.

"There's a gentleman in the sitting-room, sir, waiting to see you," she said carelessly, handing him the glass; "perhaps you will like to take this with you?"

"Waiting to see me?" he asked, surprised. "Who is it, Mrs. Radler?"

Beauty And The Doctor

(Short Story)

BY CATHERINE COOPE
(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

The young doctor drew in a great breath of country air. The garden at the rear of the old home in which he was to spend his vacation was a mass of scented flowers. Roses, zenias, dahlias all clustered about like little joyous souls roving in the moonlight.

A refreshing rain had cooled the air, and because the night was beautiful ,and the doctor young, his thoughts turned toward the girl to whom his heart had lately responded. Because his mind was in a chaotic condition regarding the depth of his feeling toward Rose Langdon, Dr. Emery had come to the solitude of the old manor house on Long Island.

His thoughts for the moment bent chiefly on the beauty of the night were easily interrupted. He paused and listened.

In the walled garden next door a soft swishing sound made regular harmony to his ear. He drew nearer the wall and looked over through a clump of bushes. His eyes opened wide and he leaned cautiously away from the moon rays.

Was she a wraith or a blood and bone girl who trailed back and forth over the rain-soaked grass? Dr. Emery, so completely startled out of his everyday, humdrum city life, could not definitely answer the question. He watched with fascinated attention.

The girl's attire was white and clingy and traily, and as she moved across the long grass her bare feet peeped forth. Those little feet found a pool of water left by the recent rain, and a gleeful chuckle fell from the girl's lips.

"Insane!" muttered the young doctor. "By Jove! What a pity—she is as beautiful as the lilies.

"They toil not, neither do they spin," thought the doctor, and the pity dropped out of his thoughts, the girl seemed so absolutely happy, so evidently joyous in this condition of the mind. After humming a few notes of lilting melody the girl tripped quickly toward the house and disappeared.

Dr. Emery frowned, partly because the garden seemed less beautiful and partly because he had been interrupted in his attempt to diagnose this peculiar form of brain malady. The puzzled frown remained as the doctor returned to the house.

At an early hour of the morning there came to the doctor's ears that same tinkling laugh. He jumped hurriedly from his bed and looked out of the window.

The sun was a great ball in the eastern sky, and it cast its dawning colour over the girl in the next garden.

"This is assuredly a peculiar case," muttered the doctor, while he kept fascinated eyes upon the girl. She was in the front garden now and a blue kimono enveloped her; her head was bound closely in a turban effect of the same shade, and she was tripping quickly about among the great hydrangea bushes. From time to time she would select a blossom and hold it in two caressing hands, then suddenly bury her face in its soft depths. It was at such moments that the little laugh rang out. The doctor watched her fuss over the tiny white petals that clung to her eyes and lips and nose.

"She is just plum dippy!" ejaculated Dr. Emery, with a tinge of irritation that she should be getting so much joy out of living. "I suppose if I discovered a cure for her she would be as grumpy then as she is happy now."

The girl then went down into the back garden and selected an ear of corn from the stalks, which she ate, nibbling it with apparent relish.

Then she sampled peas, carrots, and beets.

"Mud and all! Most extraordinary!" For the first time in his career Dr Emery regretted that he was not an insanity expert. "She seems to thrive on it—never saw such a beauty in all my life," was the doctor's thought as he crept back into bed after the girl had returned to the house. He lay a long time wondering how he could arrange to talk to the girl without arousing her suspicion.

During the day he watched for various moods of the case. When the sun was high the girl came out with her glorious red-gold hair hanging, and proceeded to sway backward and forward, swishing it to all the wind in the air, after which she brushed it vigorously.

"Now she thinks she is an Italian wood carrier." The doctor watched her put a book on the crown of her head and walk slowly around and around the house. "I'll bet there is a specialist in that house watching her every minute!"

In the evening when the moon was high the girl came again into the back garden. Dr. Emery was well hidden behind a clump of bushes.

"Great Scott! She has on her bathing suit! and she is rolling in this soaking grass! She'll have something to-morrow that will need a doctor as sure as my name's Emery!"

After rolling over and over in the wet grass and then lying full length on her back for a long moment, the girl pulled a bathing cap well over her head and turned on the hose. With laughter falling from her lips she ran in and out, squealing with the cold and exhilaration of her hose bath.

A door opened in his own house.

"Oh, Dr. Emery! Here is a telegram for you," the voice from the house called.

With a lingering look at the hose nymph Dr. Emery went for his telegram.

He was summoned back to town. A patient needed him and Emery took the late train out that night. He went, determined to return as quickly as possible. Pity being akin to love, the young doctor felt the diagnosis of his own case was easily made.

Weeks wore on and still Dr. Emery was harnessed to the grind in town. He felt, however, that since the snow was upon the ground the girl would not be permitted to carry on her insane wanderings in the garden. Rose Langdon had drifted entirely out of his thoughts and only the girl of the garden lingered.

It was a big New Year dinner, his first social moment of the past months, that Dr. Emery glanced up to meet his partner for dinner.

The most radiantly beautiful girl he had ever looked upon had laid a hand on his arm and was walking beside him into the dining-room.

"Then you are not insane?" he asked.

The girl turned wide, violet eyes upon him. Then she laughed that same tinkling laugh that he had heard in the garden.

"Not that I know of, Dr. Emery Is there something in my appearance that suggests——"

"Nothing but—beauty," the doctor said, because it had been in his heart so long. "But last summer—"

The girl turned quickly toward him and a bright blush crimsoned her cheeks. "Where were you?" she asked.

"In the garden—next door."

Violet looked into Dr. Emery's eyes and seemed fascinated by the multitude of questions she saw there. She laughed and tried to keep the colour from her cheeks.

"But why did you wiggle your toes about in the oozy mud—and why did you lie down in soaking grass that might have had copperheads and black beetles in it—and why did you come out at dawn and bob into the hydrangeas?"

The doctor's look was so serious with its mixture of adoration that Violet laughed aloud.

"You are forgetting the corn and carrots and peas!" she smiled, and tried to recall just how far her experiment had taken her. "You see, Dr. Emery, you are not a beauty specialist or you would know there is nothing like early morning dew for the complexion. The hydrangeas gave me that. From the oozy mud, as you call it, and the grass, I was absorbing electricity and nerve force."

The doctor was beginning to understand. "But the hook on your head and the green vegetables that no doubt had lots of little green—"

Violet stopped both ears and turned slightly away. "I refuse to listen. You are trying to disparage my quest for beauty and I think it very commendable."

"It might be in some cases," said the doctor, and when he smiled straight into her eyes Violet had the grace to blush.

THE POULTRY WORLD

By EDWARD BROWN, F.L.S., Hon. Sec. National Poultry Organization, Ltd., England.

Many years ago, probably about fifty, a cartoon appeared in Punch, in which a customer, noting the advancing price of oysters, said, in alarm, that at the rate of increase they would soon be, I think, two shillings per dozen. Such point was soon reached and passed. Oysters of almost every kind are a luxury. The question arises, are eggs to become in price beyond the reach of the ordinary householder, who, during the last two or three decades, has begun to regard them as a valuable item in the daily diet? We can do without oysters. To be compelled to omit eggs would be serious indeed.

The pressure of life is great everywhere. Prices are rising which, to the majority of our people, means limitations of purchasing power. It is an economic axiom that an advance of prices, save in what may be regarded as absolute necessities, is followed by reduction of consumption. Nor can it be otherwise. There is a limit beyond which we cannot go. Such needs only to be stated to find acceptance. Traders tell us that every advance of 5d per dozen for eggs is followed by a corresponding diminution in the sale, or a transference to lower grades, or both. That is a fact of everyday experience, and more especially when other commodities are also rising in values.

It is unnecessary to give figures showing the advances in prices of eggs, as these are apparent to all, and have been published freely of late. Such is found to be the case everywhere at home and abroad, with foreign and native produce. Perhaps the Britisher is suffering less than are others, but it is no satisfaction to him when he has to pay more by 25 per cent. for the same quality as before, if Germans and Americans have to pay 50 per cent. His own pocket is what appeals to him. When rates are advanced unduly, except where money is abundant, he either goes without or reluctantly purchases the lower priced eggs, even though they are inferior. Recently I was staying in one of the Midland counties, and was discussing this question with my host and hostess. The former was inclined to contest my views, but his wife stated that when eggs were dear she bought fewer. "Oh!" he said, "is that why I have had no egg with my bacon and breakfast this week?" "Yes," was the reply. It is this check to consumption we have to fear, especially in respect to home produce, which this year is dearer than has ever been known before.

Producers like high prices. It is natural they should do so. That is legitimate, and up to a point desirable. But there is a limit. It is to the producer's best interest to stimulate consumption, from which greater demand will arise. That, however, will be checked if prices are unduly advanced. There are two ways of attaining enhanced returns. First and foremost, by so improving the quality, by improved methods of production, and by more expeditious marketing, as that the lower grades are raised into a higher rank, wherein prices are better. That is what we have striven for during the last dozen years, and with a considerable amount of success. The second is by forcing up prices which are already high enough, the main result of which is to reduce consumption and demand. It is the former we should promote rather than the latter.

Personally, I have no sympathy with the cry that we should pay more than the value for home produce. The advantages our people have with perishable products like eggs are so great that they can practically control the new-laid egg market, when they take the trouble to outdistance their rivals. All such ideas, such as marking of foreign eggs, that are advocated, are in order to set up a fictitious value, and to obtain money for qualities that are often absent. It is freshness and fullness and flavour we pay for, no matter where the egg is laid. If poultry keepers could increase the winter output of eggs so that the retail price was never more than two shillings per dozen, and even that merely for a week or two, the enhanced consumption would make the business more profitable to them than now, when for weeks very few eggs are obtainable. The fact of prices being high is of no benefit to the man who has nothing to sell.

That the cost of production has increased is unquestionable, owing to the rise in price of foodstuffs. But it is more than compensated by the increased returns. Where methods adopted are satisfactory, but, unfortunately, such is not generally true, the industry was never more profitable than at present. What we have to seek for are newer foods and less wasteful systems of feeding, improved methods of management, greater average production from the individual hen, and reduction of intermediate expenses in marketing, with expedition in transit from nest to breakfast table.

The question is of importance to all, producers and consumers alike, more especially in view of diminishing foreign supplies, which have heretofore had the desirable influence of stimulating a desire for eggs as food, and checked the tendency to inflation of prices, to which producers are prone. We should seek to increase home production, and thus prevent that shortage which will, if continued, assuredly so enhance values as to reduce consumption to a large extent.

Be careful about your breeding if you want to get into good stock. Haphazard matings will never produce anything and you will not be satisfied with the results. Have a purpose in your work, and work with that in view. Get your birds tightly mated and then give them the best of care. If you want strong, fertile eggs do not press for heavy winter egg production. You cannot burn the candle at both ends and have it for any length of time. You can't get lots of winter eggs and later on strong, fertile germs in eggs from these heavy winter egg producers.

BLINDNESS.

There are several causes for blindness: First, accident; second, the effects of other diseases and third, a parasite. When accidental, the fowl is blinded in one eye only; there is no economic treatment. The inflamed part should be bathed in a weak solution of boracic acid and greased with vaseline to effect a speedy healing of the sore. The most common forms of blindness closely follow or accompany other diseases. When due to roup a swelling among the tissues of the eye, caused by the hardening of the mucous secretion of the head and eyes, destroys the sight. When roup has progressed to this stage, there is little profit in treating it. There is also an eye worm or parasite which infects poultry, causing inflammation of the eye and occasional blindness. This parasite can be removed only by surgical means. The wound should be bathed with a weak solution of boracic acid and kept greased with vaseline until healed.

BLACK HEAD

Black head is adisease common and fatal to young turkeys and quite serious among young chickens. It is usually recognized in the turkeys by the stunted growth and the emaciated condition of the body. Internal examination usually discloses large, discoloured diseased areas on the liver and greatly enlarged caeca (blind intestines). If recognized in time and careful ,sanitary conditions are provided in brooding and feeding, many of the affected chicks can be saved. Sour skim-milk has been found quite effective in checking the disease. After one experience with the disease, it will be readily conceded that the preventive method is most satisfactory.

CHOLERA.

It is a common error for the amateur poultryman to think that every disease among his fowls, which manifests itself by a looseness of the bowels, a yellowish discharge and a pale or yellow colour about the face and head is cholera. As a matter of fact, this disease is common only in the warm climates and is rare elsewhere. It is communicable and very destructive. Fowls often die, within a few days after being exposed to the disease, even before they are suspected of being stricken. In other cases it takes on a chronic form. It requires a bacteriological examination definitely to recognize the disease. Scientists have failed to find a cure for it. Thorough disinfection of the entire plant and a rigid separation of exposed from the non-exposed flock should be practised.

That the poultrykeeper should have a regular and systematic way in which to feed, water and cleanse his stock would be mere folly to deny, and to leave these, his duties, to unsuitable and irregular hours would only be courting disaster in a well-known form. Yet, in the management of poultry we do see some curious things, and while on the one hand there are some who spend all their time in practising and furthering all these hundred and one details which are so essential to the welfare of their stock, so, on the other, we have those who, rather than spend (in their estimation) an hour too much toward the betterment of their flock, would rather wile away such useful time in dreaming of the fabulous profits to be made out of poultry-keeping. Estas Vere! So it is, and so it will be, until the latter can see the result of his fatuities peeping out, as it were, from amongst the clouds, only to be scoffed and sneered at by a crowd of spectators. The management of poultry is by no means easy work and can only be brought to a successful issue by constant grit and dogged determination.

To be successful, it is important that all who embark upon such a venture should be fully acquainted with those factors which go hand in hand toward making the concern prosperous. Cleanliness is one of those important factors which every poultry-keeper should try to keep in touch with and practice to the best of his or her ability; since it is only by such a method one can look forward to see healthy and profitable stock. Every morning it should be one of the first items in the poultry-keeper's programme to remove all the droppings which have accumulated during the night; and it is surprising how much excrement a pen of six fowls, or even a batch of young chickens can produce in a single night's repose. Such work should never be neglected, not even for a single day, for when one gets accustomed in doing such work with regularity, it invariably becomes habitual.

When the droppings are allowed to accumulate for days together the atmosphere becomes anything but pleasant, and it is, moreover, detrimental to the health of the unlucky inmates. How is it possible to keep a house sufficiently ventilated unless the floors and dropping boards are kept free from the accumulation of such filth? No wonder we have some people unable to fathom the mysteries of their unhealthy stock. No

Had Boils On Neck and Arms.

Had Them Lanced But, Got No Relief Until He Used

Burdock Blood Bitters.

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and for you to get rid of them it is absolutely necessary to put the blood into good condition. For this purpose there is no remedy that can compare with Burdock Blood Bitters. This preparation has been on the market for about 35 years, and has a reputation unequalled by any other for the making of pure, rich, red blood. Mr. H. J. Batten, Stratford, Ont., writes:—"I have been troubled for several weeks with boils on my neck and arms. I had them lanced by the doctor, but as soon as one went others came. I tried all kinds of so called remedies, but could get no relief till I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I am pleased to say I am now quite free from those most painful things, and feel much better in every respect.

"My boy, of nine years, had a rash come over his back and legs, so we gave him a few doses and now he is all right again."

Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

FIRST ARITHMETIC EVER PRINTED

MR. GEORGE A. PLIMPTON'S hobby takes the form of works on calculation, and in this field his collection is the most complete ever gathered De Morgan was able to examine in the British Museum and elsewhere fewer than 100 arithmetics before 1601, including all editions. Mr Plimpton has more than 300. Of all the arithmetics known to have been printed in the sixteenth century and to have reached two or more editions, Mr. Plimpton's library lacks fewer than twenty-five. The first Latin translation of Euclid in manuscript was presented to Pope Urban IV (1261-1264). This Mr. Plimpton possesses. He owns the largest collection of horn books in the world—these books first put into the possession of children in the infancy of reading. The British Museum contains three. Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan owns one. Mr Plimpton confesses to twenty! The largest collection of A B C books and primers in the world is another of his possessions. One of these books goes back to Chaucer's time. Pages from two of his ABC primers are shown above.

WE hadn't been expecting it when it burst upon us refulgent and unafraid—the last up to the minute word in this up to the minute age of clubs—the Hobby Club.

Because people with hobbies have always been—unusual? Perhaps! Queer? Possibly! It is difficult to explain. The man with the hobby is like the man with the hoe—he has always been suspected.

Nice, bored, unhobbyized humanity thinks him hardly respectable. It made rules for him, of which the first is that he mustn't talk about it before company.

The man with the hobby bore this for centuries. He toiled and spent money

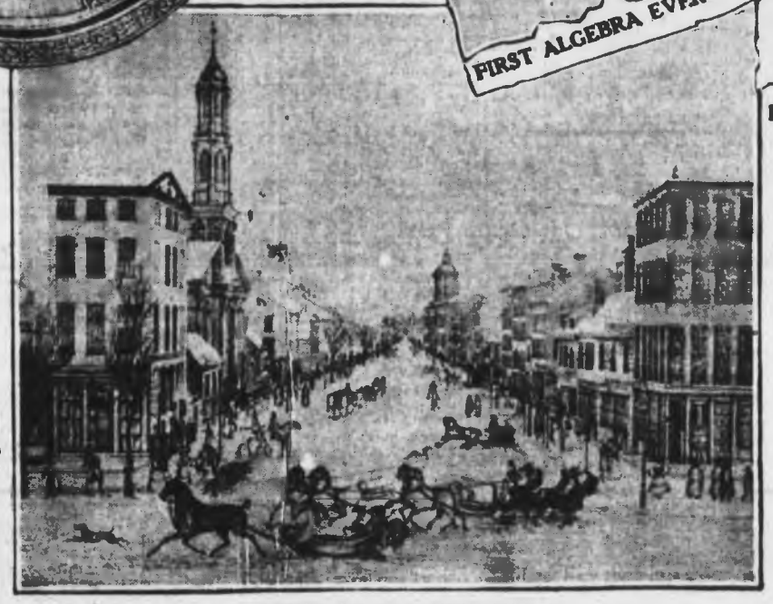
MR. PHOENIX INGRAHAM'S TREASURE

"THE specialization required," says Mr. Phoenix Ingraham, "gives one man with a hobby not only a grasp of one subject, but a broader culture. My own hobby is the collection of first editions, notably of Thackeray and Stevenson. The sketch above is a reproduction of an original drawing in my possession by Samuel Lover, of Thackeray"



PRINT OF OLD NEW YORK

IF you can persuade Mr John D. Crimmins, bibliophile, Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory the Great by appointment of Pope Leo XIII., in 1901, director in many financial institutions and real estate dealer, to talk of early prints of old New York, you are sure to be entertained. For Mr. Crimmins is probably better acquainted with Father Knickerbocker's intimate early history than is any one else living. He has vivid personal recollections of the city for more than fifty years. In his house is a large room filled with early rare books and prints describing New York in the making. He has many rare historical works relating to the Irish clans and to the Gaelic people, and many of these works are printed in Gaelic. Mr Crimmins selected the print above as the most interesting one in his collection.

SUN DIALS.

MR. JOHN C. TOMLINSON, SR., eminent lawyer, collects sun dials, two of which are photographically presented above. One was constructed in 1575 by Prince Strozzi, who was one of the greatest metal workers that ever lived. The other is by Habermehl. Sun dials were known to the Romans, possibly to the Egyptians. Some sun dials are most ingenious. On the elaborate face of one is carved a complete map of the world. Another sun dial fires off a cannon at two o'clock. Some were as small as watches, and in the American Revolution officers used them in preference to watches.

FIRST FOLIO OF SHAKESPEARE

MR DARWIN P KINGSLEY, president of the New York Life Insurance Company, delights in insurance and Shakesperiana, Shakesperiana being his hobby. He owns the first folio of Shakespeare pictured above. First folios, he explains, are worth anything from $5,000 to $20,000. Mr. Kingsley has been sixteen years qualifying for the Hobby Club. He unearthed his folio, illustrated above, at Quaritch's, London, in 1895.

TITLE PAGE OF DEFOE

PROFESSOR WILLIAM P TRENT'S hobby is Defoe. His book upon Defoe is the most complete and accurate one written. A title page from the "gem" of his collection is printed above, and is particularly valuable from the fact of the practical impossibility of any one knowing whether the work may be attributed to Defoe or not. From such delightful doubts your collector extracts the subtlest charms of existence. Professor Trent learned first of his treasured volume in some old list. "If there be another" he was informed, "it will probably be in some library in the moon" Later, in one triumphant moment, he pounced upon his own copy for which he paid a thrillingly small sum The second copy in existence!

LADY PETRE, BY GAINSBOROUGH.

MR. HENRY E. HUNTINGTON, ranking perhaps next to Mr Morgan in the magnitude of his collections, modestly disclaims distinction as a collector "Of course I have an interest in books and pictures," said he, "more particularly, perhaps, in books. But my chiefest treasure? Each collector's greatest treasure is his last treasure, whether it cost fifty cents or $50,000" So it is that his newly acquired Gainsborough has its place as Mr Huntington's particular gem.

CUSTER'S INVOLUNTARY RIDE

MR WILLIAM M SCHNITZER who originated the idea of the Hobby Club possesses the book hobby largely developed, and also a hobby for civil war relics He owns the original drawings of James G Taylor with original manuscript description of Sheridan's campaign in the Shenandoah

SUN DIALS

AUTOGRAPH LETTER OF CHARLES I.

THIS is the most enrapturing possession of Mr. Adrian H. Joline, attorney, who administers the affairs of street railroad companies in his lighter moments. His hobby is autograph collecting. He will proffer a magnifying glass, that you may read the MSS. of a novel by Charlotte Bronte. He prizes a collection of the autographs of Supreme Court justices. A signature by the least known of these officials cost him more than all the rest put together. He will manifest indignation if you mention writing to celebrities for autographs. "No real autograph collector ever does that," he says, "except in the case of a personal friend. It is a capital offence. Your real collector worries for autographs, searches for them and buys them." And Mr. Joline ought to know He has collected for twenty-three years, has 10,000 valuable autographs and wants more.

and pursued interesting investigations and talked in whispers about it all. Even captains of industry (who are confirmed hobby hunters) looked apologetic when they mentioned that which humanized them and [illegible] the high prices of things to eat. This was the [illegible] age.

Then came reform; there arose a prophet who discovered a truth. "Why should we shrink and disguise the generous juices of our knowledge?" asked he in effect. "Isn't the man with the hobby who's interesting, it's likely, to be the other one.

Why should the hobbyist be [illegible] Why shouldn't he hold up his head? Why shouldn't he speak the words which are in his heart and find sympathetic listeners? Why shouldn't he form a club and go the limit?"

This intelligent interrogative person was Mr William M Schnitzer, broker and book collector—a hobbyist and proud of it. No sooner said than done It was the easiest thing in the world to find other hobbyists—the downtrodden are numerous.

Judge Victor J. Dowling and Mr John C. Tomlinson, Sr., and there was nothing to it, as one says. Both gentlemen had felt that way themselves.

"A chop," said they—"a bite to eat and an opportunity to talk about our hobbies—a Hobby Club, in fact—the very thing"

No the good word was spread and—enter, with some resplendence, the Hobby Club, possessor of an initiatory roll of twenty-five, but willing to grow; a club which meets once a month to assimilate food and to discuss hobbies: a club of millionnaires and of ordinary citizens.

"The idea," said Mr. Schnitzer, its originative genius, "was one of those simple, logical things which, through some accident, hadn't occurred to somebody before. A Hobby Club! Could anything be more obvious? A club in which enthusiastic people can meet and discuss the interests that have made them enthusiastic?

"It has always been supposed," continued Mr. Schnitzer, "that a man with a hobby is a man with a capacity to bore others. The fact is the man with the hobby is the most interesting man on earth. At once the most enthusiastic man and the best informed. He has a wealth of curious and special information which leads to all sources of human interest. To be uninterested in all such is to admit that you are an intellectual [illegible]; that you are mentally back in the protoplasm stage."

"If you possess a hobby for books, by pursuing it you come to know the craft of bookbinding You might almost bind a book yourself after a while. You become familiar with the work of great [illegible] and perhaps learn more about the art than many a student in an art school. If you know coins you know more effective history than that which you learn at school. You better understand the evolution of form in art. You learn where the Romans got their gold and silver, and of the methods of their production. If you talk with some collector of sun dials you come by many curious and interesting facts. How many people know that our forefathers carried sun dials in place of watches?"

"Even the average person who admires furniture views it merely as collections of beautiful sticks. How many persons realize the history behind each form of furniture? Yet, the most vivid history that has been written is depicted in furniture and in china. To learn about the blue of some particular china you go back to legendary Egyptian history, you see old King Mene shaking his head at some attempt of the royal potter, and suddenly, while a spot of blue showed unexpectedly behind a cloud, see him pointing up. 'There, that is the blue I want.' Look at Empire furniture with the eye of the hobbyist and you see more than sticks and carving You understand how Napoleon combined the Egyptian and the Roman styles and evolved Empire furniture

"If you possess the spirit of a hobby at everything about you has a meaning of its own. You are an approachable, humanized individual.

"No," continued the creative Mr. Schnitzer, "the hobbyist never [illegible] other than a bore. The hobbyist talks, and is proud of it; he has something to say. He is not bad company, even to himself. Alone he is never lonely As for the Hobby Club, it is a club for both rich and poor. There is but one broad, democratic highway to it: the possession of a hobby."

As for the humanizing elements of hobbyism, the reporter must confess himself impressed, if the amiability of its members be any indication and reporters are experienced in such matters

The hobbiest of the members' hobbies were cheerfully indicated by those members and as cheerfully described by them. To hear Mr Crimmins speak of old prints, and Mr. Tomlinson elaborate upon sundials, and Mr. Plimpton demonstrate what is indicated by the possession of the first arithmetic book ever printed were humanizing incidents to a man accustomed to the enervating influences of the word "no." To hear Mr Kingsley (who is usually expansive as well, anything very inexpansive) waxing eloquent upon the merits of the Bacon and Shakespeare controversy is a liberal education in the arts of humanization.

Altogether the Hobby Club is bound to be a success if each member is willing to listen to the other's hobby Anyhow, enter the Hobby Club.

LACK OF EXERCISE

Brings on Troubles which are Best Corrected by Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills

Sedentary Habits Develop Constipation

Man was intended to live an active, outdoor life, and his digestive system was modelled accordingly. Indoor work with hands or head, long hours sitting or standing still, especially in air that's none too good, slow down the healthy activities of stomach, liver, kidneys and the millions of tiny skin glands.

Constipation, headaches, indigestion, biliousness, rheumatism and similar troubles follow.

Then the worth of that good old reliable family medicine, Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, is appreciated. Though it has been in use for over half a century, modern science has not been able to devise a safer or better cleanser for the whole system.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are largely vegetable in composition, free from any harmful drug, and mild yet most effective in their action. They are "Mother's standby" in hundreds of homes because they nip in the bud so many of the common ailments.

POULTRY WORLD

wonder the one and same persons are at a loss to account for such impaired vitality and diminished fertility, which occurs with such persistency. Yes, and I say that unless these things are given a sufficient amount of consideration such will inevitably occur, and to the most uninitiated become still more mysterious.

POULTRY FOR BEGINNERS

Good Profits May be Made by Giving Fowls Proper Care.

The farmer has plenty of room on his farm for poultry, and the land so devoted will return as large, if not larger, profits than will an equal area planted to a crop, or used for other stock. Cheap houses can be built to shelter a hundred or more fowls, which will bring in the cash in the winter season, by producing eggs, thus largely aiding him to purchase many necessaries while waiting for his crops to grow. There is but little risk of loss in keeping hens if they receive only part of the attention bestowed on animals, and a very large percentage upon the cost is the certain return that may be realized by a farmer on a small or large scale, where the business is conducted properly. There is more profit in raising choice poultry and making a specialty of eggs, considering the cost and outlay, and which can be had annually than from many other sources, not excepting cows, pigs, or sheep, and yet the animals are fed and cared for at an expenditure for labour that would be considered appalling if bestowed on the hens, though the hens pay cash dividend daily for all they receive. Farmers would do well to look well into this matter, and now is the time to consider it. Good fowls of any of the improved breeds may now be had at a very reasonable price, and we call the attention of those who have the facilities for keeping fowls, of taking advantage of their opportunities.

WHAT IS FAKING?

"Faking is removing, or attempting to remove foreign colour in face or ear lobes when it is a disqualification; removing one or more side sprigs, or trimming a comb in any manner, except the dubbing of games; artificial colouring of any feather; splicing feathers; injury to plumage of any fowl entered by another exhibitor; plugging up holes on legs of smooth-legged varieties where feathers or stubs disqualify; staining of legs; in fact, any self-evident attempt on the part of an exhibitor to deceive the judge and thus obtain an unfair advantage in competition."

We also quote from the section, "Instructions to Judges," as it appears in The Standard of Perfection —which book is law in the show room —as follows:

"Faking of any description shall debar from competition specimens so treated; also every other bird entered by the exhibitor showing the faked specimen or specimens. (See Glossary for what is meant in this connection by faking.)"

It was with the intention of protecting the honest breeder and exhibitor that the above definition of faking was framed and the foregoing rule was adopted.

The moral idea of The Standard definition of faking is found in the words: "Any self-evident attempt on the part of an exhibitor to deceive the judge and thus obtain an unfair advantage in competition." These words might just as well have read, "Any self-evident attempt on the part of an exhibitor to deceive the judge and thus obtain possession of valuable property that does not belong to him"—property that he will keep, take home with him and forever withhold from the man or woman to whom it does rightfully belong.

It isn't a question, for example, of whether or not the exhibitor believes that "removing one or more side sprigs" should constitute the act of faking. This is one of the rules of the game—one of the rules under which he has agreed to compete, fairly and honourably. If a man isn't willing to conform to this rule at poultry shows where The Standard of Perfection is the guide and law, it is his privilege to decline to enter the birds. The place for him to object to the law or to one or more of the rules is before the law-making and rule-adopting body. To claim, or to believe, that a law or a rule is not just or advisable cannot be offered as a sufficient excuse for slyly resorting to deception and fraud, with the well defined intention of obtaining possession of something of value which, under the law and the rules, could not rightfully be secured. Such a claim cannot be set up afterward as justifying a dishonest, dishonourable and unsportsmanlike act. The competition—please bear in mind—is not in the rascally art of "faking," but is meant to be a comparison of actual values, the awards to be based on genuine merit.

VARIED USES OF HEN FRUIT

The average person calling for his two "medium boiled" never realises the wide use of the egg not alone in the culinary arts, but also in the sick room. A recent writer recounts some of its many uses as follows:

A raw egg swallowed at once when a fishbone is caught in the throat beyond the reach of the finger will dislodge the bone and carry it down. The white of a raw egg turned over a burn or scald is most soothing and cooling. It can be applied quickly and will prevent inflammation, besides relieving the stinging pain. A mustard plaster made with the white of an egg will not leave a blister. The white skin that lines the shell of an egg is a useful application for a boil. The white of an egg beaten with loaf sugar and lemon relieves hoarseness—a teaspoonful taken every hour. An egg added to the morning cup of coffee makes a good tonic. A raw egg with the yolk unbroken, taken in a glass of the best sherry wine, is beneficial for convalescents. An excellent remedy for bowel troubles is partly-beaten raw egg taken at one swallow. It is healing to the inflamed stomach and intestines and will relieve the feeling of distress. Four eggs taken in this manner in 24 hours will form the best kind of nourishment as well as medicine. The white of a raw egg is the most satisfactory of pastes. Papers intended to be put over tumblers of jelly and jam will hold very securely and be airtight if dipped in the white of an egg. A raw egg is one of the most nutritious of foods and may be taken very easily if the yolk is not broken.

In addition to its medicinal and culinary values, the egg also finds wide usage in the arts and crafts. In the light of these facts is it any wonder that the poultry industry occupies first place in our agricultural wealth?

MAKES HAIR GROW

McDermid and Jury, druggists, have an invigorator that will grow hair or money back.

The time to take care of your hair is when you have hair to take care of.

If your hair is getting thin, gradually falling out, it cannot be long before the spot appears.

The greatest remedy to stop the hair from falling is SALVIA, the Great American Hair Grower, first discovered in England. SALVIA furnishes nourishment to the hair roots and acts so quickly that people are amazed.

And remember, it destroys the Dandruff germ, the little pest that saps the life that should go to the hair from the roots.

SALVIA is sold by McDermid and Jury under a positive guarantee to cure Dandruff, stop Falling Hair and Itching Scalp in ten days, or money back. A large bottle costs 50c. The word "SALVIA" (Latin for sage) is on every bottle. Also sold at Payne's drug store.

REAL STRENGTH OF MILK COMMONLY FED TO HOGS

'Seldom is an address on an essentially technical subject given at a convention in as plain and understandable form as that delivered on "What is Milk?" by Professor R. Harcourt before the members of the Western Ontario Dairymen's Association in Ingersoll last week. Milk, though one of the commonest of human foods, provides almost illimitable study to the scientist and is still the subject of much experimental work in the chemical profession. Professor Harcourt was able to analyze it and describe the comparative value of every constituent with the greatest ease, and in a manner that held the attention of his hearers. He even aroused discussion among some of the more thoughtful, and the whole affair was productive of great good. There is a real joy in becoming well acquainted with the thing you are handling every day of your life.

Milk is Not Expensive.

"Starting with the fact we are most familiar with, we may say milk is a food," said Prof. Harcourt. "It occupies an almost unique position among animal foods, for it contains in itself representatives of all three nutritive constituents, namely, protein, carbohydrates, and fat. It is palatable, easily digested, and highly nutritious. It is not only the natural food of infants, but a most important food for children and adults. It is also an indispensable food in many, if not most, cases of disease where nutrition is impaired. While all this can be said about milk, it is not an expensive food. Too often it is regarded as a luxury to be used only as a condiment with tea, coffee, fruit, and as an adjunct in cooking when, as a matter of fact, a given amount of money spent on milk at eight or even ten cents a quart will furnish more flesh-forming materials and will produce more energy than if expended on meats, eggs, etc.

Bread and Milk Perfect Food

"Naturally milk is not as cheap as the cereals or vegetable foods in general, for these contain a large amount of carbohydrates, which are our cheapest energy-producers. Moreover, bread and milk, or oatmeal and milk, form about as complete a food as can well be devised. Consequently, when we put these two foods together we not only have a palatable, nutritious diet, but an inexpensive one.

"Milk takes up odours good or bad. It has a mild and decided odour of its own and is not improved by absorbing that of other materials. Milk is also a very fine media for the growth of bacteria, and coupled with this is the fact that it is peculiarly liable to contamination. Consequently it is evident that the greatest care should be exercised to exclude all forms of dirt, and that the temperature of the milk be lowered as quickly as possible.

Bacteria in Milk

"Suitable temperature and a moist condition are two essentials for rapid development of bacterial life. These are naturally supplied in fresh-drawn milk, and as there is an abundance of suitable food, the organisms getting into the food multiply plentifully. These organisms may be acid-forming and objectionable, though decidedly useful in cheese and butter making, or they may be the living germs of some of our most dreaded diseases.

"Very naturally we expect to find variations in composition in the milk from different cows, but all milk contains water, protein, sugar, fat, and an incombustible ash material. Water forms by far the largest proportion of the milk and serves to hold some of the constituents in solution and some in suspension. It is because milk solids are either in solution or in a finely divided suspended condition that milk is in liquid form. A turnip contains much more water, and is a solid, bulky substance. It is because the solids in a turnip are indissoluble that it remains a solid."

"Lucky Pigs."

Professor Harcourt proceeded to show the value of the different forms of protein, of the sugar, fat and ash material. The main protein is casein, which is closely related to albumen. It is the substance that builds up bone and muscle, while fat tends to fatten one. The percentage of casein is a great deal higher in skim milk, since in separating the major portion of the fat is lost. For infants and growing people who require bone and muscle building food, skim milk appears to be of greater value. A child inclined to be fat would do well to drink only skim milk. And this point caused many to think of the good fortune of the majority of pigs raised in this Province. They get the skim milk, or the greatest strength building form of milk, while the fatty constituents are consumed by man.

KITCHEN LORE

Delicious Preserves.

Wash the peel of one lemon and one orange, cook until tender, turn off the water, chop the peel and add to four pounds of cored pears chopped through the meat mincer, three pounds of sugar, the juice of three lemons, one can of shredded pineapples, one-half pound of seeded raisins, one large orange and one cupful of water—two of water if the pears are not juicy. Cook several hours very slowly. About a half hour before removing from the fire add one pound of chopped meat nuts. This will keep well in a stone jar.

Lemon and Melon Preserves.

Here is a recipe recommended by a well-known cook. Take a ripe melon weighing about five pounds, pare it. Cut it into small pieces. Grate the rind of four lemons, thinly slice the lemons, and add these to the cut up melon. Put to them three pounds of preserving sugar and gently cook for An Economical Savoury.

Take pieces of stale bread—crusts will do—pour over them cold water, and leave to soak for half an hour. Then squeeze dry, and place in a bowl. Add two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley and one of chopped suet, salt and pepper to taste, and beat all well together with a fork. Grease and line a baking tin with mixture. Now place in any cold meat you have, cut in suitable pieces. Cover with the rest of the mixture, place a few bits of dripping on the top, and bake till slightly browned. Then put half a cupful of water on the mixture, cover with a plate, and return to the oven to cook slowly for an hour. A good, cheap brown gravy for the above can be made with a tablespoonful of flour or barley and about half a pint of cold water. Stir slowly, to prevent lumps, and boil for a minute. This dish is always a favourite with boys and girls.

Doan's Kidney Pills

Are the Best Remedy In The World FOR BACKACHE.

Many people fail to understand the significance of a lame, weak, sore or aching back.

You overtax the kidneys—give them more work than they can possibly do—then they cry out in protest through the pain in the back.

Backache is simply kidneyache and the best remedy in the world for backache and all kidney troubles is Doan's Kidney Pills.

We have thousands of testimonials from all quarters of the globe to prove this. Here is one from a party who used them in England, but who is now a resident of Canada.

Mr. P. R. Glanville, Wycliffe, B.C., writes:—"When living in the 'Old Country,' three years ago, I suffered severely from pains in the back, and had to give up work. The pain was so bad that when I stooped down to pick anything up, I felt my back must break. I tried all sorts of remedies and several doctors, but all to no purpose. One day I read of Doan's Kidney Pills, and thought I might as well try them, and to my surprise, before I was half through one box the backache had entirely disappeared, and it has not caused me any trouble since. I always keep "Doan's" in the house and shall always recommend them to all sufferers."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Priest's Marriage Assailed.

Montreal, Jan. 26.—The question whether a sacredotal vow of chastity stands as that taken by members of the Roman Catholic priesthood constitutes, as far as the Quebec civil law is concerned, an impediment to marriage is one which was referred for resolution before the judge of merits as a result of a ruling handed down by Mr. Justice Beaudin in the Chiniquy-Begin case yesterday.

In this case the plaintiff, the wife of Prof. Morin of McGill, and daughter of the late Charles Chiniquy, a Roman Catholic priest, who deserted the church and devoted the remainder of his life to a tirade upon his former faith, is suing the editor of a local Catholic journal for $10,000 damages owing to the publication of an article which questioned the validity of the marriage of Charles Chiniquy on the ground of his vow of chastity on joining the priesthood, and thus incidentally reflected on the plaintiff, his daughter.

The defendant filed a defence to the plaintiff's claims and yesterday afternoon the plaintiff sought an inscription in law to have the defence set aside as inadequate and ill-founded. The presiding justice thereupon ordered that the discussion of the merits of the respective pleas entered be thrown over to the judge of merits for judicial pronouncement, the editor claiming that under the Quebec civil law, the marriage of the late Charles Chiniquy must be considered invalid.

Again the Poor Censor.

London, Jan. 26.—Indignation is expressed in dramatic and literary circles at the refusal of the Lord Chamberlain to allow the production of "The Coronation," a play by Christopher St John and Charles Thursby.

The one-act drama represents the King on his way to the coronation ceremony, refusing to proceed until the burden of armaments is removed from the people. He takes the ground that his oath to see that the poor are not oppressed demands that he should prevent the spending of huge sums for armaments, and forces an autocratic Cabinet of three to stop expenditure.

The piece will be presented privately at the Savoy Theatre next Sunday.

Respected His Wishes.

Friend—Why do you get married so soon after the death of your husband? Widow—My dear, if there was any one thing that my poor dead and gone husband insisted upon, in season and out, it was that I should never put off till tomorrow what I could do today.

Disorders in Brazil.

Rio Janeiro, Jan. 26.—The political struggle has broken out afresh at Bahia, to which port the Federal Government two weeks ago was compelled to despatch a warship to quell the disturbances. There has been renewed violence throughout the city and considerable fighting in the streets. The newspapers are opposing the candidacy of Dr. J. J. Seabra, the Minister of Public Works, for the governorship of the state. Residences have been burned and looted and trade is at a standstill.

A similar state of affairs is reported at Fortaleza, capital of the State of Ceara, and the situation is considered grave.

M.P.'s Resent Criticism.

Ottawa, Jan. 26.—Some of the criticism of the Toronto press on the vote on the ne temere question is not taken with very good grace by some of the members on both sides of the Commons.

It is quite probable that this phase of the matter will be taken up on the floor of Parliament on the ground that there has been misrepresentation in some of the statements.

Revolutionaries Murdered.

Mukden, Manchuria, Jan. 26.—A series of assassinations of revolutionaries occurred here on Tuesday.

Chang-Yang, one of the rebel leaders, was murdered on that day, and simultaneously a mob of assassins attacked his residence, where they killed his brother and his secretary.

A number of other murders were committed on the same evening.

Calm After Storm.

Rome, Jan. 26.—The Franco-Italian incident, brought about by the seizure of Turkish doctors and nurses from the French steamer Manouba by Italian warships, is practically closed.

The only question now being discussed is that of finding a method by which the Turkish prisoners can be released or delivered to the French authorities.

Railway Service Poor.

Woodstock, Jan. 26—The Woodstock Board of Trade decided last night to enlist the support of other western Ontario towns and cities to impress upon the Grand Trunk Railroad and the Canadians Pacific Railroad the need of an improved train service.

At the present time there is no passenger service for points west of London between the hours of 10.27 a.m. and 7.15 p.m. out of Stratford on the Grand Trunk Railroad, and between 10.45 a.m. and 7 p.m. on the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

What is wanted is a train passing through Woodstock at about 2 p.m., making connection at London for points west.

Trusts to Control Canal.

Washington, Jan. 26.—The ultimate control of all shipping through the Panama Canal by the foreign "shipping trust" with chief benefit to big American shippers, such as the U. S. Steel Corporation, would result from the admission of foreign ships to the American coastwise trade, according to President George S. Dearborn of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., who testified yesterday before the House committee on interstate commerce.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Corn to-day sold at the highest point of the season for deferred futures and nearly so for May. Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Jan. 26.—Cables came easier again to-day on Manitoba spring wheat and bids were reduced 1¼d to 2d per quarter, owing to the more favorable advices from the Argentine. DEMANDS ON PREMIER

Sir James Whitney Will Have a Chance to Indulge in Discussion on the Ne Temere Decree

DEPUTATION COMING

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, JAN. 26.—The fact that the Dominion Government has dealt with the "Ne Temere" decree will not deter the members of the Evangelical Alliance from putting it up to Sir James Whitney, Premier of Ontario, and Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General. When all the petitions which are pouring in from every part of the province have arrived they purpose swooping down on Sir James and demanding that he handle the matter without gloves. They purpose going one better than the Dominion Government and will ask that a concrete case be taken to the Privy Council at once for a decision. This will mean a judgment directly on the powers of the Ne Temere decree instead of finding out what the Dominion government authority is in dealing with laws and decrees laid down by some religious sect.

The officials of the alliance are not all satisfied with the action of the Dominion government in the matter. They have called a meeting for to-morrow at which the question will be discussed and there is a possibility that public meetings will be held throughout the province for the purpose of discussing the question before the demand is made on the provincial government.

TAKE CHANCES WHEN YOU MARRY

Special Wire to The Examiner.

BOSTON, MASS., JAN. 26.—On the ground that people marrying, take chances of "false teeth, imported hair and cork legs," the court here, has dismissed the suit of a young husband, who wanted the annulment of his marriage because his wife concealed from him a certain deformity till after the ceremony.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

..... Proposed by Congressman .....

To give every man and woman over 60 years old a pension from the United States treasury, is the surprising proposal of a congressman.

What most old people need is help in keeping up strength and vigour.

Thousands of them know that the greatest help they can get is our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil, called Vinol.

Mrs. Mary Ivey of Columbus, Ga., says: "If people only knew you would be unable to supply the demand. I never took anything before that did me so much good as Vinol has done. It is the finest tonic and strength creator I ever used in my life."

Vinol renews the energy and strength of old people because it enriches their thinned blood and improves their appetite and digestion, and is also so pleasant to take that they like to use it. We guarantee Vinol to give perfect satisfaction and pay back your money, if it does not.

GARRISON OFFICERS PLAY WAR GAME

Reds and Blues Have an Interesting If Not Bloody Battle at Armouries---Divisional Officers Were Here to Act as Umpires---Was of Great Benefit.

For the past couple of days the officers of the Peterborough Garrison have been playing at war under the direction of Col. Benson, Officer Commanding 3rd Divison, and Maj. Horden, C. S. O., 3rd Division. The war game is worked out on maps, the opposing forces being in different rooms with the umpires in a third room. A scheme is set by the Chief Umpire, and the officers commanding the opposing forces, which in this case were the Reds and Blues, issue their orders accordingly. Markers representing troops are placed on the maps, those of both sides being on the map in the umpires room. These markers are moved to correspond with the movement of the troops until finally the operations are concluded. The orders for each move are issued by the officers concerned in reference to their own units. In the local game the scene of the action was in Oxfordshire and Warwickshire, England, the key of the position in the scheme being within a mile of Banbury Cross.

The umpire expressed the opinion that the officers commanding both forces had appreciated the situation and that their plans of operations were entirely sound.

The Blue forces were in command of Lt.-Col. E. B. Clegg, while Major Geo. W. Bennett was at the head of the Reds, with senior officers commanding the cavalry and artillery in each case.

The tactical situations were a very interesting study to the officers and the experience gained in writing orders on the field was new and will be of great benefit.

The opposing forces met in an attack by the Blues on the Reds, who held the objective point, but it was impossible to say which force won out the disposition of both forces being well planned.

The officers of the garrison are all keen over the game and are anxious to have another one as soon as the Divisional officers can make it convenient.

English maps were used in this case, as they were available on a much larger scale than the Canadian maps.

PROGRESS IS THE WATCHWORD OF ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH FOR YEAR NINETEEN AND TWELVE

Annual Meeting Held Last Evening Shows Encouraging Results---May Purchase Pipe Organ

The annual meeting of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was held last night, in the Sunday School room. There was a large and representative gathering of members, and adherents. Mr. E. B. Fowler occupied the chair. Reports were received from the various committees, and organizations, all of which showed very encouraging results.

Mr. Andrew McFarlane in presenting the Managers' report, said, that it showed a better result than last year, of over $250, and added that it was the desire of the Board of Managers that the current expense be met by church subscriptions and collections. He concluded by hoping that this suggestion would meet with the approval of the congregation, and that next year's report would be balanced in this manner.

A Committee was appointed to confer with the Board of Managers and act together as regards the question of repairing the organ, or the purchase of a new one.

The salary of the pastor, Rev. Jas. Rollins, was increased by $200 per year.

Mr. John McClelland was elected to represent St. Andrew's, on the Charity Board, and Mrs. Dr. F. L. Robinson received a similar position on the Protestant Home Board.

Mr. Harstone and Mr. McFarland were reelected to the Board of Managers. Mr. McFarlane has been a member of the Board for upwards of thirty-five years.

Mr. W. H. Waram and Mr. Thornton were elected auditors for all organizations, other than the Secretary's books.

Mr. E. B. Fowler and Mr. Chisholm were elected auditors for the Secretary's books.

At the conclusion of the meeting a hearty vote of thanks was extended to the Ladies' Aid, the choir, and the Board of Managers.

HOLDING THE GOVERNMENT TO PRE-ELECTION POLICY

OTTAWA, JAN. 26.—Again the Nationalist-Conservative Cabinet is at sixes and sevens. On the motion to go into supply on the financial estimates in the Commons Hon. Mr. Lemieux rose.

"Has the Minister of Finance made any arrangements," he asked, "for the printing of Dominion notes and stamps in the French language?"

"No," was Hon. Mr. White's monosyllabic reply.

Mr. Lemieux threw up his hands in mock amazement. "What!" he exclaimed; "then it will be necessary for my hon. friend to make terms with his Ministerial colleagues who sit on either side of him (Hon. Messrs. Monk and Pelletier). These gentlemen went hither and thither with public condemnations, crucifying the Right Hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and your humble servant throughout Quebec because these notes and stamps were not printed in the French language. And now, while the whole matter is being reviewed, when a new arrangement is being made by the Government they claim to dominate, the awful evil and injustice they arraigned us for is to be perpetuated. What have these hon. gentlemen been doing in the Cabinet councils? What were the terms made that they sat silent after all their utterances in Quebec?" And Mr. Lemieux shook his head, while the House broke into discomforting laughter.

Mr. White hastened to square matters. "These things will yet have to be considered," said he, "when the arrangements for the plates are passed upon."

And again the Liberals laughed.

LIBERALS IN CAUCUS DECIDE TO CONTINUE AGGRESSIVE POLICY

OTTAWA, JAN. 25.—A largely attended caucus of the Liberals was held here, lasting from 11 until 1.30 o'clock. At the close Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced that there had been a thorough discussion upon organization.

It is understood that the members gave their views of the feeling in the country on great questions as they found it when home during the holidays, and it was unanimously decided to continue the Opposition attack in the Commons along the lines already developed. There is no likelihood of the session going to an undue length, provided the Government shows some expedition in issuing the writ for South Renfrew. Unless the writ is issued promptly, the Government may suddenly find that the Opposition has a way of enforcing its rights, and Government business will probably not advance as rapidly as the Ministry hope for.

A WONDER WORKER

"It heals like magic," is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

MONTERO KILLED

Ex-president of Ecuador is Dragged From Court Room and Riddled with Bullets

HIS BODY BURNED

Special to The Examiner.

GUAYAQUIL, ECUADOR, JAN. 26.—Two months ago acclaimed as a popular patriot, the hero of his country, was last night dragged from the court room, where he was charged with political crimes, riddled with bullets, his head hacked from his shoulders, his body burned in the public streets. Such was the fate of General Pedro Montero, formerly President of this Republic, at the hands of the fickle-minded electors of this city. Last November Montero was proclaimed President, but renounced it in order to lead the government troops against the revolutionists in another part of the province. Slowly but surely the revolutionists pressed Montero back to the very gates of the city, captured him and all his lieutenants and brought them to trial by court martial yesterday. A court martial sentenced him to sixteen years' imprisonment, but the enraged citizens seized him from the authorities and ended his life in the frightful manner aforesaid. The whole country to-day is in an uproar.

PRISONER MUCH IN DEMAND

Man Arrested for Carrying Concealed Weapons on George St. is Wanted Elsewhere

A REMARKABLE RECORD

John Parker, who was arraigned in the Police Court this morning, on a charge of carrying concealed weapons (a revolver) seems to have quite a history. The Chief received a telegram from Ardendale, Ont., from the Constable, Mr. J. E. Hayes, stating that he would come for Parker this afternoon, as he was wanted there on another charge. Parker and a woman named Miss Clancy and a little seven-year-old girl, were taken into custody at the C. P. R. Station yesterday afternoon, at 4.28, when the revolver and two tickets for Manitoba were found on Parker. When Detective Newhall and P. C. Brown accosted them at the station, they claimed to be Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, and were very indignant at such interference on the part of the police. They afterwards admitted their identity, however, and Miss Clancy and the little girl have been sent back to Ardendale to the former's parents, with whom she had been living. Parker is a married man, and it has been learned that he ran away with Miss Clancy, and the pair also the little girl, were making for the West as fast as possible. Parker was remanded at the Police Court this morning, but the charge against him here will likely be disposed of this afternoon, when the Ardendale Officer arrives.

The weapon, for which he gives no excuse for carrying, was a very formidable one, of 32 calibre, Iver Johnston make, with double action device.

Seduction Case.

Antoine Lasieur, who appeared in Police Court, a few days ago, charged with the seduction of little fifteen-year-old, Lilly Allen, of Patterson street, came up before Magistrate Dumble this morning, and was sent up for trial. Considerable evidence was taken in the case, the chief witnesses being the defendant, Mrs. Smith, mother of the girl, and the child, herself. The offense is alleged to have been committed over three months ago.

TO CHECK A COLD

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

No Intention Of Abdicating

Special to The Examiner:

PEKIN, JAN. 26.—An edict has been published stating that the Manchus have no intention of abdicating till after the decision of the National Assembly. The edict refers to Great Britain as a friendly power, apparently with the idea that that nation supports the reigning House in that decision.

STREET CAR EXTENSION WILL BE GONE INTO

Vice-President of the Electric Power Company Announces Receipt of Petition From East City Citizens---Executive Staff Will Report on the Possibility of Extension.

The Examiner has received the following answer in reply to the petition recently sent to the Electric Power Company, in regard to the advisability of extending the street railway system to East City:

The Peterborough Examiner, Limited, Peterborough, Ont.

Peterborough Radial Railway Co., Re Petition from Ashburnham.

Dear Sirs,—We beg to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 17th inst., addressed to the Manager of the Peterborough Street Railway Co., enclosing a petition from the residents and ratepayers of Ward 5, requesting further street railway accommodation in that part of the city.

We beg to advise you that we are asking our Executive Staff to report on the possibility of such an extension. Until the matter has been fully gone into, however, our Board of Directors will not be able to give any decision.

Thanking you for having brought this matter to our attention,

Yours very truly,

BALD HEADS NOT WANTED

Baldness is Too Generally Considered a Sign of Advanced Age.

A bald-headed person does not have an equal chance with one blessed with a healthy head of hair, because baldness is too generally accepted as an indication of age. Many large corporations have established an age limit, and refuse to take men over 35 years of age as new employees.

Probably 65 p.c. of bald-headed people may regain a good head of healthy hair if they will follow our advice and accept our offer. We have a remedy that we positively guarantee to grow hair on any head, unless the roots of the hair are entirely dead, their follicles closed, and the scalp has become glazed, and the We want people to try this remedy at our risk, with the distinct understanding that unless it does exactly what we claim it will, and gives satisfaction in every respect, we shall make no charge for the remedy used during the trial.

We know exactly what we are talking about, and with this offer back of our statements no one should scoff, doubt our word, or hesitate to put our remedy to an actual test.

We want every one in Peterborough who is suffering from any scalp or hair trouble, dandruff, falling hair, or baldness to try our Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. We want them to use it regularly—say until three bottles have been used—and if it does not eradicate dandruff, cleanse and refresh the scalp, tighten the hair in its roots, and grow new hair, we will return every cent paid us for the remedy for the mere asking. There is no formality expected, and we exact no obligations from the user whatever.

We are established right here in Peterborough, and make this offer with a full understanding that our business success entirely depends upon the sort of treatment we accord our customers, and we would not dare make the above offer unless we were positively certain that we could substantiate it in every particular. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

O'BRIEN IS IDENTIFIED

LONDON, ONT., JAN. 26.—Patrick O'Brien, alias Wm. Maloney of Detroit, arrested here in connection with a hold-up upon a street, and charged with shooting Mrs. Mary Fraser, positively identified O'Brien as the man who walked up and pushing a revolver into her face, demanded money. The assailant tore open her coat, wrenched a gold chain and locket from her neck, and then holding her shoulder, pulled the trigger and ran away. The wound is healing nicely.

CAMPAIGN IN SOUTH RENFREW

Special to The Examiner.

RENFREW, ONT., JAN. 26.—Although the writ for the election to the House of Commons from South Renfrew is not yet out, the campaign has already started and promises to be hotter than any during the recent Dominion elections. It is understood that the Conservatives, who are in control of the situation, would permit any one of half a dozen Liberal candidates in by acclamation rather than the Hon. George P. Graham. Dr. Moloney, who will probably be the Conservative nominee, has already started meetings, and Graham will get busy next week, with the help of Rudolphe Lemieux and Jacques Bureau in the French settlement.

A GREAT RECORD

The increase in the sales of "Salada" Tea last year over 1910, amounted to over one million and ninety thousand pounds. This is one twenty-eighth part of the entire tea consumption of the Dominion—and represents only one year's increase in the consumption of this popular tea.

Is Nearing A Crisis

OTTAWA, JAN. 26.—Regarding the Montreal Harbour Board, the situation seems to be rapidly reaching a crisis. The 22 Conservative members from Quebec who signed the Round Robin asking for the dismissal of the Board, will leave for their homes this afternoon, after having served an ultimatum upon the government that action must be taken at once or there will be serious trouble next week. They not only threaten to absent themselves from the house in a body until a decision is reached, but they have warned the government that unless their demand is met they will solidly vote against the government upon the first opportunity when they return.

CHILMAN GETS A YEAR

HAMILTON, ONT., JAN. 26.—J. D. Chilman, who was convicted of receiving stolen property from the Canadian Express Co. after the robbery on September twenty-ninth, was sent to jail for one year this morning by Justice Teetzel.

THE STORY IS DENIED

Archbishop Bruchesi's Secretary Calls the Mail and Empire Report Absolutely and Entirely False

HE WAS ASTONISHED

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, QUE., JAN. 26.—"Absolutely and entirely false" said Archbishop Bruchesi's Secretary this morning, in regard to the Mail and Empire's story that prominent Roman Catholic clergy and laity were starting a movement to persuade the Pope to abolish the Ne Temere decree. His Grace was astonished that any one should send out, or print, such a report.

OTTAWA, ONT., JAN. 26. — The story in Ottawa to-day is that the Mail and Empire Ne Temere despatch this morning was inspired by the fact that Hon. George Perley, Minister without portfolio, is going to Rome shortly. It is understood he will ask his Holiness to give a special dispensation releasing Canada from the Ne Temere decree as was done in the case of some European countries.

Against The Power Scheme

Special to The Examiner:

KINGSTON, ONT., JAN. 26.—The Board of Trade is getting up a campaign with the cities and towns along the St. Lawrence, in the United States and Canada, to stop the exploitation of the river for power purposes, as proposed by Sir Max Aitkins' syndicate. It also reiterates its demand for the immediate deepening of the Welland Canal.

MANGLED BY ENGINE

Examiner Special:

CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. I., JAN 26.—Wm. Ramsay, a well-to-do farmer here, was killed when his horse becoming frightened, at an approaching train, on a level crossing, upset the carter on the tracks, and Ramsay was terribly mangled by the engine.

Band at Street Railway Rin To-Night.

PROTEST ELECTION

Special to The Examiner:

WINDSOR, ONT., JAN. 26.—The Liberals, at the last moment yesterday, filed a protest against the election of Hon. Dr. Reaume, Minister of Public Works, in the Ontario Legislature, on the grounds of bribery and corruption. The official majority is 56.

FOR BURNS---ZAM-BUK

Stops Pain at Once

This is the verdict of all who have tried Zam-Buk. The woman in the home knows best its value. A burn from the stove, from a flat-iron, or a hot pan, is instantly soothed by Zam-Buk. When the little ones fall and cut or scratch themselves, Zam-Buk stops the pain and, incidentally, their crying. The best proof of this is the fact that children who have once had Zam-Buk aplied come for it again.

For more serious burns, too, it is unequalled. Mr. John Johnston, of 734 South Mark Street, Fort William, a moulder in Copp's Foundry, says: "Some time ago I burned the top of my foot severely by dropping some molten iron from a ladle I was carrying. A large hole was burned through my shoe and into the top of my foot. I was taken home, and Zam-Buk was applied to the burn directly. It was surprising what relief this balm afforded. The burn was so deep and so serious that it required careful attention, but Zam-Buk prevented other complications arising, and as it was daily applied, soothed the pains and allayed the inflamation. In the course of two weeks the hole burned in my foot had been quite healed."

Mr. W. B. Gibson, of Belleville, writes: "We have tried Zam-Buk often on cuts and sores, and I think there is nothing that can equal it."

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, blood-poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

FRIDAY, JAN. 26, 1912

TORONTO'S BEAM.

It is a curious thing, but it is true, that Toronto, which is most excited about the regularity of marriage in the Province of Quebec, is the place in Canada where there is more irregularity of marriage than anywhere else. There are, says the Ottawa Free Press, more divorces from Toronto than from all the rest of Canada, and there are more cases of bigamy in Toronto than in all Canada. Some of those who are seeking to foment discord on the marriage question might find better employment nearer home.

BEGIN AT THE WEAK POINT.

The enterprise of the City Council in undertaking consideration of the city acquiring the street railway, is a good sign, shows the energy and public spirit. But without canvassing the merits of the proposal, it is suggested that the city fathers begin with smaller and more pressing matters. As pointed out in the Examiner a few days ago, there is urgent need for improvements in the interests of the travelling public—most of them residents, of Peterborough—at the C. P. R. station, where the station platform accommodation is, thanks to the growth of the city, entirely inadequate. If the Council would undertake this, and at the same time move to have a new station provided for Peterborough, it would meet a pressing demand, and it could then, with better reason, take steps towards better delivery of he travelling public to their homes, or places of business by means of improved street railway accommodation.

JUG HANDLED.

There seems to be something decrepant somewhere when we see a church refusing a pastor the services of a stenographer and the Parliament of Canada, according the privilege to members of parliament. A pastor over a large flock has a claim to help in reducing the time required for correspondence, so that more time may be given by the pastor to works of ministration, and mercy. But the claim of members of parliament for clerical help is not so patent. If the members, as a mass, were not engaged in writing letters—for the most part on private business—they would be going to sleep at their posts, or exploiting high-balls at the high-ball buffet, or, what is, in some cases, worse, concocting time-wasting speeches, costing at the rate of $1000 per hour. Governing powers both lay and ecclesiastical, combine by different ideas of the fitness of things to develop a realization of the jug-handled nature of justice in man-managed matters.

CANADA AND WHEAT.

Canada now ranks fourth amongst the countries supplying Great Britain with wheat. Russia stands first with exports of 23,816,000 cwts. to Great Britain during twelve months. British East Indies came next with 21,079,000, Argentine fourth with 16,264,000, and Canada fourth with 14,056,000. The United States came fifth with 10,541,000. Whatever pride we may take in this showing, the fact remains that we shall always have strong competition in the British market; and, that when our wheat production becomes many times greater than it is now, as it is rapidly doing, we shall have greater difficulty in securing a profitable and easily accessible market. The decreasing wheat production of the United States suggests that there would be, under proper conditions, a profitable market right at our doors. If, as is stated, the western farmers have lost some fourteen million dollars on this year's crop by being practically excluded from the United States market, the failure to obtain enlarged trade relations is something of a calamity, hardly compensated by the opportunity given a party for cutting off a few official heads.

HOME RULE NOT ROME RULE.

That Home Rule, says a contemporary, means Rome Rule, is a cry upon which the enemies of Irish self-government place more dependence than upon any fear of the purely political consequences of Home Rule. It is illogical to thus associate Irish nationalism with clericalism, and there is nothing in Irish history to warrant it. On the contrary, it was a Protestant Irish Parliament that won independence from a Protestant English Parliament at the end of the eighteenth century. Some of the greatest Irish patriots — Grattan, Emmett and Parnell — have been Protestants. The Duke of Norfolk and other leading English Catholics actually issued a manifesto against Home Rule in Gladstone's day on the ground that in a self-governed Ireland there might be an uprising against the Catholic church. Just now the opponents of Home Rule are seeking to make party capital of the Papal decree, "motu proprio," which excommunicates laymen who bring ecclesiastics into the law courts. The Pall Mall Gazette, a Unionist paper, publishes a letter from its Dublin correspondent, in which this passage occurs:

"There is a theory that the revival of the decree at this time of day is due to Cardinal Bourne and Cardinal Logue, who have recently been in Rome, and that they wish to kill Home Rule because neither of them favours that policy. I know nothing about Cardinal Bourne's political opinions, but I do know that Cardinal Logue has all his life preached Home Rule, in and out of season.

"However, there is a general feeling in this country that the church is not enthusiastic on the subject, and that it dreads. The great majority of the Irish Home Rulers, individually, as many of them were Parnellites at the time of the split in 1890; but the church is the church, and the church always has its own policy."

Those who say in one breath, as The Pall Mall Gazette says, that Protestants will suffer from Catholic aggressio nunder Home Rule, and in the next breath represent the Catholic church as opposed to Home Rule, are not safe or sincere advisers. Irish nationalism has its roots in the indestructible qualities of race, and has no more to do with clericalism than has the nationalism of Scotland and Wales. If Irish priests favour Home Rule, it is because they are Irishmen, not priests. It a significant that many of them, and a great proportion of the laity; supported Parnell after his catastrophe, though the hierarchy disowned him.—Brantford Expositor.

A BUNCH OF WHITE FATHERS.

Thus remarks the Brockville Times (Conservative):—

"If Mr. G. P. Graham is as great a man as his Liberal organs claim him to be why all this uproar about an election in South Renfrew where the late Liberal member had a majority of nearly 600? It ought to be easy for a great statesman to win out."

It is not a question of Hon. G. P. Graham's greatness, but a question of every-day-honesty and honour. If Mr Graham's desire to gain South Renfrew in the Commons as the complementary fulfilment of an agreement by which Dr. McGarry, Conservative candidate, was actually allowed election for the Legislature by acclamation, is a sign of weakness and fear of the result, what is the explanation of the anxiety of the Conservatives of the House to exclude Mr. Graham? Is it fear of the troublesome criticism his presence in the House would involve? Why is the government afraid to open South Renfrew for a fight, if fight there is to be? Mr. Graham and the Liberals are really spoiling for a fight, if as things indicate there is to be one. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is wasting breath day by day trying to extract from Mr. Borden the writ for South Renfrew bye-election. "If the Borden government," to adapt the language of the Times, "is as great as its followers claim it to be, why doesn't it "peel" its coat, put up its hands and show fight in South Renfrew? Can't the Borden government make up its mind to do one positive thing except chop off an office holder's heads? If taking the easier way, in one case, in compliance with an explicit understanding is weakness and lack of courage, how describe taking the easier way in direct and flagrant breach of distinct understandings in other cases? Rt. Hon. Mr. Borden gained power, by appeal to the loyalty cry, and was distinctly committed by implication to a loyal attitude toward imperial defence; yet he took the easier way and to avoid a contest, surrendered to the disloyalty element and shelved the naval question. Mr. Borden's craft was wafted into the harbour of office with a bang by the gale raised over the No Temere decree and he was thereby committed to dealing with it in a more drastic and direct and prompt way than his Liberal predecessors. Did Mr. Borden keep the implied promise? No: he took the easier way—got out of the mess without a contest by shelving a troublesome question, instead of facing it boldly Before accusing Hon. G. P. Graham of cowardice, the Times should give some attention to the bunch of white feathers, the Conservative government seems to keep convenient, for frequent display.

Official Figures Of Vote In Late Federal Election

OTTAWA, JAN. 24.—The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to-day issued the official resume of the late Dominion general election. The total vote was 1,307,484, divided as follows

Conservatives	669,577
Liberals	625,096
Labour	1,742
Independents	7,177
Socialist	3,912

The vote of the two chief parties by Provinces was:

Ontario — Conservatives, 269,930; Liberals, 207,078.

Quebec — Conservatives, 159,262; Liberals, 164,274.

Nova Scotia—Conservatives, 55,209; Liberals, 57,462.

New Brunswick — Conservatives, 38,880; Liberals, 40,199.

Manitoba — Conservatives, 40,358; Liberals, 34,781.

British Columbia — Conservatives, 25,622; Liberals, 16,350.

Prince Edward Island—Conservatives, 14,638; Liberals, 13,998.

Saskatchewan—Conservatives, 34,700. Liberals, 52,924.

Alberta—Conservatives, 29,675; Liberals, 37,208.

Yukon—Conservatives, 1,285; Liberals, 829.

Acclamations — Thunder Bay and Rainy River, Welland, Quebec East Two Mountains.

Where Majority Came From.

That the coalition Nationalist-Conservative Government is dependent for its popular majority of 44,481 over the Liberal vote in the Dominion at the last election upon the urban vote, which is naturally protectionist, is apparent from an analysis of the final figures of the total vote as given out to-day. These revised figures show a total Government vote of 669,557, as compared with the total Liberal vote of 625,096. In addition there was a Labour vote of 1,742, a Socialist vote of 3,912, and an Independent vote of 7,177.

In the Provinces.

The Ontario vote was, of course, the deciding element. The Conservative majority in the Province was 62,852. The Maritime Provinces gave a popular Liberal majority of 2,925; Quebec gave a Liberal majority of 5,012; the three prairie Provinces a Liberal majority of 20,188; British Columbia a Conservative majority of 9,272.

By Provinces Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Saskatchewan and Alberta went Liberal, while Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia went Conservative.

Cities Carried the Day.

Figures for all the urban centres are not yet available, but it is significant that the largest Conservative majorities were piled up in the cities. Thus in Ontario the cities of Hamilton, Kingston, London, Ottawa Toronto (including South York), and Brantford account for 34,703 of the total Conservative majority of 62,852, throughout the Province. Figures now being compiled for the other cities and manufacturing centres in Ontario indicate that the total Conservative majority from this source will practically account for the whole Government majority in the Province, and for very considerable more than the total popular majority for the party throughout the country. Rural Ontario still remains faithful to the Liberal cause.

Taking the figures for cities in the other Provinces so far available, it is found that the Government majorities total over 50,000, and this total will probably run up to over 75,000 on further analysis of the figures for the smaller cities, not included in the returns by ridings.

Montreal of the larger cities alone showed a Liberal majority, due principally to the victory of the Labour candidate, Mr. Verville, of Maisonneuve, who won out with a majority of 2,205. Toronto, including South York, gave a total Conservative majority of no less than 28,346. Winnipeg gave a Conservative majority of 4,705. Vancouver gave a Conservative majority of 3,256; Hamilton, 4,395; London, 1,911; Ottawa, 876; Calgary, nearly 3,000.

Favoured Freer Trade.

The most striking moral to be drawn from the figures thus far published is that rural Canada, constituting the largest part of the population, was in favour of the late Government and its policy of freer trade and low tariff taxation. The total vote in the country was 1,307,484.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A protest has been entered against the election of Hon. Dr. Beaume in North Essex, Minister of Public Works, in the Whitney Cabinet. His majority was so small that a recount was demanded.

As Sir Wilfrid Laurier listened to Mr. Borden's argument upon the marriage question, he must have thought, says the Montreal Herald, it a great pity the speech was not made in Ontario before the elect... It might have saved a lot of l seats that were lost.

Sir James Whitney will have a harder nut to crack than the millionaire soap boiler and his "piffling" newspaper supporters. The Evangelical Alliance is not satisfied with the action of the Dominion Government, in relation to the marriage matter and will demand some definite action instead of side tracking.

In South Renfrew the politicians have begun the bye-election campaign, and still the Government withholds the writ. It is difficult to understand Mr. Borden's hesitation. If the election goes against the Government, his majority of 70 in Ontario is not impaired. If the Government wins, the majority is increased to 71, and would be strengthened so as to better withstand future Lancaster landslides if they threaten to crop up.

The Borden Government's own analysis of the election figures shows that the Government had a popular majority of 61,000 in Ontario, and that in the rest of the Dominion the Liberals had a popular majority of 18,000. Yet, the House majority on paper of 70 in Ontario, did not prevent the Government majority being cut down to only 28 on the first division that really tested the policy of the Government, or the Government's lack of policy.

The discharge of sixty employees in the Marine and Fisheries Department to give place to a like number of Quebec partizans, may, or may not, be a compensation to the Ontario supporters of the Government. They expected that a majority of 70 would sufficiently stiffen the Government back-bone to do justice to the demands of Ontario—to deal manfully with the questions on which Ontario's overwhelming support was given.

TIT-BITS

COURTESY.

"A true capacity for courtesy is a high gift," said a dry goods merchant who is the proprietor of a modest country store. "Courtesy is an important business detail, a great asset in getting under the buyer's skin. To my mind, amiability and fine discernment of the wishes of the individual customer are the only real weapons with which the small business man can hope to beat his bigger competitor. Courtesy goes further and does more to hold the buyer than bargain sales. I find that people would rather deal with a small but amiable and accommodating trader than with some of the bureaucratic machines of a vast establishment."

In the great laboratory of human psychology there is no agent so effective in the struggle for commercial supremacy as kind and obliging courtesy.

There are various instances of the practicability of courtesy in business. The spirit of courtesy is embodied in the rest rooms for women shoppers in the department stores, the reading rooms in some stores, and the provision made in other stores for the care of babies while the mothers are shopping. One department store in the west has recently established a smoking room in connection with its tobacco section. Here the devotees of the weed and pipe are invited to recline in easy chairs and rockers and smoke to their hearts' content. Magasines and newspapers are on file in this room, and every effort is put forth to make the men patrons of the store comfortable.

Courtesy as an asset in the success of a business man cannot be underestimated. It makes for loyalty among employees, it attracts trade, it generates respect and good-will. It is one of the principles of scientific management in shop, factory or store, and the higher the quality of courtesy extended the greater will be the reward from those who are the recipients of it.—Business.

Peterboro' Intermediates Register Their Fifth Consecutive Victory

Defeated Trenton on Their Own Ice Last Night by 6 Goals to 3, Leading All Through the Battle

HAD TO WORK FOR IT

It is Lindsay or Peterborough for the intermediate championship of this district, and the battle will be decided on Tuesday night in Lindsay. The Petes made sure of at least a tie for the district by defeating Trenton on their own ice last night by 6 goals to 3, leading at half time by 5 to 1. The game was about the hardest and most interesting the Peterborough team has had since the first game of the season with Lindsay, and the boys in the blue and white stripes had to fight all the way to win out. The Trenton team, strengthened by young McGorman of their junior team, showed plenty of speed and aggressiveness and kept working down with nice combination that kept the Peterborough defence on the jump. The rear guard of the Petes, however, were equal to the task, the good goal-keeping of Derocher, and the fine checking of Bearss and Bond holding them out in splendid fashion. There was lots of speed on the Trenton line and led by Art Armstrong, they checked back in fine fashion.

The Petes were in front all through, although the Trenton aggregation never let up. It took twenty minutes hard playing to score the first goal, but once started the Petes banged in four more and put the game in the ice chest. Trenton outscored Capt. Park's men 2 to 1 in the second half, but the Peterborough team were satisfied to hold them and to come out of the battle in good shape for the big game in Lindsay.

Only a small crowd saw the game which was played on lightning fast ice, with the thermometer down to the zero mark. Those who were there, however, were satisfied that the game was one of the best of the season, as both teams worked to the limit to win. The checking was close and hard, but the game was not rough. Referee W. A. McCord, of Toronto, having to impose only a few penalties. Art Armstrong of the Trenton team was injured in the first half and retired for a few minutes for repairs, Giroux being dropped with him.

The Peterborough team played good hockey all through. They were not apparently affected by the big ice and showed better combination than they did in the game with Trenton here. They were passing and taking passes nicely and in spite of the persistent back checking of the Trenton line they worked in on the defence in good style. All four on the forward line were prominent. Capt. Park was always in his place in front of the nets and rushed nicely. Kelly and Coughlin played their usual effective games along the boards, and Giroux's work at rover was consistently good. Both Bond and Bearss checked and rushed nicely and Derocher was there as usual with a gilt-edged exhibition in the nets, his work all through being spectacular. One of the shots that beat him was a hard luck one, the puck glancing off Park into the nets.

For Trenton, Art Armstrong was the star, his rushing and shooting being effective on the attack, while his great back checking was of much assistance to his defence. McGorman, the junior man, and a brother of the man who played in Peterborough, is a speedy youngster. Henry and Palmer both had fine turns of speed. Burt the little point player, did some fine rushing and checking. Pringle was good in the nets. The line-up:

Trenton		Peterborough.
	Goal.
Pringle		Derocher
	Point
Burt		Bearss
	Cover-Point
Reynolds		Bond
	Rover
Henry		Giroux

Peterborough Club Will Retain Possession Of Grand Challenge Cup For Another Year

Peterborough Cinches the Trophy in the Semi-finals, Playing Off the Finals With Two Home Rinks

The highest honours of the Bonspiel have been captured by the Peterborough curlers, they having annexed the Grand Challenge Cup, and also the big end of the Consolation event. Skip G. H. Giroux capped the climax in the Primary fixture last night, by taking the final game from Skip J. E. A. Fitzgerald, in what was easily the best game of the day. The contest was worthy of the excitement it aroused. It was fought all the way from the laying of the first stone to the playing of the last end, and at no time throughout the game did the players have the assurance of a safe lead. This is the second year in succession that Skip Giroux has had the honour of skipping the winning rink for the Grand Challenge trophy. The only time that Skip Fitzgerald had a lead on his doughty opponent was at the culmination of the first end, when he was one shot to the good. In the next end Skip Giroux secured two shots, and from that on until the end of the game he maintained a lead of one or two shots, pulling out at the finish with three shots to the good. It was a game battle all along the line, with both sides playing the limit, and it was a game crowd of spectators that elbowed and pushed impatiently, in order that they might gain a better view of the struggle.

The personnel of the rinks contesting for the final was as follows:

J. H. Metheral	W. P. Adamson
H. Evans	A. H. Webb
T. Brightman	J. S. Knapman
J. E. A. Fitzgerald	J. H. Giroux
Skip . . 10	Skip . . 13

Score by ends—

Fitzgerald	1	0	0	1	1	0	1	0	0	4—10
Giroux	0	2	1	0	0	2	0	1	1	0—13

Majority for Skip Giroux—3.

Peterborough curlers grabbed the money in the third prize consolation event by a score of 5-20, thereby displacing the Keene quartette for a position in the finals. The game was played this morning and several skillful shots by Skip McIlroy's aggregation soon rendered Skip Bessie's claims of qualifying for the finals remote.

The finals for the Consolation will be played to-night between Skips McIlroy and Matthews.

The Keene aggregation left for home this morning, taking with them the District Cup, which they won from Peterborough in the contest on Tuesday by the small margin of two shots.

The work of dismantling the decorations at Charlotte street rink took place this morning. The decorations consisted of flags, shields and other patriotic emblems used during the visit of the Scotch curlers.

For the third year in succession, G. H. Giroux has skipped the winning rink in the primary finals, a record which is not equalled in so far as the Peterborough club is concerned.

Only one outside rink qualified for entry into the fourth round of the primary. The rink was skipped by Skip Williams of Keene.

Juniors Should Draw A Big Crowd On Monday

There is great interest in Peterborough over the junior game on Monday night when the Port Hope junior team and the Bear Cats play the last game in this district. A bumper house should be on hand to show the appreciation of the fans for the grand showing the youngsters have made this season. Three wins away from home in a week is a pretty creditable record for a young and hitherto untried team and the fans should encourage the youngsters by turning out in large numbers for this game. It will be well worth seeing—there has not been a poor game in this district in the junior series and the Port Hope team will make things interesting all the way through. The Bear Cats will practise to-night and then rest up for Monday's game.

Big Bunch Of Bugs Will Go To Lindsay For The Final Game

Peterborough hockey fans are now trying to decide the question "Can Peterborough beat Lindsay in Scuggville next Tuesday night, and thus win the district?" The answer will be made known when the teams get together in what promises to be one of the most exciting games seen in this district in years. From all indications, the biggest crowd that ever left Peterborough on a hockey excursion will accompany the locals to Lindsay on the special G. T. R. train, which leaves at 7 o'clock sharp, returning after the game. The fans are all discussing the game, and everybody wants to see the decisive battle for the district championship. A feature will be the singing of the Rooters' Club, which was organized at Brock Street Rink last night, and which with a membership of several hundred lusty-lunged songsters, under the able direction of Cheer-leaders Jimmy Callaghan and Jim Dorris, will render an extensive repertoire of popular song parodies. The Club had a good rehearsal last night and they will be in splendid shape for the Lindsay battle, as it is likely the Club will make its initial appearance at the Port Hope Junior game on Monday night.

The Peterborough team is determined to annex another victory at Lindsay and will make it a battle royal from the first clang of the gong.

The round-trip fare to Lindsay will be 75c for adults and 50c for children. A special car for ladies and their escorts will be attached to the train.

TICKETS FOR THE HOCKEY EXCURSION

Tickets for the Hockey Excurtion to Lindsay will be on sale at The Examiner Office, Ray's Cigar Store, and the G. T. R. up-town office for the benefit of the fans.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

In the Y. M. C. A. Juvenile Hockey League, the Rough Riders defeated the Capitals yesterday afternoon. Score, 5 to 1. Referee R. Smith. The Wanderers and Canadians, the League leaders, will meet on Saturday.

Last night was open night in the Y. M. C. A., to the men of the different canoe factories, and upwards of 100 men availed themselves of the privilege of spending the evening at the association. There was a lively time on the Bowling Alleys, after which everybody adjourned to the gymnasium, where they all took a hand in a game of "Kill-im". This was followed by a series of canoe races in the tank, which was a decidedly new feature and added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening. The canoe races over, the men went into the swimming game, and all kinds of stunts were performed off the springboard. The men on coming from the bath room, were served with refreshments by the members of the Social Committee, who certainly excelled themselves. The men, one and all, voted it the best ever.

The Business Boys' Gymnasium Class, under the direction of Mr. G. Galley and Mr. "Sandy" Hall, journeyed out to the toboggan slide, and in spite of the cold weather, enjoyed the slide immensely. Upon their return to the building hot pork and beans and coffee were served. When all had satisfied their appetite, they turned their attention to the piano, Mr. A. Skelleter playing a lot of the popular airs, the boys joining lustily in the different choruses. The gathering broke up after singing the National Anthem.

A REAL PLEASURE

The following is an unsolicited letter from a prominent citizen of Ottawa:

"After a varied and extensive experience on the several Canadian railway roadbeds during the past six months, I wish to say that it is a real pleasure to travel over the G. T. R. roadbed between Montreal and Detroit, either by day or night, permitting during daylight travel rest and relaxation and by night refreshing and sound sleep.

"In these days of extravagant claims as to superiority it seems to me only fair, when conditions are found to warrant it, that 'praise be given where praise is due'. Hence this statement".

FUNERAL TO-DAY.

The remains of the late Mr. W. Losey, who passed away, in Toronto, on Wednesday, arrived in the city to-day, on the C.P.R. train. Interment took place immediately after to Little Lake Cemetery.

25 Below Zero

With nothing to break the fall until the twenty-five below zero mark was reached, the thermometer took a tumble last night. The thud was particularly felt about the time people were tumbling out of beds this morning, especially by those who live in flats, (where fireless cookers are in vogue. There is no reason to expect another continued cold snap, such as was experienced three weeks ago. The weather experts, both local and otherwise, announce, with confidence, that this is merely a sporadic manifestation, and this evening, and Saturday are in no danger of contagion from the brand of weather which prevailed throughout the night.

Twenty-one below zero was the assertion received from the official bureau of information at 8.30 this morning, which is somewhat reassuring after last night's low water mark. There were some thermometers in the city ready to assert that it was thirty beyow zero, and under, but it is safe to assume that they are unreliable, and we can rest assured that such was not the case.

SEEN AND HEARD

Jones and Brown argued as they always did when they had time enough. They had dined together, and, as Jones lived at a distance and it was very late, Brown offered to put him up for the night.

On the way home they fell to discussing the strategy of the Civil War as indicated by the campaign of Lee and Garnt. The topic was elastic enough to keep them going for a half hour and reached its height as they neared Brown's house.

Then Brown lost his temper. "Jones," said he, "if you don't admit that Grant was a greater general than Lee you can't sleep here."

It was then two o'clock in the morning, and Jones was eight miles from home.—Chicago Post.

"You may say what you please about the wild and woolly Southwest," said a travelling man, "but I know some of the people there have ideas about the usages of society. I was at a hotel table in Texas not long ago where most of the guests were of the rough, drinking type. An old fellow and his son were sitting together, and all at once somebody called the son a liar. Son didn't shoot—he just grabbed his table knife and started for his detractor. Well, sir, in less than a minute his father grabbed him by the collar and forced him back into the chair.

"'Ain't you got no manners?' he hissed into the ear of the angry youth. 'What have I taught ye?'

"'He called me a liar!' howled the boy, brandishing his weapon.

"'S'pos'n he did, sonny!' went on the father. 'Ain't you got no table manners? Put down that there knife an' use yer fork!'

"They know how to teach children etiquette in the South-west, and don't you forget it!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

TIT-BITS

RICH MEN'S SONS AND POOR.

It is a conundrum ages old as to which has the better equipment for life, a son of wealth or a son of poverty. Agreement is unnecessary, but the evidence is sometimes interesting.

Here, for instance, is a son of Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance of way of the Harriman system, who complains that a young man like himself has a hard time getting along. The elder Kruttschnitt is a person of great wealth and power. The son, however, desired not to live in the luxury such riches might have secured him. He wanted to make his own way on his own deserts.

"The rich man's son who starts out in a humble position as I did," says young Kruttschnitt, "is not accepted seriously by his fellow-workers. They believe he has been put there as a result of some whim or hobby. His father's wealth and commercial prestige are drawbacks. They handicap him just as much as the poor man's son believe the lack of money handicaps him."

Certain it is that the man or woman who is thrown immediately on his own resources, whose family can offer him the assistance of neither wealth nor position, ordinarily has small complaint against fate. The opportunity such a person has to prove his worth to society is the thing worth while.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Peter Hamilton's do not think the Adam Hall team worthy of another game until they have accepted G. W. Green's challenge, as Peter Hamilton's have already defeated them, in a one-sided game.

Development Of C. P. R. Fleet Of Steamers

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, JAN. 26.—One of the most remarkable features of the development of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a transportation company has been the rapid extension of its fleet of ocean going and lakes steamships. It is not so very long since the steamships owned by the company could be counted on the fingers of the hands, but a recent census taken by the Steamship Department, discloses the fact that when the present ships at present being built are added to these now in commission, the C.P.R. will have a fleet of seventy-five steamships. If all of these steamships were placed end to end they would stretch for a distance of nearly four miles.

The greatest development of the C. P.R. fleet has been on the Pacific Coast, where the company has been adding new boats at the rate of two each year. Of the famous "Princess" boats alone there are now nine operating on the Pacific coast and these will shortly be augmented by two more of the same class of boats—"The Princess Patricia" and the "Princess Sophia." The former of these is already on its long trip round Capt Horn to Victoria, while the latter will leave Britain in a few weeks on the same journey. When these two boats are put in commission on the Pacific Coast, they will bring the number of new boats added to the Pacific coast fleet since 1910 up to five, the other three boats being the "Princess Adelaide," "The Princess May" in 1910 and the "Princess Alice" in 1911.

But the "Princess Patricia' and the "Princess Sophia" are not the only boats being added to the fleet this year by the C.P.R. Two more boats are now under construction on the Pacific Coast, itself, one a twelfth "Princess" and the other a tug. Altogether this will bring the number of C.P.R. coast service ships up to twenty-five.

For the ocean service on the Pacific the C.P.R. is building in Britain two monster "Empresses" which will make six boats operated by this company between Canada, Japan and China. These new "Empresses" are to be called the "Empress of Russia" and the "Empress of Asia" and they will be the fastest and most luxurious boats on the Pacific.

Another development of C.P.R. shipping on the Pacific coast has been the adoption of oil for fuel on these Princess boats. It has been found that the oil not only makes efficient fuel, but that it does away with the smoke and dirt resulting from the use of coal, so that railway is rapidly equipping its boats for oil burning. With its 75 steamships the C.P.R. carries a staff of 12,000 employees and the amount of coal burned on each day is about 3,000 tons.

NO CASCARET USER EVER HAS HEADACHE

A 10-cent box will keep your liver, stomach and bowels clean, pure and fresh for months.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver, delayed fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Salts, cathartic pills, oil and purgative waters force a passageway for a day or two—yes—but they don't take the poisons out and have no effect upon the liver or stomach.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver, and carry out of the system all the decomposed waste matter and poisons in the intestines and bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means inside cleanliness and a clear head for months. Ask any of the millions of Cascaret users if they ever have headache

Former Resident Of City Dead

A former resident of Peterborough who will be remembered by the older citizens of this city, passed away yesterday at Dansville, N.Y., in the person of Mr. Ocean Watson. The deceased, who was fifty years of age, was brought up in Peterborough, leaving here about twenty years ago. He was a painter by trade. He is survived by a wife and three children. One brother, John of Peterborough, and four sisters, Mrs. J. P. Shevlin, Mrs. M. Clancy, Mrs. T. Guerin and Miss Admadell Watson, all of Peterborough, are also left to mourn his loss.

The funeral will take place on Monday at Dansville, N.Y.

Annual Concert At Chemong Village

The people of Chemong Village held their 44th annual tea and concert last evening in the Town Hall. The attendance filled the hall to overflowing and altogether it was one of the most successful events ever held at Chemong.

After full justice had been done to a dainty supper a good programme was rendered, consisting of music, songs, recitations, dialogues, drills, etc. The sketch "A Pain in the Side" was exceptionally humorous. In addition to the village artists a number of visitors from Peterborough rendered selections.

Mr. Harry Lee sang "My Dreams" with marked effect, while Mr. Albert New, in "I am a Friar of Orders Grey" was no less entertaining. "The Gypsies Laughing Trio" by Messrs. Lee and New was received with loud applause, and Mr. E. Bartley sang effectively "Thora." Mr. F. Thompson in his humorous songs, entirely captivated the audience, who recalled him repeatedly.

Considerable credit is due to the committee for their assistance in rendering the evening such an enjoyable one. The committee were Messrs. S. Fawn, R. D. Tobico, H. Taylor, P. McCue, D. Whetung, Jr.

Local Fanciers At Lindsay

Mr. W. Gross and Joe Kelly are still in the prize ring with their blue-blooded prize-winning poultry. They journeyed to Ottawa recently, taking with them eight entries for the poultry show, which was held in that city. They brought back with them prizes to the number of four firsts and one third. They are now in attendance at the Lindsay show, where they will no doubt repeat their performance. Messrs. Rush, Buller and Cunningham of this city, are also in attendance.

Sodality "At Home"

A very successful "At Home" was held in the St. Alphonsus Lyceum last evening, under the auspices of the Young Ladies' Sodality of the Sacred Heart Church.

There was a large attendance, numbering some 250 persons, and, indulging in amusements peculiar to such a function, an enjoyable evening was spent. Mr. P. O'Donnell was successful in winning the gentlemen's prize in the euchre tournament, while the ladies' prize fell to Miss Succee. Some very good music followed, both vocal and instrumental.

NORTH AMERICAN LIFE

REPORT FOR 1911

The Thirty-first Annual Meeting of the Company was held at its Home Office in Toronto on Thursday, Jan. 25th, 1912, when the report of the business of the year ended Dec. 31st, 1911, was presented.

CASH INCOME

The Cash Income during the year from premiums, interest, etc., was $2,295,176.98, showing a large increase over the previous year.

PAYMENTS TO POLICY-HOLDERS

The amount paid on Policy-holders' Account was $988,313.49, of which sum $148,125.87 was for surplus or dividends. The relative importance of the policy-holders' interests is at once apparent, considering that the sum of $6,000 only was paid to Guarantors. Holders of Deferred Dividend Policies received $501,399.96. This item, including Reserve and Surplus, shows an increasing amount from year to year. It is an incident of the Company's growth and progress, and affords ample evidence, that the business is being conducted for the benefit of the policy-holders.

ASSETS

The Assets increased in 1911 by $924,334.25, and now amount to $12,313,107.57. The Bonds and Stocks owned by the Company are carried, as heretofore, at their cost price, although the market value was $168,575.72 in excess thereof, for which credit has not been taken.

NET SURPLUS

After making provision for all liabilities and further strengthening the reserves, the Net Surplus was increased to $1,300,784.00. This shows a handsome increase over the surplus of last year, and at once establishes the unexcelled financial condition of the Company.

INSURANCES INCREASED

The policies issued during the year, together with those revived, amounted to the sum of $6,129,426, being an increase of $1,019,267 over that of the previous year. The total business in force amounts to $45,849,515.

BUILD FOR THE FUTURE

A Union Station for the Citizens of Peterborough

(By Roy Gilray.)

A new railway station, and that a union depot, for Peterborough!

At first thought such an idea savours of a dream but on closer examination, it is tinged with an air of possibility. Your editorial of last Saturday, drawing attention to the unsatisfactory conditions at the C. P. R. station, suggested the idea. It may not be the most feasible; but the only way to secure anything of this kind is to start the ball rolling, and the tide of public opinion may become so strong that Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and Charles M. Hayes may deem it advisable to get their heads together to stop the noise in Peterborough.

I fancy I hear someone say. "Oh, they will do nothing until they are good and ready!" Don't you believe it. These large corporations are not so independent as they would have you believe. All you have to do is to carry a gun when you go hunting for game and the "coon" will come down every time. Of course the gun must be loaded—rammed in with a good charge of "retaliation"—a retaliation that will affect their pockets, (they have no hearts).

Take a case in point. Some years ago the City Council got up a real, live scare for the Telephone Co., and ordered them off the main streets, as they were going to pave at once. With a tremendous rush they buried their wires, but the poles are still standing and the streets are still a mud puddle. If an explanation is sought the blame is heaped upon the Great North Western Telegraph Co., who bought the poles and who absolutely refuse to take them down, claiming they need them in their business.

They used to have a large number of wires on these poles, but of late years they have been making use of the G. T. R. right-of-way, as is evidenced by the heavy lead coming to their office along Brock street, from the G. T. R. tracks.

If the citizens, generally, as represented by the City Council and Board of Trade, will only go about this thing as if they meant it, and lay the proposition before the G. N. W., not appealing to their sentiment (they have none), but to their pockets, something after this fashion: "Gentlemen, unless those poles on George street come down inside of six months, we will be reluctantly obliged to steer our business to other channels and continue to do so until our wishes are met."

Of course they would treat it as a bluff, but if the threat were carried out at the expiration of the appointed period, it would not take them long to "tumble" once they saw their receipts crumbling to the ground.

In like manner, any problem that affects the people's rights—or their lives—should be taken up with the parties interested, and if redress is not forthcoming by ordinary means (even in law there is no redress) then should the citizens stand shoulder to shoulder until the "coon comes off his perch."

We should have a Union Station near the present C. P. R. depot, extending between George and Aylmer streets. The main artery of travel for railroads entering Peterborough will always be from east to west, and, on account of the course of the river and position of the hills the present C. P. R. line is the best location. Some years ago the C. P. R. station was spoken of as being at the extreme bottom end of the town but owing to the rapid growth southward, it is now near the centre of population.

The G. T. R. should bring their lines in along the same route, forming a trunk system, using two or three tracks, if necessary, for the accommodation of both roads.

Starting with the smallest, the Lakefield branch should be brought down through Ward 6 over their present tracks and join the main trunk system, a short distance east of the C. P. R. bridge over the Otonabee, and proceed west to the Union Station. To the G. T. R. this would save the bridge, near Auburn, which the Street Railway might buy to take their line into Auburn. It would cut out the heavy grade near the Barnardo Home, as well as a street railway crossing on Water street, north, near Auburn. To the citizens it would restore Bethune street, which never should have been handed over to the G. T. R. as a shunting yard, and, most important of all, would protect their lives by doing away with fifteen level crossings which are becoming more and more deadly as years go by.

The Belleville branch should be brought up from Downer's Corners over the old Cobourg Railway right-of-way (which the G.T.R. still hold) and join the maink trunk system just east of the C.P.R. swing bridge over the canal. This would save the G.T.R. their swing bridge and its maintenance near the 'Locks' and a Street Railway crossing on Lock St. south, and render the citizen's lives safer by doing away with ten level crossings.

The Port Hope branch should join the main trunk system about one half mile west of Byersville. As a matter of fact this branch parallels the C. P.R. now all the way in. This would save the G.T.R. maintenance of about one and one half miles of tracks and eleven level crossings would be eliminated.

The Lindsay branch should join the main trunk system at the same point as the junction with the Port Hope branch. A new right-of-way should be used from this point to the break-neck curve which skirts close to the first concession line of Smith township about one and one half miles west of Jackson Park. There is a natural depression in the land along this route which would render the construction very inexpensive. This cut would save 15 or 20 minutes for its express trains, which are now obliged to slow down for a long portion of their run within the city limits. Every West-ender knows it would save a great quantity of steam which the engineers have to waste in whistling. In fact it has become a proverbial nuisance in this part of the city. The trains start tooting long before they enter Jackson Park and keep up a continual screech till they reach Charlotte street, so numerous are the crossings.

It would transform Jackson Park from a death trap into a true pleasure resort, where children could go without fear of being killed, and would still further protect the lives of our citizens by cutting out fourteen level crossings (the most dangerous in Peterborough.)

The present is the most opportune time to plan for such an undertaking. It will be only a few months till McKenzie & Mann will be knocking at our doors for admission. They try to do things pretty much as they like, but we now have a Railway Commission to which we may go, who, we are glad to say, do not always turn a deaf ear to the municipalities.

This elimination of some fifty level crossings would be worth the cost of the whole undertaking to say nothing of the deliverance from the cobweb of shunting yards which disfigure our city.

If it is necessary to retain some of the tracks to serve factories an ordinance could be passed making it compulsory for the railways to do their shunting on these branch lines between midnight and morning. The fifty crossings mentioned may not all be removed, but if no shunting is done over them during the busy hours of the day they are virtually rendered harmless.

Railroads on the other side of the line are spending millions to save a few minutes of time, surely we (including city and railways) should be willing to spend a few thousands to beautify our city, to systematize our travelling facilities, and lastly, but most important of all, to make our city safer and a healthier place to live in.

No time should be lost in presenting our plan to the Railway Commission before either company erects a depot.

By way of special inducement the city might grant to the railways the use of Burnham's point, after the Lumber Company have finished with it, as a switching or storage yard for freight cars, and it would be to the city's and railway's advantage to have docks built for the purpose of transferring goods direct from the railways to the Trent Valley Canal and vice versa. The shores are well formed, with deep water close in, rendering the construction of wharves easy and cheap. This property being so isolated could scarcely be used for anything else.

The main trunking system would mean a formidable array of tracks, but they would be confined to one area. The crossings which would be compartively few in number could be well guarded. In any case the principal thoroughfares north and south are only three in number: George, Aylmer and Park streets, which could be provided with gates, while the ordinary flagmen would be sufficient at the other streets.

It is not to be expected that these plans can be carried out at once, and we must count on strenuous opposition from the Grand Trunk, but, thank goodness, we are seeing the dawn of a new day when people — not the corporations—are going to be masters.

Let out motto be: Build for the future.

HER DAUGHTER SAVED

Stricken With Acute Rheumatism —Recovery Scarcely Expected

Mrs. Dolina J. Lawlor, writing from Oxbow, Sask., says: "I would be lacking in gratitude if I did not write you and let you know of the wonderful good your Dr. Williams Pink Pills have done for my daughter, Belle Lawlor. Indeed I think I may safely say that they have been the means of saving her life. For many years my home has been in Bruce Mines, Ont. Something over a year ago my son and daughter, then in her sixteenth year, left for the west. When leaving here my daughter was in the best of health, but in the following spring she was stricken with what the doctor said was inflammatory rheumatism in its worst form. After a few weeks she was able to get up, but her hands and limbs were so swollen that she could not dress herself. She continued in this way for some time, and then a second attack, worse than the first, set in, and my son telegraphed me as she was very low. While I was getting ready to make the trip of eighteen hundred miles I got a second message to come at once, as they feared she could not live. When I reached her I found her even worse than I had expected. She was so weak and emaciated that I would not have known her, and she could only speak in a whisper. Her hands and fingers were all twisted and her limbs swollen to twice their natural size. The doctors had then been attending her for two months, and she seemed steadily growing worse. We did not dare move her in bed for fear of her heart giving out. She was as pale as a corpse, and her lips and face always cold. We had to fan her continually, and if we ceased even for a little while she would gasp for breath, and no one who saw her thought it possible she could get better. She suffered such pain that I used to go out of the room and put my fingers in my ears to shut out her gasping and moaning. I had known before of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as we could gradually see her sinking I told my son I was going to give her the Pills. He was opposed to my idea for he thought a change in the medicine might prove fatal. However, it was finally decided to give her the Pills. In a week's time she showed some improvement and felt like eating. From that time on she began to gain steadily. Gradually her hands and fingers became straight, the swelling in the limbs went down and her heart-beats became regular, and the colour returned to her face, and soon the cure was complete. She is now as strong and healthy as any girl of her age, and to see her you would never think she had passed through an illness from which none of her friends thought she could recover. You have my sincerest thanks for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for my daughter, and you may be sure I shall always warmly recommend them."

SPLENDID WORK IN PARRY SOUND

Quick Cure of W. S. Kettyle by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Suffered for ten months, but was cured by a single box.—Splendid reputation of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Golden Valley, Parry Sound District, Ont., Jan. 26.—(Special.)—W. S. Kettyle, well-known in this district, has added his testimony to the great mass now coming forward to prove that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure kidney disease, no matter where it is found or in what form it is found.

"I suffered from backache, gravel and headache for ten months," Mr. Kettyle states. "My sleep was broken and unrefreshing and the least exertion would make me perspire freely. After taking one box of Dodd's Kidney Pills I was completely cured. That was a year ago and I have had no return of my trouble since."

Dodd's Kidney Pills have done a great work in this district. Numerous people can be found who have been cured by them of almost every kidney disease, including rheumatism, lumbago, dropsy and Bright's disease. They are looked upon by all who have used them as the one sure cure for kidney disease.

THE PASSING OF JANE O'HIGGINS

(Short Story.)

Insurrection brooded among the pupils of Gerome's atelier. Never before had its precincts been desecrated by feminine invasion, and the men regarded the newly installed easel neatly labelled "Jane O'Higgins," and set up in a secluded corner, with decided disfavour.

But although rebellion smouldered in their hearts they did not possess the temerity for open revolt before Gerome himself; so Jane O'Higgins became a firmly established pupil.

She proved to be quiet and unobtrusive. Though almost austerely plain in appearance there were suggested possibilities that might with encouragement develop into a certain odd beauty.

Gordon Chisholm, a big, blonde fellow with a face like a Greek god and the characteristics of a blonde Bohemian and who was the ruling spirit of the atelier—after one brief glance had swept her from his horizon as he would a cobweb. The other men accepted his attitude as theirs, consequently Jane was promptly consigned to cold storage.

She resented it neither by word nor look, but stole in and out among them as unaggressive as a shadow. The men smoked, drank beer and told stories exactly as they had done before her advent.

As time passed Chisholm became conscious that Jane watched him covertly. He had surprised her on several occasions with brushes poised motionless while she studied his face with absorbed attention. This annoyed while it flattered him.

He began to study Jane and was beginning to enjoy it when she suddenly disappeared, and her abandoned canvas was turned to the wall.

With a shrug of his shoulders Chisholm resumed the conditions of his studio life, which the passing of Jane O'Higgins had barely ruffled. In all probability he would have forgotten her existence had not Fate — the crafty arbitrator—decreed otherwise.

Some months later Chisholm, chancing to be alone in the studio, accidentally knocked over Jane's neglected canvas. It fell right side up at his feet. For a moment he stared at it as though stunned, then brushing his hand across his eyes as if to remove a delusion he looked again.

What he saw was the picture of a woman who had brought her leprous child to Christ for healing. Her kneeling figure, the agonised entreaty of her upturned face, and the child's livid, diseased one were wonderfully realistic. But the meaning and beauty of the picture the painter had endeavoured to express in the compassionate purity of Christ's countenance, and in this countenance Chisholm recognized his own, idealised to be sure, but unmistakably his perfectly featured face. Skill could not spiritualize it or erase the marring lines traced there by unbridled passions; so as it was then the picture was sacrilegious. No wonder the artist had thrown down her brushes in despair. To Chisholm it seemed as if he was looking into a mirror which faithfully depicted his soul. The smart of shamed realization found partial relief in the knowledge that Jane had ever believed him worthy of embodying her ideal conception. His interest was kindled into sudden flame. He tried by every means in his power to recover traces of her, even applying to Gerome, the unapproachable, for some clue. This, however, Gerome coldly withheld.

"I will find her," declared Chisholm, "in spite of you."

The next day Jane's canvas was mysteriously removed from the studio.

Several years had passed since Chisholm's discovery of Jane O'Higgin's unfinished picture. The effect upon him had been marked. Unconsciously he held before him that unrealized model, and with the hope of finding Jane had pushed courageously up the hill of success, its summit being marked by an invitation to a private exhibition of pictures at Gerome's residence. This is the world of art was indeed an honour.

When Chisholm entered the handsome reception rooms, filled with cultivated, well dressed people, he felt a pardonable pride in being among them.

While lingering appreciably before the various specimens of Gerome's unrivalled work, his attention was attracted by a crowd gathered around a picture at the farther end of the hall. He hastened leisurely over to it and saw, with a distinct shock of surprise, that it was the one Jane O'Higgins had previously attempted; the only difference being that wherein the other had failed this had succeeded, and the beautiful face of the Master bending over the sick child was exquisite in its expression of purified love and pity.

Chisholm's heart leaped, then sank with the dull pain of a lost illusion. "I have been pursuing a phantom," he told himself bitterly. "Unless Gerome painted it how had it come among his collection?"

Chisholm turned away with the sensation of having been robbed of something precious, and a desire for solitude led him to leave the crowded rooms.

Stepping through an open door he found himself upon a broad veranda lit by hanging lanterns that glowed like prisoned rainbows. Great banks of potted palms were massed here and there, and a Japanese wind bell tinkled melodiously in the breeze.

But these soothing details were lost upon Chisholm, for advancing toward him with a smiling welcome was Jane O'Higgins—a lovely, gracious woman. As though fearful of destroying a vision he breathed her name in a whisper.

"No," she contradicted, laughingly, "not Jane O'Higgins, but Melanie Gerome."

He looked at her in bewilderment. "I am Gerome's daughter," she explained. "Father objected to my going into the studio except as a stranger; so I assumed the name."

"But how," stammered Chisholm, "did you eventually finish the picture?"

Melanie's eyelids drooped. "I saw you recently at Melba's rehearsal. I knew it was possible then for me to complete it."

"I am what you have made me," he returned humbly.

A little silence fell between them in which each groped dumbly for the heart of each other and, finding it were satisfied.—Boston Post.

THE GERM WHICH PRODUCES DANDRUFF

Finally Causes Baldness—Kill the Germ and Save Your Hair—Newbro's Herpicide Will Do It

Did you ever try to discover a reason for the dying of a valuable plant? You, perhaps found that life was destroyed by some insect or parasite working about the roots and sapping away the elements which go to support plant life.

The dandruff germ exercises the same destructive influence upon the life of the hair. It forces its way down the follicle around the hair bulb and thus prevents the hair from getting proper nourishment. The hair dies and drops out.

Newbro's Herpicide prevents this by killing the germ. It also frees the scalp from the accumulations of dirt and scurf skin. With the removal of these obstacles to a clean, healthy scalp, the hair will grow naturally and luxuriantly.

Herpicide is known as the Original Dandruff Germ Destroyer.

One dollar size bottles are sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Applications may be obtained at the better barber shops and hair dressing parlours.

Send 10c in postage or silver to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich., for a nice sample of Herpicide and a booklet telling all about the hair. — McDermid & Jury, and Payne's Drug Store, Special Agents.

REPORTED FIND

A reported rich find of diamonds in the Keewatin district, between the Albany and the Severn Rivers, by G. Grant, a Sturgeon Falls prospector, is not as yet taken seriously by either the mines department or the geological survey experts here. Mr. Grant interviewed Dr. Haanel, director of mines, here recently, and told of finding diamonds of large size and good quality as a result of a long search in the Keewatin district, west of James Bay. He said he had sent specimens to experts in New York, who had found them of fine quality. However, Mr. Grant produced no specimens here for inspection, and was very vague as to the exact location of his diamond bearing area. Beyond his own statement, there is no evidence here to substantiate his claim. Nor has the acting deputy minister, Mr. Brock, been advised by the New York experts that specimens from a new diamond field have been received. This is practically always done where precious minerals affecting Canada are found and submitted for testing.

NOT IMPROBABLE

During the past few years there have been several reported discoveries of diamond-bearing quartz in Canada, but so far investigation has shown that none of these discoveries possesses any commercial value. At the same time the discovery of a rich diamond field in the practically unexplored mineral territory of the Keewatin and Ungava districts is not an improbability.

Diamonds of good quality and size were found a few years ago in the glacial drift which came down from Canada to the United States. The supposition is therefore that there are diamonds in Canada, but just where they are to be found in the vast area of the hinterland no one can say.

Mr. H. M. Ami, of Ottawa, formerly of the geological survey, declared a few years ago that diamonds would be found in the Keewatin district. But so far the mining and geological survey experts here have not seen any.

MORE THOROUGH SEARCH

However, it may be pointed out that no one can yet definitely say what may turn up in the shape of precious minerals in the yet practically unexplored areas of the north. The next few years will probably see a more thorough and exhaustive geological and mineral survey of Canada's hinterland than has been possible hitherto, when the energies of the department have been mainly directed to covering the southern half of the Dominion.

Mr. Grant says that he has spent already over $10,000 in prospecting, and will this year spend several thousands more taking in men and machinery to his alleged diamond field. The exact location he is keeping a close secret.

SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles and at last was almost helpless. I went to three doctors and they did me no good, so my sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken only two bottles I could see a big change, so I took six bottles and I am now strong and well again. I don't know how to express my thanks for the good it has done me and I hope all suffering women will give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It was worth its weight in gold."—Mrs. J. P. "THE SECRET OF PAUL FARLEY"

By JOHN MARCH

But Mrs. Radler had opened a green baize door and disappeared down a long stone passage leading to the kitchen; she had something to do at the back; there was something that required immediate attention, and the squire's question missed fire. On Paul's part there was a moment's breathless pause before Fleming's heavy tread came grating along the sanded flags, and he pushed open the sitting-room door.

"Last night about this time he was thrashing me," Paul was telling himself, "and now in a few seconds we may be friends again, or—worse—foes. Oh, God, teach me, tell me, what to say and do!"

Felix, in a bowler hat and wrapped in a Raglan coat to his feet, all unconscious of the volcano of emotion within the quiet occupant of the sitting-room, saw only a tall, pale young man lolling against the chimney-piece, his back to the cracked glass, toying nonchalantly with a gold-tipped cigarette, his unbuttoned coat revealing a large expanse of shirt-front. The Squire's hesitation was so momentary that it was scarcely perceptible. He closed the door, crossed the room in a couple of strides, and held out his hand. With a swelling heart Paul put his into it, and they looked earnestly into one another's eyes.

"What did you do it for?" he asked imploringly; "why did you break faith with me, Farley?"

"Don't ask me to explain a passing madness, because I can't," he said, raising his great beseeching eyes. "I—it is my first real slip, sir, and I regret it with every fibre of my being. I thought perhaps if I came and asked you to, you would overlook it, Mr. Fleming?"

"Looking at the matter in a large, fair-minded way, I claim a certain amount of provocation, but nothing to warrant the retaliation I made. You are the more injured party, I grant, and if you can pocket your pride and—well, I ought to be able to do the same. Will you forgive me, Farley?"

"That's unfair," Paul said huskily; "you are forcing me to compel you to eat humble pie. I don't desire that, and, moreover, I am not exactly clear what you want forgiveness for."

"For thrashing you. Come, don't be obstinate, Farley!"

"I never resented it," he said, looking away from the grey eyes. "I deserved it, or at least you thought I did, and that's the same thing, it—it was what you said that hurt me. I am ambitious, vain of my ability, selfish, and a great deal more, but not evilly disposed."

"I know you are not," he rejoined quickly, "and whatever I said in my anger I retract now. I am anxious to be friends, I can't stand another day of this; life is too short to allow this kind of upset to be prolonged. In all probability if you hadn't come to me I should have been at the Hall to-morrow. Hunter said you were seriously hurt, but you've managed to get this distance," and he removed his hat, and laid it on the faded damask cloth.

"I came on Tom Hargrave's bicycle, the boy was anxious for me to try his new machine."

"Are you hurt?" he asked impatiently.

Paul became dumb, and looked at his boots uncomfortably.

"Silence gives consent; it acknowledges an unspoken fact, and I see for myself I have not improved your beauty. One ear is as big again as the other," he said, half laughing, and then, suddenly laying his hand on Paul's shoulder, he said in a totally different voice, "I suppose it would surprise you, Farley, if I told you I hurt myself a vast deal more than I did you, dear boy. You don't understand the feeling I have for you, and it's not to be wondered at, seeing I am quite incompetent to analyze it myself. It's an extraordinary kind of affection. If you were a woman I suppose I should be—hang it!—we will let it remain unchronicled. Upon my soul, Farley, I'm ashamed to tell you how very much I care."

He divested himself of his coat, and sank into the shiny, mahogany arm-chair on one side of the hearth, looking up at Paul, and in the sudden hush there was not a sound save the Squire's breathing and the patter of the rain on the roof.

"This is what took me to the summer house, Farley," he said at last, breaking an awkward silence; and taking a brown leather case from his pocket he selected a dirty-looking envelope, and handed it to Paul.

He ran his eyes over the anonymous letter, and a glittering comprehensive light began to dawn in their dark depths.

"You can put this masterpiece down to Mrs. Wycherly," he said, "she and she alone would be the only individual sufficiently interested or likely to calculate the chances that I should make a confidante of you or your sister. It was a clever move, and brought about the desired result. May I tell you about the night of the ball? You will better understand why she wants to separate us. I think she would rather not tackle, you, Mr. Fleming."

"Yes, I want to hear," he said, taking a cigar from his case; "one moment, though," and he went to the door, and gave orders for the mare not to be "put in" for half an hour, and a "split Scotch" to be brought for Mr. Farley.

"No," Paul protested, "not for me. I'd rather not."

"You won't be beholden to me for sixpennyworth of whisky, I take it."

"If you put it in that way I'll have it, I drink more than is good for me as it is."

Mrs. Radler brought the whisky and a yule-like log for the fire at the same time, and left them in undisputed possession of her best room. Paul lighted a cigarette and leaned back in his chair opposite to Felix, and immediately set to work to weave an able and graphic description of Mrs. Wycherly's proceedings within the sacred precincts of her boudoir on the night of the masked ball. Felix did not interrupt him, but sat with his eyes very wide open and fixed intently on Paul's handsome, mobile face; and when, at almost the end of the telling narrative, he handed him the letter he had received from Mrs. Wycherly that morning, Felix took it silently, read it gravely and carefully from beginning to end, crumpled it in his hand, threw it into the fire, and said "Beast!"

"What sort of love do you call that?" Paul asked, uncrossing his legs to reach his glass from the chimney-piece.

"If it's any sort of love at all, it's very much deformed," he said with a contemptuous laugh. "A woman like that doesn't know the meaning of love. You have satisfied her taste, Farley; she has taken to you; it's simply a case of natural selection. The beautiful creature has marked you for her prey, and it will be difficult to baulk her."

"What do you advise?" Paul asked.

"I can't advise; there is no telling to what lengths a desperate woman may go. She expected you to-night, I take it, with the engagement ring, to fix an early date for the marriage. You don't mean to marry her, but she intends to marry you. You have a conscience, she none; you have a thousand scruples, she not one; in short, the contest will be unequal unless you can meet her on her own ground and fight her with weapons similar to her own."

"I suppose the most honourable and straightforward course to pursue would be to throw up my situation?"

"I don't see that at all!" he said, indignantly, flushing crimson. "There is no occasion to treat Mrs. Wycherly as if she were a school girl whose heart you had stolen, and your conscience was pricking you and urging you to make the only amends possible. The woman has developed a wolfish kind of passion for you, torrential enough to sweep all obstacles before it, and the mania simply represents life or death to her. I don't for a moment think you would be allowed to leave Weyberne."

Paul looked startled.

"I don't want to frighten you," he said, smiling, "only, under the circumstances, it's just as well to see too much as too little, no use to shut the stable door when the steed has gone. We know our charming widow would not stick at much, and probably, for her own gratification, she would prefer kidnapping to murder."

Paul rose, caught his chair, and placed it close to the Squire's Felix carefully knocked the ashes from his cigar with his little finger, then looked and laughed.

"Are you serious?" Paul asked, turning in a profuse perspiration.

"Quite," he said, gravely. "That must be her idea, otherwise where does Denham come in? No one in their senses would take that coarse, hulking poacher, with his abominable brogue, into their house as a liveried servant without some special and, I think, nefarious motive. He leaves me to-morrow, and will no doubt enter Mrs. Wycherly's service the same day."

"I shall be nervous about venturing out alone," he said throwing his cigarette into the fire and leaning his elbow on the arm of the Squire's chair.

"I believe you will be perfectly safe so long as you don't oppose her. To my mind your greatest danger lies in opposition"

"Do you mean I must fall in with her wishes; I must carry out the engagement, and——"

"For a time, yes. You see, Farley, you are in rather an evil-looking hole, and it's essential to get you out without publicity or scandal, and with a whole skin. Duplicity is the only means of defence you possess until we have gained time to turn ourselves round, and beggars can't be choosers. If it were any ordinary reasonable love affair or misunderstanding I should recommend an extremely plain letter, or I would act as an emissary on your behalf—as a matter of fact do any thing you thought helpful, but the occurrence is beyond all parallel, and quite outside my ken. You must do some courting to-morrow night, Farley, or I won't be answerable for the consequences."

He saw the dismay on Paul's face, and burst into a hearty laugh.

"Surely you don't object to making love to a pretty woman for a few hours," he asked, "even if the lady is rather too unpleasantly willing?"

"I would as soon make love to a panther," he said, breathing quickly. "Really and truly, Fleming, I am afraid of her!"

"I'm not surprised at that, but you must get your courage up to boiling point by to-morrow night. You must satisfy her sufficiently to allay suspicion. Tell her you will purchase the ring the first opportunity the week presents, don't oppose her in any way, and yet don't overdo the thing. I'll go to London to-morrow, and talk to Graham. His head is screwed to a shrewdish pivot; I think he is the man to suit the situation. Finish your grog, and I'll give you the outline of a scheme I have in my head."

Paul rose, stepped to the chimney-piece, gulped down the whisky, and stood with his back to the fire, his eyes fixed on the Squire's calm, handsome face.

"Now, look here, Farley," he said, tentatively, "if I go to town to-morrow and look up Graham, and he thinks it necessary to see and question you, will you come?"

"I could be spared a few hours in the middle of the day, but I should want to return to Weyberne before night."

"I daresay you could, a few hours would suffice. It's like this, if Graham falls in with my plan, thinks it feasible, I shall telegraph for you."

"Will that really be needful?" he asked anxiously.

"Yes," he returned, decidedly, "because I shall employ a detective, have him down here, and I shall want him to impersonate you."

"Felix!" Paul exclaimed, going white, "don't—be careful—I—don't be rash."

"Don't be a fool, Paul," he said, roughly; "if there must be a tragedy at Weyberne I don't intend you to be the victim. If that crazy wanton Jezebel requires some excitement let her kidnap one of Scotland Yard's blest human ferrets. No doubt he'll be a man of the world with plenty of mettle, able to comprehend her ladyship's unsavoury proclivities, and therefore vastly more entertaining than you could possibly prove."

To that sentiment Paul inwardly acquiesced, and some of the dark hue began to resettle beneath his skin.

"All I shall want you to do is to lie low for a few days and give the other Paul Farley a chance. We must take Sir Thomas into our confidence, and persuade him to allow the new man to see your place, and afterwards the procedure is simple enough; we have nothing further to do save wait on events."

"I think, keeping Miss Hargrave's interests in view, Dr. Hunter would like me to leave this part of the world altogether," Paul said slowly. "I am rated for another two months, so I promised to take a week in town, and also to go whenever he liked to on the date."

"What's that for?" he asked quickly.

"For Miss Hargrave's benefit. It's time something were done to bring matters to a climax between her and Pelham, and Dr. Hunter's idea is that it would be more easily accomplished behind my back. What do you think?"

"I'm not going to trouble my head about that," he responded tersely. "We in London and a fellow impersonating you at the Hall would, of course, precipitate things for the Hargraves. However, they can take care of Judith, but it's not so easy to protect you, for our efforts must certainly be all on your side. By the way, I am terribly sorry about Judith Hargrave!"

"I am sorry, too, but I have more sympathy with her family and her unfortunate prospective husband. Miss Hargrave has never been misled or encouraged, and therefore I consider she ought to have restrained her feelings; she ought not to have permitted herself to sink into this deplorable state."

"Mrs. Wycherly is just as mad in her way," Felix said.

"It's a quarter to nine," Paul remarked, looking at his watch. "I ought to be back."

"And so ought I," Felix answered, lazily clasping his hands behind his head and smiling up at him. "I wonder what those two women see in you, Farley?"

"Goodness only knows!" he returned with a deep sigh. "It's a mystery to me, worse than the Sphinx's riddle."

"It's enough to make a man ashamed he's been born of woman," Felix said, putting on his hat, and walking to the door with his coat on his arm. "You'll put the machine on the cart and drive back with me?"

"Please," he said eagerly; "it's wet, dark, and muddy, and just listen to the drip of the rain from the eaves and the wrestling of the boughs in the wind," he added, as the Squire opened the door and let in a rush of damp atmosphere.

"I shall land you at the Hall, and I have a good mind to tell James to keep an eye on you for the next few days, at any rate until I can get you up to town."

"And when I come back?"

"If I scent danger, you won't come back; you will share Graham's chambers for a day or so. We are not going to run any risks, dear boy."

Paul bit his lips, flushed, turned round, and dsmoothed his hair in the cracked glass.

CHAPTER XVII.

Mrs. Wycherly at Home.

Dinner over, Paul changed his boots, and set out resolutely to pay his addresses to his beautiful fiancee. It was fine overhead, but mild and moist after the rain, and the roads were muddy. A dank, autumnal smell pervaded the air, and the brown and yellow foliage still shone with the day's downpour.

He walked slowly, his eyes on the ground, loth to hasten the dreaded interview. His heart beat high, his head burned, his hands and feet were as cold as clay. In his trepidation he noticed the commonest and most trivial objects by the wayside. The wet, red gravel heaps on the vivid green turf, the grass jewelled with raindrops, gleaming in the light of the watery moon, huge white stumps of timber blasted by lightning, black decayed trunks of trees, and when at length the grey sombre steeple of Weyberne Church came into sight, he knew he could not much longer postpone the evil moment. There was no surcease of reluctance; he looked between the larches, and felt very much inclined to show the white feather and walk back to Weyberne Hall. But Felix wished it; on the way home Felix had again laid stress and emphasis on this particular point; Felix had forgiven him, he was putting himself out of his way to help him. Therefore, at all hazards, at all events, at any personal cost, Felix must be obeyed.

With an unwilling, trembling, fumbling hand, he pulled the iron pin from the staple of the large, white gate, and was about to pass through when a curiously-shaped bundle near the post attracted his attention, and he stooped to examine it. The thing was hard and warm, and moved at his touch, rolled over, opened, and a little figure scrambled to his feet from a woollen shawl, and stared at him.

It was not a very small boy, but a weak and emaciated one, with big, vcant, hazel eyes, and a few scant golden curls on his forehead, damp with perspiration. Forlorn and woefully altered as Paul thought he must be, still he recognized Felix's description of the little Guy Wycherly, and lifted the thin, poorly clad child in his arms.

"What are you doing here, chappie?" he asked gently.

The boy gazed at him, lost in wonder at the rich, low, caressing tone.

"Who are you?" Guy asked, in a hoarse, broken voice, such as Paul would never have believed a child could possess.

"I am a friend of mother's; I am going to see her; you'll come with me, won't you?"

"No," he said, with a wise look. "She'll hurt me like this." He put his hands to his skinny throat, and grabbed it spasmodically.

THOUGHT IT WAS CANCER

"Fruit-a-tives" completely relieved me

SYDNEY MINES, N.S., Jan. 25th, 1910.

"For many years, I suffered tortures from Indigestion and Dyspepsia. Two years ago, I was so bad that I vomited my food constantly. I also suffered with Constipation. I consulted physicians, as I was afraid the disease was cancer, but medicine gave only temporary relief.

I read in the 'Maritime Baptist' about 'Fruit-a-tives' and the cures this medicine was making and I decided to try it. After taking three boxes, I found a great change for the better and now I can say 'Fruit-a-tives' has entirely cured me when every other treatment failed, and I reverently say "Thank God for 'Fruit-a-tives'."

Distress From Indigestion

Tried in Vain to Get a Cure—All Medicines Failed

Old Trouble Disappeared When the Liver and Bowels Were Set Right by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

You cannot make a greater mistake than to think that indigestion is confined to the stomach. It is a disease of the liver and bowels, and it is only by getting these organs healthy and active that you can ever hope to cure chronic indigestion.

Here are two cases reported by Mr. Skinner, which tell of continued failure to cure indigestion by dosing the stomach. Both were cured thoroughly by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. A. C. Skinner, Atlantic St., Hardwoodhill, Sydney, B.C., writes: "My wife was troubled with indigestion and tried all sorts of medicines in vain. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, I got her to try them, and to our great delight she was cured. We would not think of being without them in the house for use when the liver and bowels became sluggish.

I told a friend about them and gave him a box. He had suffered from indigestion for yeras and tried most everything he could get. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills were also successful in his case, and he says they beat any medicine he ever came across."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25c a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

An Encouraging Message

I have a message of hope and good cheer, of encouragement and inspiration to every suffering woman. I have endured the torture due to female troubles and the consequent despondency and mental agony almost to the point of despair, and I have been restored from this condition to a state of vigorous health, and to the happy, exhilarating frame of mind which accompanies physical well being. This change has been brought about wholly by the use of ORANGE LILY.

In addition I have had the privilege and pleasure of indorsing multitudes of other suffering women to give ORANGE LILY a trial, and have received thousands of enthusiastic acknowledgments of the blessings it has brought to them. The following is a sample:

Truro, N. S., April 5, 1909.

Dear Mrs. Currah,—Your very kind letter was received yesterday. In reply to your question about my health, I am thankful to say that I am very well. As I have never given you a statement of my case you may be interested in it.

For several years I have suffered untold agony. This suffering was continuous, but I would have violent attacks every few weeks, each attack lasting several days. The first Sunday in November, I felt the pain increasing and so did not go to prayers. The rest of the family did go, and soon after this forcing down pains seized me and I had to remain on the floor until their return. I was in great pain all night and was very sick for a whole week.

Then Mrs. L. came to see me and told me of your wonderful medicine. I got my husband to send for it right away, as I was too sick to write myself. (My doctor could do nothing for me.) I have used 6 boxes of ORANGE LILY, have had three months of good rest, and am now well, never better in my life. I have not had the old pains since. I often ask my husband if it is myself that is going around and doing my own work. I can scarcely believe it. It brings tears of joy to my eyes. I could shout it to all the world. I cannot speak enough in its praise.

Your friend, MRS. E. H. P.

Receiving, as I do, dozens of such reports each day, I feel impelled to make known to my suffering sisters the merits of ORANGE LILY. It differs from other so-called remedies in that it is not taken internally. It is a strictly local treatment, and is applied directly to the affected organs. Its curative elements are absorbed into the congested tissues, expelling the stagnant foreign matter which has been irritating the membrane and oppressing the nerves, and a prevailing feeling of physical and mental relief is noticeable almost from the start. It is a positive, scientific remedy and even if you use no more than the Free Trial treatment you will be very materially benefited.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

I want every reader of this, who suffers in any way from painful monthly periods, irregularities, leucorrhoea, inflammation or congestion of the womb, pains in the back, etc., to send me their addresses, and I will forward at once, without charge, 10 days' treatment. If your case is not far advanced it may entirely cure you, and in any event it will do you much good. I am so earnest in making this statement, and so positive that it is true, that I trust every sufferer who reads this notice will take advantage of my offer and get cured at home, without a doctor's bill. Address, enclosing 2 stamps, MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, Windsor, Ont.

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet

For Schools, Hotels, Banks and Private Residences

Heretofore it has been impossible to install a Sanitary System of inside closet without water works and sewage, and you will agree with us when we say that the present outdoor system of closets are not only very insanitary, but are at the same time one of the most fruitful sources of both moral and physical ills.

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet is constructed principally for families and public bodies who live in a district where it is impossible to have waterworks and sewage. It can be placed in any part of a Residence, Store, School, Hotel, Bank, etc.

We have secured the Agency for this valuable Sanitary Closet, and invite investigation of its merits.

KIT'S COLUMN

The recent disclosure by "Truth" regarding the English women who came over here to pick fruit at Grimsby does not redound to the credit of Canada in the Old Country. I have no doubt "John Bull" has made, or will make, great capital of it in an argument regarding emigration to this country. It is a pity that the affair occurred because Canada is really so splendid. A very sharp eye ought to be turned on emigration matters by the Canadian Government. The accounts spread everywhere in the Old Land about Canada are altogether too rosy—suggest, in fact, getting a living almost without working, and making a fortune without effort. To my consternation a Dublin chemist, at whose shop I was making a purchase about a year and a half ago, entered on as bitter a denunciation of Canada as any one could imagine.

"I know all about it," he said, "your agents keep us well informed about the wonderful chances to make a fortune over there; about how people are waiting to hand out good positions to incomers; about free land and homesteads, and the wheat returns, and all the rest of it. I have good reason to know it," and he proceeded to relate the disasters which had befallen a brother and sister who came to these shores with the idea that gold could be had for the asking. It was a story of weakness and disillusion which ended in return and loss. All this, my friend of the drugs laid to the rosy prospectus some agent, probably unauthorised, had spread abroad. A good deal of comment was also heard in the Canadian building at the Dublin Exposition, as to the "ease" with which "one going over" could "make a b fortune in five years"—and return to spend it "at home"; but this was leavened by the satirical laughter of a few who had had "experience"—one particular old fellow, I remember, who seemed to make it a business to run down emigration. Both views are unfair to Canada, and it is well worth the while of our Government to see that the truth, and the whole of it, is told. It is not so long ago since the writer refused to lend her pen to the exploiting of a scheme to get women of gentle birth—what are called "reduced gentle women" of a certain age—to come over to learn in an institution proposed to be established for that purpose, how to work on farms and ranches in the North-west. It sounded feasible and even good. The ladies would soon find themselves "stormed with proposals of marriage" by the "ranchers." You know the sort of chatter, and all would be lovely. . . . And one thought of girls growing old-maidish at home who because of narrow means "never went anywhere or saw anybody," of girls who had been educated at the convent and "finished" abroad; who had a little smattering of everything—French, that no one beyond Mullingar might understand—piano playing, fancy work, and the rest of it; timid, passee girls in homes that if a trifle shabby were at least comfortable and warm, shy, yet eager girls, looking out at life from the holy sanctuary of home, yearning for a little adventure, a little excitement, and the chance of meeting some bold spirit with whom to mate and settle down in happy seclusion. . . . And one thought of the real life, the real work on the "ranch," the life of labour and sacrifice and monotony, the slow congealing of the warm hopes, the glowing aspirations of these souls nourished in conventionality, and little mincing accomplishments, and the soft refinement of the loving home. . . . Why force such abroad to the rougher, cruder, harder life. Why take frail souls like these and introduce them to severe life of the "Institute of Farming," with for outlook the securing of a husband, often pre-occupied and always busy—for everybody must work early and late on the farm—even the dog.

For, at first, just at first, Canada strikes the newcomer who has been raised softly and gently, as crude—as one rough, in a hurry—too busy to have time for you. The whole atmosphere is one of press and haste. The very climate with its tang, the brilliancy of the sunlight after the land of gray mists and fogs, the preoccupied air of people going about their business—the noon dinner tand the bells that proclaim it—the hurry over the meal—the school-like precision with which life seems to move along, are confusing and disconcerting to the more leisurely mind of the British bred. There seems to be no place for you here. You do not fit in anywhere. A desolation overwhelming sweeps over you, sweeps through to your very soul. What are you to do—what can you do in this foreign land, where everybody seems so busy—what niche is there left for you to fill where everyone seems filled already?

And then quite suddenly one day, Canada seizes you—makes her own of you—mothers you. You are in her and of her. You have found your place, your niche, and set to work bravely. The glow of the very climate catches you. Cold such as you never imagined before, you learn to like and even enjoy. The air braces you to the last nerve in you. Everyone busy like yourself, becomes a comrade, and more slowly, growing day by day the timid roots you have laid in the soil strike and fasten and thrive. You are Canadian to the heart with all that it means. The maple leaf becomes an emblem to be cherished and protected—Loyalty—offshoot green and thriving of the loyalty to the Old Motherland at home, has grown in you towards this Mother who has adopted you.

But—and this is a big but—to become this—to grow in this way with the new country, you must come to it early—you "must have been caught young," as they put it. The reduced British gentlewomen of a certain age have no business here. They would write back like the berry-picking English ladies and set the Truths and John Bulls on us.

We were complaining and shrugging our shoulders over the green Christmas, with its soft weather and warm gray days. We have been well punished for it since. Not since 1893-4 have we had as cold a season—that was a hard winter as we have special reasons to remember. In cities and towns where natural gas is in force, it has happened as ever before—failure in supply when the glass goes below zero. Promises have been made time and again by the gas people. More pipes were to be laid, more gas wells to be operated. A fine steady flow on the coldest day was assured. But when it comes to zero weather the gas drops with the glass. It is a farce this natural gas business—an expensive farce to the customers. People have indignantly thrown out the gas fixtures and ordered the coal man to show his popular face round the premises once more. If you are a gas victim you yearn for the old self-feeder with its red glow and comfortable girth. You cling on and on trying to get dinner without heat. The four-pound fish refuses to broil under a pin-point glimmer; the steak sits on the grid for an hour and bobs out raw and rosy. The man of the house is hungry and cross—the cook is "mad" and gives notice. Everyone is out of humour.

And when, in a rage, you pull out your ridiculous gas equipment and pay anything they like to ask for a ton of coal, the weather man smiles blandly as he hands out—"Soft south-westerly winds, clearing and decidedly warmer. Monday—Fine and much higher temperature."

I find the following in a paper: "Nothing is more surprising than the fear some girls over here (England) have that they will never be married. We in Canada rarely lay ourselves open to the vulgar remarks one hears sometimes here: 'She would run after anything if it was dressed up as a man.' I am much amused at this man-hunting. Naturally I think they make a mistake, for no man wants a bargain."

Of course a woman is a fool who flings herself at the head of any man in terror that she be left to be what is unkindly called "an old maid."

We are learning of late that there is a good deal of dignity attaching to the single life in spite of Maeterlinck's saying "It is a pity to die a virgin." Many women are deliberately choosing that life as the one best worth living. These prefer to be termed bachelor girls to spinsters or old maids. Something savouring of contempt and pity lingers about the title "old maid" which most women find unbearable. I have known elderly girls in the Old Country lose all dignity and pride in the effort to secure a wedding ring for the marriage finger, just as one has known men to avoid such girls as so much poison. The woman who puts a big price on herself—who shows that she really cares little, while she demands the best of men, is she who generally has more offers of matrimony than any other. It is human nature to want that which is difficult, if not impossible to get. The topmost grapes are always the ones that make the mouth water. All very well for the fox to call them sour, but if the fox could speak, it is dollars to doughnuts he would tell you he has never forgotten those grapes, and never ceased hankering after them.

Is it not odd, however, that the man a woman would work and slave for, has perhaps worked and slaved for; is the one he secretly despises. He will leave her any day for the shrew who will put him under her little shoe and keep him there. Is it the woman who demands all and gives nothing who nearly always gets all. Such women men prize and desire, while the poor ardent creature whose love is so great and so humble that no office would be too menial for her to perform for the man she adores gets the kicks and none of the halfpence.

"But!" I hear someone cry, "is it not the very same with the women?" You are arguing in a circle. The woman who get's the man's love and never returns it, who sends him to work day and night to provide her with gewgaws and luxuries, is she not in the same case? Does he not get the kicks even while he is providing the halfpence?" Perhaps. But after all, is he not better able to bear them? All of which I am quite aware by no means solves any problem.

Still, let the man do the hunting.

Lilian Russell seems to be perfectly happy in the idea of marriage at the age of 51. She calmly discusses—not to say dissects—her past matrimonial affairs in the Sunday papers. She is frank as to her age although I do not forget her horrified, not to say hot, disclaimer that 47 was: "far be it from me,"—and a false report given out about her by some "sore newspaper man" not so long ago. But Miss Russell is always beautiful. Now that she has been through the wars and bears her scars so well, she is freely offering advice to the girls. "It is so easy to advise when you know all about it, and her words are really wise.

"Get something out of life before you marry," she says. "Have an occupation; some profession. Know what it is to earn a dollar before you ask a man to lavish his dollars on you," and then she goes on to tell the old story of the girl whom a young fellow with only five dollars in his pocket, besides his theatre tickets, took out to spend the evening. To go to the show the girl demanded a taxi, then supper at Delmonico's, then a taxi home. The boy had to go out between the acts to get enough money to tide him over the evening, and this, Lilian says with scorn, when she should have been content with a nice soda water or some ice cream at the corner drug store. Ach! Lilian, were you content with that sort of ending to an evening out in your day?

And Nat Goodwin follows with his comment on marriage. "Mr. Goodwin," asked the writer, "what would you say to a young man who came to you for advice on the question of getting married?"

The reply was brief and pointed. "You bonehead!"

Did you ever hear an undertaker's joke? When anyone comes in and makes a dispataging remark about anything that a certain man of mourning carries in his emporium, the undertaker always tells him that nobody who uses his goods was ever known to complain of them. There is a shop which we will each have to patronize some day, and we can't come back and claim a misfit either. An undertaker said recently when asked how was business that it was first rate. "Many people moving in to your town?" asked his friend. "Not so many," said the undertaker cheerfully, "but a good many moving out."

And his friend didn't congratulate him. However, when people die they must be buried, and the undertakers and grave diggers and tombstone artists have as good a right as anybody to make money out of other people's misfortunes.

And their turn to be buried will come too, some day.

Editors are timorous persons, according to James Hopper, who recently aired his grievance in an interview. Mr. Hopper writes good sensational stuff of the Jack London "red-blood" sort. His contention is that editors are so fearful lest a subscriber should find fault and withdraw his valuable aid from the magazine or paper, that they turn down matter which might provoke comment and protest from any reader. "For there are a great many persons in the world who seem to be afraid of facing and recognizing the realities of life, wih which the writer of force and personality must deal if he seeks truly to express himself and the spirit of his time." Further comment reveals that it is an unfortunate trait of human nature that the world is more generous in bestowing blame than praise. "Thus the editor who surprises his readers with something new, unusual, unexpected, no matter how admirable, is far more likely to receive letters of protest from those who object to having their serenity disturbed, than letters of commendation from those who approve his course. And so he is likely to attach undue weight to the adverse criticism that comes to him."

Meanwhile, while editors and public are taking care of one another, the poor writer who has to earn his living falls to the ground.

RASH SO BAD BABY CAME NEAR DYING

Head Broke Out, Spread to Arms, Legs and Entire Body. Itched So He Would Scratch Until Blood Ran. One Box of Cuticura Ointment and Nearly One Cake of Cuticura Soap Cured Him. Has Had No Return.

"When my boy was about three months old, his head broke out with a rash which was very itchy and ran a watery fluid. We tried everything we could but he got worse all the time, till it spread to his arms, legs and then to his entire body. He got so bad that he came near dying. The rash would itch so that he would scratch till the blood ran, and a thin yellowish stuff would be all over his pillow in the morning. I had to put mittens on his hands to prevent him tearing his skin. He was so weak and run down that he took fainting spells as if he were dying. He was almost a skeleton and his little hands were thin like claws.

"He was bad about eight months when we tried Cuticura Remedies. I had not laid him down in his cradle in the daytime for a long while. I washed him with Cuticura Soap and put on one application of Cuticura Ointment and he was so soothed that he could sleep. You don't know how glad I was he felt better. It took one box of Cuticura Ointments and pretty near one cake of Cuticura Soap to cure him. I think our boy would have died but for the Cuticura Remedies and I shall always remain a firm friend of them. He was cured more than twenty years ago, and there has been no return of the trouble. I shall be glad to have you publish this true statement of his cure." (Signed) Mrs. H. C. Maitland, Jasper, Ontario, May 27, 1910.

For more than a generation mothers have found a speedy, agreeable and economical treatment for their skin-tortured little ones in Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Although they are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a liberal sample of each may be obtained free, from the Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole props., 30 Columbus Ave., Boston, U.S.A.

Why Dalton's French Drip Coffee is so Wholesome, Delicious and Economical

When you have once tasted Dalton's delicious French Drip Coffee, made in a Dalton's French Drip Coffee Pot, you will never be tempted to drink ordinary boiled Coffee again.

The Coffee berry, or bean, is protected by nature from the insect world by a tough outer shell or husk which contains tannin and other acid, bitter principles which are poisonous to insects and certainly not wholesome to the human system.

Other roasters of Coffee do not remove this bitter husk, and this is why many people find that ordinary Coffee does not agree with them. Not only that, but the usual way of roasting Coffee in cylinders over coke or gas fires, drives off the volatile essences, so essential to aroma and flavor.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee

The DALTON way is to throw the Coffee berries against an intensely hot flame. This roasts them in half the time and prevents the volatile essences being driven off. Then the Coffee is cooled by a special process, during which a strong suction air-blast blows off all foreign substances. Next comes the grinding, during which another powerful air-blast removes the poisonous, bitter outer shell. The Coffee contains absolutely no chicory and is packed in sealed tins, which preserve all the delightful flavor.

We make Dalton's French Drip Coffee in two strengths, Mild Blend and Strong Blend. You cannot tell however which you will like the best until you try both and that is why we ask you to buy two tins in our special offer.

The Quest of Gentle Hazard

Being the Adventures in Love and Chivalry of Lord Richard Jocelyn.—By H. M. Egbert

A Casual Champion

(Copyright, 1911, by W. G. Chapman.)

Lord Jocelyn yawned. He had chosen an unsuitable locality for this relaxation, being, in fact, upon the curb at the northeast corner of Forty-second street and Broadway at eight o'clock in the evening, and, in pausing to give vent to his feelings, he narrowly escaped being run down by a taxicab which skidded past, the wheel not five inches away. But the truth is he was horribly bored. He had not met with an adventure worth speaking of for several days and had decided to return home to his apartments on Madison avenue, play a game of solitaire and go to bed.

He had already arrived at this admirable decision when his attention was attracted toward a young woman of remarkable beauty who went hurrying past. Instinctively he turned—not, of course, with any design of addressing her or in any way molesting her, but to follow her with his eyes until she rounded the corner and was lost to view among the crowds of upper Broadway. For beauty was to Lord Jocelyn a lodestar that attracted him irresistibly, and the beauty of this particular young woman was as that of—a peach, let us say, among a basketful of nectarines.

And, then an incident occurred which changed all his intentions and resolutions. For, as she was about to round the corner, a flashily attired man, whom Lord Jocelyn had observed hurrying after her, caught up with her and planting himself in her path made some remark to her.

Lord Jocelyn felt his blood tingle. He saw the girl shrink back, saw the fellow pursue her with the evident intention of commencing a flirtation, and strode through the crowd in hot anger, an angel of avenging chivalry. A dozen steps and he was at her side.

"Is this fellow molesting you?" he asked, doffing his hat.

The girl raised her eyes to his appealingly, Lord Jocelyn swung round upon his heel and, as the first sneering words broke from the man's mouth, he let drive his fist with his full force and caught him between the eyes. The man fell like a log and, striking his head upon the curb, lay as though stunned. Before Jocelyn could guide his protege through the crowd that instantly assembled, a policeman was at his side. He looked at Jocelyn's evening attire, then at the rough clothing of the fellow, whose consciousness was slowly returning.

"No need to explain, sir; I saw the whole business," he said. "Giddup and come," he added, addressing the street loafer. "Station house for yours."

"Do you want me to come with you as a witness?" asked Jocelyn.

"No need of that, sir," answered the policeman. "I'll take your name, and that of the lady's, and you can be at the Jefferson Market court at ten tomorrow morning."

"My name's Jocelyn," said the involuntary hero of the episode, adding his address. "And this lady is—"

"Miss Murray—Clara Murray, 462 West Ninety-first street," said the lady promptly.

The policeman noted down these facts in his pocketbook, keeping one eye warily upon the ruffian, who was now rising to his feet and looking round him with a dazed expression. He snapped the book shut and jerked him to his feet. Then the man seemed suddenly to realise his predicament.

"Lemme go!" he shouted, struggling in his captor's grasp. "I gotter speak to the lady—I will speak to her—"

He fought himself free and, with a blow of surprising force, sent the policeman reeling backward. The latter, recovering his balance, drew his club and brought it down with his full force upon the man's head. For the second time he dropped.

Meanwhile, catching the young woman by the arm, Lord Jocelyn forced his way through the crowd to a street car, which they boarded.

"You must let me see you to your home," he insisted. "Ninety-first street is not far out of my way, Miss Murray."

She turned on him a look of intense scrutiny. Then she faltered:

"I don't live there. I gave that address to the policeman, but I live in Fifty-first street. And here's where we get off," she continued, a moment later.

And, when they were on terra firma again, she added:

"And here is where we part, Mr.—Joatling?"

Lord Jocelyn bowed. "But I must at least insist on being permitted to accompany you to your door," he protested. "Really the streets are not safe for you—on account of your attractions," he was going to add, but decided that the acquaintance was too short to permit of such an expression.

She hesitated for an instant. "Well, come along, then," she said, finally, and led the way along a deserted street to a small, old-fashioned house. Drawing a key from her wrist bag she unlocked the door.

"Why, it's all dark," she said, peering into the vestibule. "Alf isn't home yet. Mister Joatling, I don't want to send you away empty—would you like a glass of wine before you go?"

"I should, immensely," answered Lord Jocelyn, wondering who Alf might be and what relationship he bore to Miss Murray.

"Then you shall have one," the girl answered, leading the way into a dark parlor and lighting a gas jet. She produced wine and glasses from a cupboard, and filled them. "Here's to—to—" she said, laughing.

"To our meeting at the police court tomorrow morning," answered Lord Jocelyn, draining his glass and looking round at the well-furnished but rather gaudy room.

The next moment they heard the sound of a key in the lock of the front door. Its effect upon the girl was electrical. She set down her glass with trembling hands, and looked round her in terror. "O, what shall I do? What will you say?" she gasped. "It's Alf and he'll kill you. He'll kill you, Mr. Joatling. Quick, hide! Anywhere!"

But before Jocelyn could even look round for a refuge a man, heavily built, and having unmistakably the appearance of a prize-fighter, came striding into the room. At the sight of Jocelyn his brows contracted into a scowl and he clenched his fists menacingly.

"Who—who the devil—" he began.

"It's Jake, Jake McGee," cried the girl desperately, looking at Jocelyn sidewise.

The man's brow cleared as if by magic. He strode forward and clenched Jocelyn's hands in a grip that nearly crushed them.

"I'm glad as thunder to meet you, Mr. McGee," he said. "How did you find the house?"

"He got the address from Barney," said the girl promptly. "He just came in a second before you did."

"Just in from Chicago, eh?"

"Last night," said the young woman promptly.

"You know we've changed the meeting place?" said the man, turning to Jocelyn. "It's ticklish work, but I think we've outwitted the cops for once. But if you hadn't struck Barney, why I don't know how we'd have got word to you. The inspector swears it won't be pulled off—but he doesn't know we've got Bill's stable on Thirty-second street."

"O, that's where it is?" asked Jocelyn, feeling his way in the dark.

"Sure. Didn't Barney tell you? He must have been crazy. You won't feel strange, McGee, seeing you'll have to introduce yourself?"

"I suppose there was no other way" Lord Jocelyn answered.

"Well, let's have a whisky and talk things over," said the man, bringing out more glasses and a bottle of Scotch. "Sit down. You stay here, Lizzie; you're in on this deal. Where did you get that English accent, friend?"

"I've just come back from a six months' visit to London," said Jocelyn, watching the girl intently for some cue.

The other poked him in the ribs. "Quit joshing and come to business," he said. "You've bin back a whole year now and you've had time to get rid of it. Honest, McGee, you mean business, don't you? I'd hate like thunder to hurt you, and I'm in the pink of form," he added, frowning at his huge wrists.

"I certainly do mean business," answered Lord Jocelyn.

"Then don't try any monkey games, or it'll be the worse for you. It's a couple of thousand apiece, share and share alike, and you're to drop in the third."

"So I understand," answered Lord Jocelyn, still without a glimmer of understanding.

"Then here's luck to both of us," answered the man, becoming suddenly hilarious. "Barney said I was a fool to do it—said I could whip you easy and take the whole amount, and from the looks of you I guess he's right; but Alf Orme never went back on a deal yet and he ain't going to begin. Here's how!" And he drained his glass, an example which Jocelyn followed. Then he rose to his feet.

"I'll have to be going," he said, apprehensive that Orme might attempt to detain him. But to his surprise the latter agreed.

"Best thing you can do," he answered. "Turn in and get a good night's sleep. And remember, Jake, eight-thirty to the minute at the stable, and go in through the back of the saloon on the other side of the block."

He shook him by the hand, but this time Lord Jocelyn was prepared and returned the grip hard enough to make Alf Orme wince. As he passed out of the door the woman followed him.

"You'll be there?" she whispered in an agitated voice. "You won't go back on me?"

"Not if you wish," answered Lord Jocelyn, more mystified than ever. "What is it?" he added. "A gambling game?"

"Gambling game?" she repeated scornfully. "No, a prize fight. And you're Jake McGee and you're going to meet Alf Orme for a purse of four thousand dollars."

Lord Jocelyn felt decidedly foolish at that moment.

"But—won't they know I'm not McGee?" he faltered.

"Not on your life. It's your first visit to town, and you were unknown until you beat the Blarney Kid in Chicago last month and made a reputation. Nobody here has seen you, and this thing's got to be kept mute as the grave because the police have got wind of it. Say," she continued, grasping him by the arm, "you won't throw me down? Heavens, if Alf learns you aren't McGee he'll kill me sure."

"But what'll I do if the real McGee turns up?"

"He may not learn that the place has been changed. We've got to take chances. If he comes, bluff it out. At the worst you'll clear me all right if only you show up. Alf'll think I was deceived like him. But you've got to be there. Promise me?"

"I promise," answered Jocelyn solemnly; and he passed out of the house and took a taxicab home. Then, since his mind was in a whirl, and he had to meet Alf Orme upon the morrow, he went to bed and was soon wrapped in dreams.

He awoke at nine o'clock, but for several moments he could not quite recall what had happened on the preceding evening. Then as memory slowly came back to him he sat on the edge of his couch and groaned.

"First I've got to give evidence in the police court," he muttered. "And then I've got to fight for four thousand dollars, and run the risk of being half killed as a 'faker,' even if I don't give myself away." He felt the muscles of his arms and took several imaginary punches at the air. At college Lord Jocelyn had been a famous boxer; he was not really afraid of the battle, though his chances of winning seemed infinitesimal. Something else was troubling him, but for a minute he could not discover what it was. Then the recollection came to him, and he groaned out loud.

"And she's married," he cried, in a voice that was half a sob. "She's Alf Orme's wife."

There came a tap at the door and the face of Talbot, his servant, appeared, peering round the jamb. "Did you call, sir?" he asked. "I thought I heard a sound."

"No—yes," Lord Jocelyn answered. "Talbot, what would you do if you made an ass of yourself for a girl and then found that she was somebody else's wife?"

"I'd clear out, sir," answered Talbot. "There was a young woman as lived down Epsom way—"

"Drat your young woman, Talbot. I can't clear out. The police have my address."

"Then, sir, I'd see the thing through," said Talbot sagely.

"You're right, by George," his master answered. "Talbot, my dressing gown. And look alive; I've got to be bathed and dressed in 30 minutes."

"Which you shall be, sir," Talbot replied—and proved his contention.

But the young woman was not at the police court. The case came on at eleven, and her aggressor, now very much the victim, came into the dock a miserable object, his head swathed in bandages. Briefly, Lord Jocelyn gave his evidence, which corroborated that of the policeman.

"Where's the young woman in the case?" the magistrate asked.

"Can't be found, your honor," the policeman answered. "And she don't live at the address she gave."

"Where does the young woman live?" asked the magistrate, turning a suspicious gaze on Jocelyn.

"Your honor, I never saw her in my life before last evening," he answered.

"And the prisoner don't live at the address he gave neither," the policeman continued.

"Well, what have you to say?" the magistrate asked the prisoner, who had been scowling at Jocelyn vindictively. "Why did you stop that woman?"

"I wanted to talk to the lady," he answered sullenly. "I knew her an' I wanted to talk business."

"Then you will tell us where she is to be found."

"That's what I wanted to ask her," the prisoner shouted excitedly. "It's an outrage to knock me down and club me. Why, I could settle both them guys with one hand tied. I—" He broke off and turned a glance upon Jocelyn in which hatred and fury were equally combined.

"Three days in the workhouse," said the magistrate. "Next case." And the man was hustled away, growling and shaking his fists at Jocelyn vindictively.

This part of his duty concluded, Lord Jocelyn walked out of the court-room moodily. This was only an incident; the hardest part would fall to his lot that evening. A dozen times the plan flashed through his mind not to go, but he dismissed it on each occasion as an unworthy one. If he did not appear Orme's suspicions against his wife would be reawakened, with what consequences he could not foresee. But it was better that he should continue with his deceptions now than prove perhaps the innocent cause of a tragedy. He knew that he could render a fairly good account of himself with his fists, even though his chances of victory were remote ones; furthermore, he had the Englishman's dislike of shirking an undertaking once begun.

"I wish the silly business were over," he growled, as he entered his apartment.

"Pardon me, sir—a letter," said Talbot, handing him a missive on a salver. Lord Jocelyn took it and broke the envelope. Inside he found a scrawl signed "Elizabeth Orme."

"Forgive me for writing," it said, "but I remembered the address you gave the policeman last night, and I implore you, as the gentleman I know you are, not to turn me down. Alf was drinking last night and grew suspicious. He doubted you were McGee. He hasn't trained, and if you'll only be brave you can put up a good appearance before he knocks you out in the third."

Lord Jocelyn tore the letter to pieces and laughed.

"I wouldn't go down in the third if I were standing up to Johnson himself," he said; and, with the words, a new spirit entered his breast. He would fight, not merely to keep up appearances, but to conquer.

Punctually at the time appointed he made his appearance at the saloon door, and pushing aside the janitor without a word passed through a maze of passages into an anteroom, the office of the stable, in which he found a number of men clustered together. Among them was Alf Orme, in fighting attire, reclining in a chair, while his second rubbed his limbs. When he saw Jocelyn he bounded out of his chair in delight.

"Here's Jake, boys," he shouted. "Good old Jake, I knew you'd make it. Mr. Barney Jones—Mr. McGee. Barney's your second and you'll find him Al. Come, get your togs off."

Lord Jocelyn stripped and assumed his fighting gear, while Barney looked at him in approval.

"You'll last three rounds," he said, approvingly. "Tell you what, boy, I shouldn't be surprised if you couldn't whip him if you wanted to."

"Hello, Jake, me boy," put in a man in a silk hat, evidently the master of the ceremonies, who had just entered. "Glad to meet you," he said, grasping his hand warmly. "Say, Jake, you don't look as if you'd done much work with them mitts," he added, looking with disapproval at Jocelyn's well-manicured hands.

"He'll do," said Barney. "Jake's the dude all right. How's the house?"

"Fine," said the manager. "Full up and no standing room. Ready, boys? Time, gentles—in with you."

Jocelyn arose lightly out of his chair and followed Orme into a large circular stable, already hazy with tobacco smoke, through which he could dimly descry row upon row of heads surrounding the dais on which he trod. Men were shouting and yelling to him and his opponent from behind the ropes.

"Remember," whispered Barney in his ear, "you fall in the third."

"Unless he falls in the tenth," said Jocelyn, laughing.

Barney stared at him, then nudged him in the ribs. "Go 'long with you, kid," he said. "See here, you'll play fair? The boys would kill you if you didn't, Bo."

"I certainly shall," said Jocelyn; and a moment later he found himself confronting Alf Orme across the ring.

"Time, boys," shouted the manager, dancing around inside the ropes. Jocelyn advanced to meet his adversary, felt his hand grasped, and, an instant later, went staggering back under a violent body blow which propelled him against the ropes. As he hung over them for an instant he heard yells of delight from the crowd. "That's sharp practice," he muttered, setting his teeth angrily, and ducked just in time to escape a knockout blow which Orme aimed at his jaw. He dodged under Orme's arm and regained the center of the ring, where he parried several more vicious thrusts until his breath came back to him. Then the round ended and he was led back to his seat.

"You'll have to show more fight," whispered Barney, "or they'll think something's crooked. Go into him, Bo. Soak him in the ribs with that right of yours. Time—time."

And now Jocelyn, recovered, faced his enemy with something of the confidence that he had felt at college on many an occasion when, the novelty and stage-fright wearing off, he had aroused enthusiastic plaudits with his science and skill. Orme was fighting viciously, but his blows were wild and his muscles sluggish. Toward the end of the round Jocelyn saw an opening and lunged. He felt his fist thud into Orme's flesh, realized that his adversary was out of training, and found himself standing over a prostrate man, while the crowd howled and yelled.

"Say, that was a good punch all right," Barney whispered as he fanned him. "You drop this time—remember! He'll hit you in the jaw and you take the count—see?"

Jocelyn laughed at the prediction, for he knew now that he was going to win. Orme came up puffing like a motor and there was no force in his blows. As he drove for Jocelyn's chin the latter fell upon him with the force of a cyclone. Thud, thud, thud, the blows fell right and left upon his antagonist. Orme staggered back to the ropes, hung there a moment, facing Jocelyn with an expression of astonishment and injury, and slowly rose to receive a blow upon the point of the jaw delivered with all the victor's strength. Alf Orme fell backward and lay with closed eyes like one dead.

The manager bent over him. "One—two—three," he counted, and Orme lay still. "Four—five—six—seven," he continued. Orme's second was dancing round him, screeching at him to rise. Slowly Orme's eyes unclosed. He stared up at the faces vacantly, and the audience shouted itself wild.

"Eight," said the manager. "Nine." There was an almost imperceptible pause. "Ten. I declare Jake McGee the winner."

And Jocelyn, standing in the center of the ring, was suddenly overwhelmed by his admirers, who burst through the ropes and crowded round him. "Good boy, Jake, bully for you," they shouted. "You got him good. Three cheers for Jaky McGee."

Jocelyn forced his way through to the dressing room, sponged himself and began to put on his clothes. His second seemed to have deserted him. But, as he was completing his toilet, the manager came up, looking black as thunder, and flung a purse into Lord Jocelyn's lap. "Here's your money," he growled. "If you got what was coming to you—"

Lord Jocelyn looked at him inquiringly. "Anything wrong?" he asked.

"Anything wrong?" the manager echoed. "O, no. I'm only ruined, that's all, and serves me right. Ask Barney here."

Barney, white as a sheet, came up to him and shook his fist in his face. "You damned cur," he howled, almost weeping with rage. "To sell us all out like that! To sell us out—and Alf untrained, and as true a man as ever breathed. You got to face Mrs. Orme before you quit, you loafer. If you're ready you can git, and let me tell you your fighting days are over."

Jocelyn, too astounded by this tirade to answer, stepped through the door—into the arms of Mrs. Orme.

"So this is how you keep your word to your friends, is it?" she sneered. "Cheap way to make a little bit more, isn't it? And Alf and me with the rent to pay and every coin gone through trusting you."

"Madam," said Jocelyn, "I am wholly at a loss to understand you. Do you suppose that I came here to fight for the pleasure of it, or to oblige you?"

"You robber!" she hissed. "Didn't you know you were fixed to lose? Didn't I hear Alf tell you himself and you say you'd play fair? And that was to have meant two thousand to us, and Alf not to trouble to train; and you've bin and trained and hogged the whole kitty."

Then for the first time Jocelyn understood the meaning of Barney's insinuations about the third round. He drew the purse from his pocket. Inside he found eight bills of the value of five hundred dollars apiece.

"Madam," he said, "let me assure you that the whole thing was a misunderstanding." He counted out four bills. "Here is your share," he said, and thrust them into her hand. Then, while she stood stared open-mouthed at him and at the bills alternately, he made his way into the street, eluding the mob that sought to follow him, and made his way home.

"That'll keep me going for a few days," he said, putting the remainder of his winnings away. "And now for a game of solitaire before I go to bed."

Jocelyn was so stiff the next day that he kept to his bed. On the second he was limping around his room. The unwonted exercise of the muscles, disused for several years, had painfully affected him, and he was grateful enough to be able to prop himself up in his chair and play solitaire. By the third evening, however, he was sufficiently recovered to think of taking a stroll, and he had just found his cane and hat when there came a ring at his bell.

"There's a man wants to see you, sir," said Talbot, entering. "Looks like a tramp. Shall I say you're not at home, sir?"

"Why, I love tramps," answered Lord Jocelyn. "Ask him in by all means." And presently there entered, dirty, unshaven, bedraggled, the man whom he had knocked down and afterward seen sentenced to the workhouse.

"Sit down, sir," Jocelyn said, handing him a chair. "To what am I indebted for the honor of this visit?"

"Aw, don't hand me none of that," his visitor growled. "You put the job through on me and I ain't got no more to say about it. What I want is Lizzie Orme's address."

"If you mean the lady whom you so grossly insulted the other evening," said Lord Jocelyn, "I certainly shall not give it to you unless you can show just cause."

"Just cause!" shouted his visitor indignantly. "What? Me just in from Chicago, and not knowing where to find no one, and sighting Liz in the street—and then to get knocked down in the gutter by a guy as I could settle with one hand behind me back? Ain't that just cause? If I hadn't have seen her and recognized her from her photograft, I'd a trod the streets till Doomsday and never known where the fight was to be pulled off."

"Your name?" gasped Jocelyn.

"Is Jake McGee, if it's any satisfaction to you," answered the man.

Jocelyn arose and went to his desk. Unlocking a drawer he pulled out four bills of the value of five hundred dollars apiece and thrust them into his visitor's hand.

"Her address is 666 Fifty-first street," he said, "and she will tell you why these belong to you. Don't say a word, please," he continued, urging his visitor out. He closed the door on him and then turned back and opened it. McGee was standing in a sort of trance at the head of the stairs. "Tell Mrs. Orme I'm through with all of you and I don't want to see you again," he said. "Now, in the expressive vernacular of this country, beat it."

And McGee obeyed.

Lord Jocelyn stretched himself out upon his lounge and yawned.

"I certainly did spend that four thousand quickly," he said, groaning as the cramp seized his aching limbs. "No more adventures in the lower world for me. Talbot! Bring me a whisky and soda and a new bottle of liniment!"

WILL RUN IN THE FAMILY

Boy Gently Breaks to Father the News of His Expulsion From School.

"That boy will be the death of me some day!" declared the head of the family. "I'm sure I don't know where he gets all his impudence and self-assurance—surely not from me. He returned home from school the other day to spend the holidays, as I supposed, and, entering my office, he threw his hat on the floor, selected an easy-chair, put his feet on my desk, lit a cigarette, inhaled a few puffs, and then, turning languidly to me, he drawled:

"'I say, dad, do you remember the time when you were expelled from school?'

"I did. There was no use denying it, for one day in a burst of confidence I had told him some of my escapades as a boy, and lived to regret that I had been so indiscreet.

"'Well,' said he, 'that's the case repeated. Read.'

"'What do you mean, you rascal?' I roared.

"'Oh,' said he, easily, I've been expelled, too. Astonishing, isn't it, dad, how such things will run in a family?'

Women Behind It All

"There is a woman behind every get-rich-quick scheme," was the old theory on which the postoffice inspectors worked in gathering evidence against the hundreds of enterprises of that kind which they have investigated in recent years. But they looked for woman as a motive, an unconscious inspiration to the men who acquired money fraudulently, to lavish it on the fair sex.

Though the theory stands good still, to-day "cherche la femme" has a new and added meaning in the postoffice inspectors' work on get-rich-quick schemes, some women have become the brains of such enterprises, originators of new schemes, leaders of men, managers and promoters.

And where they do not lead, they have often become an important factor in carrying out the game.

Pretty, fashionably dressed women give an atmosphere of refinement to the sumptuous offices of the get-rich-quick man; they attract customers of both sexes, allay suspicions and create that feeling of unbounded confidence on which the enterprise thrives.

"I am sorry to say that conditions have changed and we are compelled to approach woman with the same suspicion as we do men," said Chief W. W. Dickson, head of the New York postoffice inspectors, the other day. "Formerly we looked for women behind get-rich-quick schemes because a study of them helped us in laying our plans for the investigation, without giving a warning to the men involved.

"Later we found that many women had become the chief aids of men in fleecing credulous investors, but it must be admitted that most of them were convinced that the enterprise was perfectly legitimate. In many instances, even after an exposure of the men, the women who had worked for them retained a firm belief in the integrity of their employers, and their loyalty remained unshaken.

"These cases of women who have originated get-rich-quick schemes and conducted them with an ability equal to the ablest men in the game, have come up quite recently, and caused considerable surprise to us. The fact that a woman was the brains of the concern remained hidden from the public. In all the cases we had these women selected a man for the presidency of the company, or had a dummy to manage the office. But every thing was done under the woman's direction and close supervision, and no man would be as jealous of his control in every detail of business as these women are.

"The lesson has come home to us and from now on we will have to treat women in the same manner we are treating men. We have to regard them as being as capable of fraud as we know men to be who are out after easy wealth, and woman will from now on not escape a close investigation as to her knowledge and intent to defraud merely because she belong to the fair sex.

The distinction of being considered the ablest get-rich-quick woman fell recently upon Mary L. Dugan, who was indicted by the federal grand jury for using the mails in a scheme to defraud investors through sales of worthless stock in the Manhattan Real Estate Company.

"We have come across many women who have been able aids of get-rich-quick swindlers, but Mary Dugan outshines them all in ability," was the opinion of Inspector Barber who investigated the case. "She was the originator of the scheme and its manager, and though Herron Bayley was president of the company, and Miss Dugan acted only as its secretary and treasurer, she supervised every detail of the business, and it was her ability that brought hundreds of thousands of dollars to her and her associates. From my investigation of the books it appears that Miss Dugan cleared at least $500,000 before she departed from this city to unknown parts."

The career of Miss Dugan, as described by postoffice inspectors was a very picturesque one. She is a woman about thirty years old, with a pleasant smile that inspires confidence, a persuasive talker, equally successful with men and women. Dressed in the most fashionable, yet dignified manner, her presence in the tastefully and richly furnished offices of the Manhattan Real Estate Company gave that office the stamp of respectability and integrity. Investors to whom she spoke went away with an impression that fate had been unkind to them in not providing an earlier opportunity for their meeting Miss Dugan.

Miss Dugan came to the United States from Canada about ten years ago. Her work as a stenographer did not satisfy her longing for quick wealth, and after a year she decided that New York was the proper stage for her activity and that real estate offered better possibilities than any other work.

She made her bow to the business world of the metropolis as a real estate broker, with offices at No. 9 West 116th street. The business failed, however, to bring satisfactory returns to Miss Dugan, though her prosperity might have satisfied many a business man. The Goldfield craze came about that time, and she decided to go to Nevada to try her fortune in prospecting. It was at Goldfield that she met Herron Bayley, who had gone there from Salt Lake City in search of gold. They came to New York together, equipped with some capital, and in 1907 Miss Dugan launched the Manhattan Real Estate Company, making Bayley president of the company. But her friend was a figurehead only, and whoever wanted to speak to him in the offices of the company was informed by the smiling Miss Dugan that he would have to see him in her presence.

Miss Dugan lived in an expensively furnished apartment at No. 207 West 110th street, and C. A. Dugan whose description answers that of Herron Bayley, had an apartment in the same house, while Bayley's wife and two children lived in a different part of the city.

Clever as the scheme was of selling stock in a real estate company that possessed practically no land, because all of its holdings were mortgaged to the limit. Miss Dugan showed her great cleverness in disappearing from New York a day before the postoffice inspectors made their raid on the offices of the company. She announced that she was going on an automobile tour and taking her friend Bayley with her, they departed, and have not been heard of since.

Another woman adept at parting the credulous from their money was Frances J. McLean, who was convicted of using the mails to defraud, but escaped with a suspended sentence on account of her sex. Her game was selling stocks in various "corporations." A fake tipping bureau brought hundreds of customers, who were first approached by cleverly written personal letters. A "sucker" list purchased from a concern engaged in another swindling scheme provided Miss McLean with addresses.

The sales of stock by her were one-sided, however. The customer paid his cash, but never received his stock, and as soon as the ground became too hot Miss McLean changed her address and, establishing a new office under a different name, began to sell stocks in corporations which she had not used before. In this case, too, a man was put forward by the woman to serve as a dummy. Thomas O'Connor figured as the head of the various offices started by Miss McLean, though in fact, his activity was entirely directed by her. He landed in the penitentiary.

One of the most striking women in the game of swindling investors was a handsome young woman who was convicted some time ago for frauds in connection with various enterprises the last of which was run under the name of J. Fulton Rodgers.

"It would mean a great hardship to this woman to publish her name again," said Inspector Elmer L. Kincaid, who obtained the evidence on which the woman was convicted.

"Her sentence was suspended, though her accomplice, a man, was sent to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta.

"Of all the women I have known in connection with the get-rich-quick schemes, she was the smartest and most resourceful girls. She planned every move and her knowledge of business and of men and women brought instantaneous success.

"Her experience in court, however, opened her eyes, and the mind, formerly applied to fraudulent schemes that would have mulcted thousands of people if we had not exposed her, has now been directed toward legitimate business. We have had occasion to investigate her business very recently, and although we found it highly prosperous, there was not the least indication that her present methods were not absolutely honest."

This women Inspector Kincaid said, had found life hard during the two years following her conviction. She had to change her employment many times because her past became known to her employers through people who had no faith in her reform. But she kept on, and her main effort was to procure a pardon for her associate, who was then in the Atlanta prison. As soon as he was released they married and started out to build up a business of their own.

"As a result, this couple kept coming to us every few weeks asking for protection against this persecution, and we did all in our power to encourage the young woman and her husband in their endeavors to keep on making their living in a legitimate way."

Woman's part in the get-rich-quick game is as varied as the whims of an artistic temperament. In many cases her instinctive perception of the wrong in the scheme has saved men from continuing their connection with questionable enterprises. All was due to a woman's influence that Nat C. Goodwin, the actor, according to Reno gossip, withdrew from the Nat C. Goodwin Company, which promoted mining stocks.

George Graham Rice, now on trial for using the mails to defraud, induced Mr. Goodwin in 1907 to lend his name to the promoting company. Mr. Goodwin himself says that Mr. Goodwin's connection with that company was one in name only, and though he received returns from the company, he did not know of its work. Edna Goodrich, Mrs. Goodwin No. 4, is said to have induced the actor to withdraw his name from the Nat C. Goodwin Company, which ceased to exist in 1909.

Marguerite Carlin, known on the stage as Marguerite Moran, is credited with considerable influence over the meteoric career of The Columbian Magazine, that foundered on the rocks of bankruptcy a short time ago, involving its officers in criminal proceedings. Joseph Brinton Haynes, who is alleged to be one of the chief offenders in wrecking The Columbian Magazine Publishing Company, is in Europe, and the post office inspectors believe that Miss Carlin is there also. Prior to his departure Brinton took as his share some $150,000 of the monies derived from the sale of stock in the magazine, is the charge made by the other officers of the magazine enterprise, who were arrested several weeks ago. Last year's October issue of The Columbian Magazine gave a full-page picture of Miss Carlin, predicting a wonderful operatic career for her.

The case of Jared Flagg, whose offices were raided in September, offers a striking illustration of woman's activity in the most up-to-date scheme for sudden acquisition of wealth. Flagg's promise of a return of 50 per cent on money intrusted to him was spread about town and country, by women who appear to have had implicit confidence in his honesty.

The custom of Flagg's office was to give a luncheon for his women customers and friends at a fashionable restaurant uptown. It was a feast of joy, and all prospective investors were welcome. The women guests came away impressed and eager to bring with them next week friends who were willing to invest money safely and get 50 per cent interest on it. Flagg's office was filled with handsome young women, who did the clerical work, and Madeleine Russe, a 19-year-old girl, acted as his confidential secretary.

"Women connected with get-rich-quick schemes are often ignorant of their fraudulent character," is the opinion of Inspector Hugh McMillan, who has had many of these cases.

"But now and then we find one who aids the game with a perfectly clear knowledge of what it is. They quiet their consciences with the argument that their scheme is not worse than many practiced daily in business.

"A woman who aided her husband in a long-distance healing system, argued with me for hours that I had no right to interfere with their business. She admitted that they promised something they could never deliver, but she said a store advertising a silk petticoat for 89 cents also promised something it could not give at the price. Women's chief part is aiding swindlers, unconscious though it be in most cases. George H. Munroe, who netted millions through fraudulent stock sales, gave a $30,000 dinner at the Waldorf to attract women customers, and he gained a large clientele through lavish expenditure."

In this view Inspectors T. N. Reddy and C. E. Booth concur. "Pretty women in the offices of these swindlers attract customers," said Mr. Booth. "All of them employ women for this reason, and many are clever enough never to make a hint that the scheme is not legitimate.

"These women are loyal to their employers, and the last to believe that there is something wrong. It is hard to get information from them, and we have to be very diplomatic with them."—From the Lethbridge Daily Herald.

RHEUMATISM IN THE SYSTEM

SIX YEARS CURED IN SIX DAYS

TO MFRS. "NERVILINE."

"The suffering I endured for six years with Rheumatism is beyond description. Every time I was exposed to cold or dampness meant that I had to go to bed. My muscles stiffened, my joints swelled, and any attempt at exertion brought on excruciating twinges. The pain shifted from one part to another and I was scarcely ever free from misery and sleeplessness. I took all kinds of liquid medicines, but they nearly all depressed my heart and I had to stop them. Then I was told of the wonderful power of Nerviline.

Nerviline

"If Nerviline had been made specially for my case it couldn't have been more successful. It sank right into the core of the painful part, gave me ease, allowed me to sleep, gave me the use of my arms and limbs—in fact, made a new man of me. I urge all Rheumatics to use 'Nerviline.'

A. E. TRAYONER.
"Justice of the Peace, Lancaster."

The most wonderful pain-subduing substances in the world are in Nerviline—that's why it penetrates so quickly, why it instantly cures pain that other remedies don't even relieve. You'll be surprised how quickly sciatica, lumbago, or rheumatism are cured by Nerviline—seems almost magical the way it will cure a cold or sore throat. When the chest is sore and it hurts to draw a long breath, one rubbing with Nerviline is sufficient. So highly valued is Nerviline by those who use it, that many families consider it quite as good as a doctor for aches, pains, and minor ailments of every kind. HOW A MOTHER USED OXO IN CUBES

"How do I use up my stale bread? Why, with OXO Cubes. They taught me a new dish that perhaps other women, who keep house, would like to try.

"With two children in the house, it is only natural that there are many broken slices and ends of loaves that would accumulate.

I call my new dish Oxo Bread Pudding

"For four persons, I soak ¾ pound of bread to a pulp in boiling water—then drain. I chop 2 ounces of suet and a small onion, and stir into the bread. Season this with a teaspoonful of minced parsley, pepper and salt, and mix in a dessertspoonful of flour.

"Dissolve two OXO Cubes in a little boiling water and stir into the pudding. Turn into a greased mold, press down and bake brown in a moderate oven.

"I have found OXO Cubes wonderfully helpful in making Soups, Sauces and new dishes, and now I do not feel as if I could keep house without OXO Cubes. They are so handy".

THE RECLAMATION OF BONNIE

A TRUE STORY.

Just before the doctor, who rooms at my house, left for his regular week-end at his beach home, he rapped on my door and said:

"Miss Allen, you are not afraid of horses, are you?"

"Indeed not!" I snorted, indignant at the suggestion. "Why?"

"I've decided to sell Bonnie," he stated; firmly. "I've been feeding her for the last five years, and we don't use her once a month. You know my folks are afraid of her."

"Afraid of her," I echoed. "I thought she was such a pet."

"She is until you put a saddle on her or hitch her to a buggy."

"What happens then?"

"Oh, the mare is all right," he went on, hurriedly, ignoring my question. "They're not used to horses, that's all."

Flashes of past conversations regarding Bonnie's behaviour seeped into my brain. The desire to hear what he had to say kept me silent, however.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," he continued. "I'll bring her up from the beach Monday morning, and I'll advertise her for sale. You can show her to the people. I'll give you ten per cent if you sell her. The entire outfit, buggy, harness and saddle, will bring two hundred dollars."

That seemed fair. I decided to risk it, and before he left it was all arranged. I found a place in the block where I could rent a stable for a dollar a week.

Some time Sunday the telephone bell rang furiously. When I answered it, I found it was the doctor's sister-in-law.

"Oh, Miss Allen," she began, excitedly. "The doctor says he is going to drive Bonnie to the city tomorrow and you are going to sell her. For goodness sakes let me warn you not to try to drive that animal. Several years ago, the doctor's wife turned her directly into an automobile. The buggy was smashed, but somehow in the mix-up the horse escaped unhurt, but since then she is deathly afraid of them. She will run in an instant. She shies and backs and turns around short. In fact, my dear girl, you'll sign your own death warrant if you attempt to drive her in the city. We never try to use her out here, several miles in the country, even."

She talked steadily for fifteen minutes about the dangers of trying to use Bonnie. Then central cut us off. I was glad. Still I wanted to earn that twenty dollars. Then I wondered if I could sell her by riding her. The doctor had a fine cross saddle. I borrowed a divided skirt from a member of the Out West Riding Club.

Early Monday morning the doorbell rang. The doctor stood on the step. Bonnie was tied to a telegraph pole in front of the house. I got in the buggy and we drove to where I had engaged a place for her. I didn't try to take her out the next day, knowing that she would be stiff and sore from her long twenty-mile drive. The next day I rode her several miles along an unfrequented road. Nothing very terrible happened. Next day I grew bolder and we went down town. My reputation was made for a real wild, west rider before we came back. As we turned into our own block a small yellow car came snorting and puffing around the corner. We went home the rest of the way on two legs. Not mine, but Bonnie's hind ones. Ever since then people spoke of me and men raise their hats who never before knew I existed. So much does the world admire fearless horsemanship. That night the doctor inquired if I had driven her yet.

I evaded his question and said that I was waiting for him to drive her first. We hitched up the next night and drove down town. We had a dreadful time. I saw what was the trouble about the time we went up on the third sidewalk. He was afraid of her.

It was necessary that she should be newly shod if she were to be offered for sale. It fell upon me to drive her several miles that day. Every minute my eyes and hands were alert for some sudden lurch or plunge. I got home finally. I wasn't so much afraid the next day.

The doctor had especially forbidden me to take any children driving, but the rig was so pretty and the children so coaxing, well, every child for miles neighbourhood was surfeited with buggy rides during Bonnie's stay. Then I tried to show her to possible purchasers. But Bonnie didn't want to be sold. Her actions were terrifying. All the neighbours held their breath and hooked and farewells when we whizzed past the corners. But we always got home safely. Then I began to see light.

Bonnie was very sweet and gentle, and I decided to see what I could do with her. The very first thing I did was to take off the check-rein. She held her head very high naturally, so it did not seem that it was a curtain. But the first hill we climbed down went her head and Bonnie pulled. On level road up went her head. We went out into the country for long drives. Whenever I saw a specially tempting wisp of grass along the road, after I guided her toward it. Before long she was nibbling here and there. She was such a confirmed runaway, the doctor always tied her with double straps. When taking her around the neighbourhood, I used to stake her out on vacant lots, where the owners didn't object. I occasionally slipped the halter off. Bonnie followed me like a dog. Several times she broke the chain she was staked out with, but except for going over to get a drink where I generally watered her, she never strayed away.

I met an old lady one day, possibly four weeks after Bonnie's arrival.

"Did you get another horse?" she asked, politely. "This one looks so gentle."

"It is the same horse," I laughed.

Doubt and incredulity covered her face like a mantle.

"Then you must certainly be a witch," she proclaimed.

"No," I hastened to tell her, "I just tried to look at things from her viewpoint. I let her do the things I would want to do if I were the horse, and she were my driver. And she appreciates it."

"She certainly does," the old lady approved.

There isn't much more to say about Bonnie. The doctor's family came up her. They were delighted. To-day to the house. I took them out behind Bonnie is back in her luxurious home, the pet and pride of the family. A year has passed and her reform seems to be permanent. So it pays to be kind. I will always feel happy because I saved a really fine animal from becoming a city hack. — Mabel R. Allen, Alliance, Neb., in Our Dumb Animals.

HYPNOTISM

"The mysteries of hypnotism form one of the most entrancing studies in the world," said the long-haired man, who skilfully used his foot to keep Mrs. Curfew from shutting the door. "A knowledge of hypnotism is one of the most valuable acquirements, and this book I am selling should be in every home. It is by Prof. Dreampiper, the foremost authority on the subject, and any man of ordinary intelligence may become a proficient hypnotist by reading these pregnant pages."

"Perhaps you are not aware," replied Mrs. Curfew, bitterly, "that you are taking your life in your hand when you come to this house talking of your Prof. Pipedreamer and his book, for it was hypnotism that got my husband into serious trouble and nearly caused the severing of amicable relations with the family of Mr. Sparks, a gentleman whose friendship I prize highly, although his faculties have become unsettled as the result of his dealings with agents. Further, I may say that to make my husband run amuck it is only necessary to mention hypnotism."

"It was early in the fall that an agent came to this house selling a book on hypnotism, written by some professor who should have stuck to his barks and buds and healing herbs rather than write books calculated to desolate people's hearths and homes, as my younger daughter says, she being familiar with the poets. It happened that my husband had attended an entertainment a few nights before and had seen a hypnotist do wonderful things, and so he was easily inveigled into purchasing a copy of the book from that agent, who was a person of loathesome appearance, having a nose like a plowshare and eyes that didn't match, and I've always noticed that agents who go around pestering busy women have facial blemishes of one kind or another.

"Well, my husband bought the book and sat up night after night reading it, and then he began trying to hypnotise people, and he was a ridiculous spectacle, making passes with his hands and straining his eyes and muttering incantations. He tried to hypnotise me once and I really felt myself getting dizzy, and experienced a desire to go up on the roof of the house and dance, but I summoned my will power and hit Mr. Curfew over the head with a dishcloth and broke the spell.

"He didn't seem able to hypnotise anybody else, although he tried so hard that his nerves were ruined and he was most uncomfortable to live with, and then one day we went to town to see a big street parade, celebrating the founding of the place, Mr. Hankinson, the grocer, had invited us to take seats in his big front window, and there we found Mr. and Mrs. Sparks and their daughters. We women were looking out at the parade, which was truly magnificent, and paid no attention to what the men were doing, as I didn't know that my husband was hypnotising Mr. Sparks or I should have interfered. Mr. Sparks was easy to hypnotise, his intellect having been shaken by his dealings with agents, as I remarked in a previous chapter.

"There was a big steer tied in front of the meat market next door and you can imagine our emotions when we saw Mr. Sparks go up to that steer, untie the rope and then vault upon its back. Mr. Curfew had willed that he should do so, after hypnotising him. Well, it was simply ridiculous, the reactions that steer caused. It butted into the long line of citizens, throwing them in every direction with its horns, and all the time Mr. Sparks sat on the creature's back like a boy who stood on the burning deck, as born to rule the storm.

"When the trouble was over and the steer had vanished in the distance the street was full of wounded and groaning citizens and there was a talk of arming a rope and lynching Mr. Sparks, but wiser counsels prevailed. All the clocks were fifty Sparks and her daughters and others counting their hair and gnashing their teeth, and to this day they haven't recovered from the humiliation. For a long time they refused to speak to me or my husband.

"Now that we are on a friendly footing again, you come with your book trying to create further trouble. Go while the going is good!"

BRONCHITIS, Hoarseness, Throat Catarrh

Delightful Cure Discovered That Cures Quickly.

Old-fashioned remedies were administered through the stomach only, but as it is impossible to swallow anything into the lungs, little benefit ever resulted.

Strong drugs, such as opium, chlorodyne and cocaine, were resorted to, but did more harm than good.

Nowadays, when a doctor meets a case of catarrh — finds the throat filled with mucous—sore all the way down, he prescribes Catarrhosone because he knows it goes direct to the disease.

Catarrhosone cures by antiseptic balsams that are carried by the air you breathe direct to the source of the trouble.

It aids expectoration — clears away the phlegm—carries health-laden vapors to the sore, irritated tissues.

In one minute you experience decided relief with Catarrhosone and invariably it does cure every type of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Irritable throat and hoarseness.

Just think of it—a sure cure without nauseous drugs—one that is guaranteed and delightfully pleasant as well. Catarrhosone only, complete for two months' use, $1.00, smal (trial) size 50c. at all dealers.

DIRECTORS' REPORT

The Directors have much pleasure in submitting their Twenty-seventh Annual Report and balance sheet of the affairs of the Bank, as of the 30th December, 1911, together with Profit and Loss Account, showing the results of the operations of the Bank for the year which ended this day. The net profits of the Bank, after making full provision for all bad and doubtful debts, amount to $601,133.78, being 12.50% on the paid-up capital of the Bank, which has been applied as follows:

The net profits for the twelve months, after making provision for bad and doubtful debts, and reserving accrued interest, amount to	$601,133.78
Balance at credit of Profit and Loss last year	153,434.79

Dividend No. 61, quarterly, at the rate of 8% per annum	97,000.00
Dividend No. 62, quarterly, at the rate of 8% per annum	97,000.00
Dividend No. 63, quarterly, at the rate of 8% per annum	97,000.00
Transferred to Rest Account	200,000.00
Written off Bank Furniture	15,000.00
Transferred to Officers' Guarantee Fund	5,000.00

	$754,568.57

You will observe $200,000 has been added to Rest Account. The Rest Account is now $3,100,000, or about 51% of the subscribed and paid-up capital of the Bank.

The business of the Bank continues to grow most satisfactorily, as the comparative statement submitted shows. The deposits during the year have increased $4,193,698.29, and the circulation has increased $563,595.

The Head Office and all the Branches have been carefully inspected during the year, and a full report of each office brought in review before your Directors, and, in addition to these inspections, a Committee of the Directors, other than the officers, and composed of Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., Mr. W. J. Sheppard, Mr. C. S. Wilcox, and Mr. H. S. Strathy, was appointed to examine and appraise all the securities held at the Head Office, which they did, and reported to the Board that they are as represented to it.

The increase in Bank premises is partly accounted for by discharging the encumbrances which existed at the time of the purchase of Vancouver and Winnipeg properties, and partly by the purchase of the property immediately east of your Head Office Building, which was acquired at a reasonable figure, a portion of which will be used for the purposes of the Bank. This purchase will be of great advantage in protecting the lighting of the east side of the Head Office Building. Your Bank premises now comprise 34 separate buildings.

The Directors have much pleasure in testifying to the good work performed by the Staff during the period under review.

All of which is respectfully submitted. CHAS. D. WARREN, President.

TORONTO, 30th December, 1911. STUART STRATHY, General Manager.

The General Manager having read the statement and made explanatory remarks thereon, referred to the improved profits, which were $76,703.29 more than the year before. He also called attention to the growth of the Bank from its inception, which may be seen from the comparative statement appended to this report. In conclusion, he asked if any of the shareholders wished for further information regarding any of the items of the statement, upon which a general discussion ensued.

Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., explained the nature of the work done by the Committee referred to in the Report, and pointed out that the principle of checking the work of the Bank was carried out from the work of the juniors to the work of the General Manager.

On motion of the President, seconded by the Vice-President, the report was unanimously adopted.

The By-law governing the number of Directors was amended, increasing the number from seven to eight, and a By-law creating a Second Vice-President was passed.

The customary resolutions of thanks to the Directors and Officers were duly passed.

The election of the Directors was then proceeded with, and the Scrutineers reported the following gentlemen duly elected to act as Directors for the ensuing year, viz.: C. D. Warren, Hon. J. R. Stratton, C. Kloepfer (Guelph), W. J. Sheppard (Waubaushene), C. S. Wilcox (Hamilton), E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., H. S. Strathy, J. R. Tudhope (Orillia).

The meeting then adjourned.

OBJECTION TO BOARD OF HEALTH'S NEW ORDER RE CUTTING OF ICE

Citizens who use Large Amount of Ice for Refrigeration Purposes ask Permission to Cut Ice in Lake

M. H. O. TO INVESTIGATE

Mr. Wm. Scott, Ald. Gillespie and Mr. Gordon Logan of the Calcutt Brewing Company, waited on the Board of Health yesterday afternoon at a special meeting called to deal with objections offered by the Board as regards the prohibiting of the cutting of ice from the Little Lake, for their respective establishments. The whole Board were present, except Dr. Burnham, and Dr. Young presided.

Mr. Scott stated that ice was all he had to cool his plant, and if he was forced to bring it from up the river or lakes, it would be a great hardship, and he thought that as the ice did not come in contact with any of the goods on storage, the conditions would be thoroughly sanitary. He described the situation of his plant, explaining that the ice is put in refrigerators, and coils and nothing but the cold air from the coils could touch the goods. The dripping was drained off in another room, so that there was absolutely no danger.

Ald. Gillespie and Mr. Logan made similar statements in regard to their business, and considerable discussion followed. Some of the Board thought it would be all right to let these men use it, while others thought that would not be fair, and it was finally disposed of by a resolution being moved by the Mayor and unanimously supported by the members of the Board to the effect that in the cases of the men waiting on the Board and others in similar positions ,the Medical Health Officer investigate their application, and if, in his opinion, the manner of using the ice was sanitary, he could issue a permit allowing them to cut the ice, or authorize it to be cut in the Little Lake for the purpose represented to him.

The Chairman and Medical Health Officer will look into the present cases and also see Mr. Allin about other matters in connection with the subject and will report to the Board at an early date.

ILLUSTRATED Y. W. C. A. LECTURE

Our readers will be gratified to learn that next Friday evening Prof. Morison, of Queen's University, will deliver a lecture on "The Highlands of Scotland," under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A., in the Gymnasium hall. This distinguished historian, lecturer, and author, is an honour graduate of Glasgow and Oxford Universities, and has won preeminence by his profound scholarship, rare versatility and strong and ardent personality. The subject of this lecture lends itself with irresistible charm to Prof. Morison's simple naturalness of manner, which so attractively unites itself with high literary excellence, a deep insight into life and a delicate humour as subtle as it is pervasive. His broad sympathies and vital appreciation of the aspects of Nature he so vividly describes transports his listeners to the hills and lochs of bonnie Scotland. They see the beauty of crag and tarn and misty Trossachs; feel the breezes, smell the fragrant heather and relate themselves to the passionate loyalty of her people to their native land. The illustrations are few, but carefully selected to deepen the realities of description. No man or woman in our city can afford to miss this opportunity of hearing Prof. Morison.

THE WEATHER

Though it is a little more moderate in temperature to-day last night was again sharp. Five degrees below zero was the reading, and at seven o'clock this morning it was still at that figure.—W. P.

WIN SOME PRIZES

Peterborough Poultry Owners Did Well at the Lindsay Poultry Show This Week

WAS A BIG SUCCESS

Peterborough exhibitors met with considerable success at the Lindsay poultry show this week. With five entries in one class, Mr. J. J. Cunningham scored three firsts, a second and three specials and in other classes he also won prizes. Messrs. Jas. Baptie, Harry Lush, Geo. Buller and other exhibitors carried of a number of prizes and the showing of the local contingent was very gratifying. There were 850 entries and the competition in every class was very keen. Mr. John Bennett, who was judge at the Peterborough show had a similar occupation at Lindsay and gave every satisfaction.

NOTHING FOR PETERBORO'

O. H. A. Sub-committee Did Not Name Any Dates for Local Teams

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., JAN. 27.— The sub-committee of the Ontario Hockey Association met at noon to-day but did nothing affecting either Peterborough or Woodstock dates. The committee refused re-instatement to the Chatham team and ordered the Berlin-Waterloo game to be replayed at Berlin. The certificates of Kargea, of Berlin and Kergumaster of Waterloo, were cancelled.

MONSTER SEA SERPENT

A sea serpent, 100 feet long, has been seen, according to reports, in the St. Lawrence river, opposite the lighthouse at Pointe de Montes. Press despatches even go into the details of its length, girth, and terrifying appearance and the witnesses of the alleged monster even tell how its huge body appeared in undulations as it moved up the river. Possibly, a passage from the Aeneid was responsible for this new one. However, the story is of interest, from the fact that old residents of Peterborough recall the sea serpent that was said to have been seen in Rice Lake years ago. Imagine it. For a time considerable excitement was aroused by this story, which was unfounded, as is, no doubt, the present report of a sea monster in the St. Lawrence, rivalling, in dimensions, anything of prehistoric times.

Here is a remedy that will cure your cold. THE CONDITIONS MORE DANGEROUS IN PEKIN ATTEMPTS TO DYNAMITE IMPERIAL OFFICIALS

Several Escorts are Killed and Panic Ensued---Outrages Said to Have Been Carried on by Revolutionary Agents Who Are Determined to Force the Abdication of the Manchus Immediately.

Special to The Examiner:

PEKIN, CHINA, JAN. 27.—Conditions are getting more dangerous here every day. Two attempts to dynamite prominent imperial officials were made on city streets yesterday and to-day, and while the men aimed at in each case escaped with serious injuries, one general being perhaps fatally injured, several escorts were killed and injured and a panic created each time. It is believed that these outrages were fostered and carried out by young Chinamen revolutionary agents here, who some time ago hinted that there would be a campaign of dynamite unless the Manchus abdicated within a short time.

AGAINST HOME RULE

Demonstration Held in Winnipeg Last Night at Which Strong Resolution Was Passed

WILL RAISE $10,000

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, MAN., JAN. 27. — While the press was not admitted to the big anti-Home Rule demonstration in Scott Memorial Hall last night, there was a large attendance and a resolution was unanimously passed, "That the despicable attempt of Winston Churchill to speak in Ulster Hall, where his father, generations ago, fought against Home Rule, can only be provocative of strife and bloodshed." The meeting condemned the policy which allowed the cabinet ministers protection not afforded other speakers. Finally the meeting pledged itself to support financially and otherwise a campaign against Home Rule, being convinced that it was not in accord with the best interests of the Protestants in Ireland. It was stated that a ten thousand dollar fund would be raised in Winnipeg and the West.

Runaway On Hunter Street

Choosing Hunter street, near the post office, as the arena, a team of ponies belonging to Isaac Noble, gave one of those impromptu performances for which they are noted. They were frustrated din their attempts to run away, however by the prompt action of several passerby, augmented by the impediment of a heavy weight, which was attached to one of the horses. The team described a circle in a hair-raising style, causing the sleigh to which they were attached to come in violent contact with a grey team belonging to White Bros., which were standing on the opposite side of the road, cutting their legs badly, and also demoralizing traffic in general. Two men succeeded in swinging on to the bits of the horses at the risk of their lives, and after being dragged around in a circle a number of times, they succeeded in bringing them to a standstill.

Mr. Edward Garbutt of Smith, narrowly escape serious injury, being struck by the sleigh while attempting to stop the runaway. His injuries were not serious, however.

MEMBERS IN REVOLT

Quebec Representatives Insist Upon the Dismissal of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners

LEFT FOR HOME

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, JAN. 26.—It looks as if the smashing of the Government through internal dissensions is not an impossibility There is another revolution among its following.

This time it is not over a great question of principle, like the ne temere decree, which brought on the crisis on Monday, but over a sordid question of patronage.

For weeks the French members from Quebec have been pressing for the dismissal of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners. They have insisted that in spite of the fact that they are efficient they are Liberals, and must go because they are Liberals, and cannot be entrusted with the patronage of their positions.

The failure of the Government to act upon the suggestion of their Quebec following, they declare, has made them ridiculous and the laughing-stock of their districts.

To-day they declared that they would stand this no longer, and twenty-two of them packed their grips and left for home this afternoon, with the announcement that they would not be seen in the Commons again supporting the Government until the Liberal Harbour Commissioners of Montreal were dismissed.

It is understood that the twenty-two French members from the Montreal districts have taken this action, with the approval of Hon. F. D. Monk, Minister of Public Works, who has been pressing for a change on the Harbour Board.

Being a Minister, he has not joined the revolt, but it is said to have his approval.

It is expected that Hon. L. P. Pelletier will endeavour to bring the parties together again, and that he will suggest as a compromise that Commissioners Ballantyne and Geoffrion be dismissed, and that Chairman Stephens be continued.

The revolt was determined upon at midday and created great excitement in the lobbies.

NEW COMERS WERE MANY

Between Five and Six Hundred Immigrants Were Dealt With by Mr. Howson During Last Year

INTERESTING FIGURES

Between five and six hundred immigrants passed through Immigration Officer Howson's hands during the year 1911. This is considerably in excess of the previous year. "Little difficulty was experienced in placing them," said Mr. Howson to the Examiner, as the demand for help of all kinds was exceptionally good, and the wages high.

Mr. Howson anticipates a big influx of immigrants within the next six or eight weeks, and believes that this year's immigration figures will break all records.

The percentage of those who have failed to make good is surprisingly small, continued the officer, which goes to show that the rules and regulations governing the immigration authorities at the various ports of entry are being enforced, and as a result only better class of immigrants are permitted to come through.

"Marie" New Haggard Book

"Marie," by Sir H Rider Haggard. In his latest work, this famous author has recorded the first love-story of Allan Quartermain. The plot is laid in South Africa at the time of the great Boer Trek from Cape Colony to the Transvaal, and, as may be expected, the story sets out many perilous incidents encountered. Dealing, principally with the adventures of Marie's family, who took part in the trek this earlier portion of Allan Quartermain's autobiography describes the terrible hardships from fever and starvation, suffered by those Boers, who wandered into the neighbourhood of Delagoa Bay, and includes a thrilling account of the Massacre of Commandant Retief and his sixty followers by Dignaan, the Zulu King. Our readers will remember that Mr. Haggard received his knighthood at the beginning of this year. Marie is published by Cassell & Co., and is for sale wherever books are sold, at $1 25

DR. PORTER'S LECTURE ON TUBERCULOSIS HERE NEXT TUESDAY WILL BE OF GREAT BENEFIT

The Secretary, Dr. George D. Porter, is to address a public meeting upon this subject in the Collegiate Institute on Tuesday evening, Jan. 30, at 8 o'clock under the aspices of hte Peterborough Health Association.

Dr. Porter has addressed large meetings from one end of Canada to the other, and everywhere the press speaks very highly of his lectures. The experiences of his own life have peculiarly fitted him for this work, while his platform ability is of a high order.

He is a talented speaker, and presents this important subject in a popular and most attractive manner.

As this subject is one touching the health of all, and as the lecture is free to the public. The Examiner trusts that there will be a full house on Tuesday evening.

AN EXPLANATION OF AN EXPLANATION

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—While you are at liberty to criticise me fairly, you are not at liberty to do so unfairly and I must ask you to publish this letter in which I wish to point out that the parenthetical "explanations" put into the quotation referring to me from The Mail and Empire in The Examiner of Thursday last, page 7, were put in by yourself and were not in the original.

I wired The Mail to-day respecting it and they have authorized me to follow it up if necessary. I trust that anything further than this letter will not be necessary, which you will be good enough to publish in as prominent a place as the misquotation referred to and at once.

Yours truly,
J. H. BURNHAM.

Note.—The above letter is willingly printed. Its publication serves two purposes. It affords an opportunity to repel the writer's imputation of unfair criticism. The "parenthetical explanations" were inserted by the Examiner, and were and would be, understood by any body. Mr. Burnham's experience in the editor's chair should have shown him that words inserted within parentheses are intended to be explanatory of the text, are recognized interpolations that do not belong to the text. They serve the same purposes as asterisks and foot notes or other comment following the text, and do no more injustice in the case in question than any other form of comment. If Mr. Burnham "wired the Mail to-day," he wasted good money and raised a companion laugh on the Mail editor's face to the general laugh, that greeted his straddle-the-fence in the House on the Ne Temere decree, an evidence that he leaves all his brave talk and high resolves at home—talks one thing at home and talks and votes to the contrary in the very place he could show sincerity, and stand for what he advocated at home, instead of betraying the trust upon which he gained support. The "parenthetical explanations" admittedly inserted by the Examiner, themselves require no explanation. They were explanations, in a word, of the double dealing and duplicity of Mr. Burnham, of his double dealing with his constituents, in the matter of the Ne Temere decree, how he took one position before the election, when he could do nothing but talk, and when he had the power to try to carry out by his vote what he had been contending for on the stump, he turned tail and took an exactly contradictory position. A man that runs straight won't move in a circle.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

SATURDAY, JAN. 27, 1912

AN EXCELLENT RECORD.

The twenty-seventh annual report of the Toronto Savings and Loan Company, held yesterday, at the Company's office, 437 George street, signalized another prosperous year for a thriving financial institution. The net earnings for the year, together with the balance carried forward, provided a total sum for distribution of $186,421.15. This was employed to pay dividends to the amount of $100,000, at the very satisfactory rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The sum of $40,000 added to the Reserve Fund, brings the total of this account up to $760,000, which is 76 per cent, of the paid-up capital. This disposition left $46,421.15, to be placed to the credit of Profit and Loss account. During the year the assets increased about a quarter of a million, bringing the total of assets up to the important figure of $3,580,549.41. This substantial strengthening of the stability of the Company, together with a generally prosperous condition of the Company's interests, combine to reflect credit upon the management, and indicates a continuously prosperous future.

A GOOD PRECEDENT.

No matter how the bye-election in South Renfrew is to be allowed to go—by acclamation or by a contest—the Right Hon. Mr. Borden is not measuring out what was meted out to himself. Mr. Borden was defeated in the general election of 1904, in his home constituency, and it being desirable that so eminent a man should not be excluded from Parliament, Mr. Kidd, who had been elected in Carlton, Ont., resigned his seat in favour of Mr. Borden. What was Sir Wilfrid Laurier's course? Did he keep the constituency vacant for months and delay the issuing of the writ for the bye-election, in order to keep the leader of the Opposition ou of Parliament? Not at all. He "played fair". Mr. Kidd resigned on January 5th, and on instructions from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Speaker issued the writ for an election on Jan. 12th. The election took place on Feb. 4th, following, and Mr. Borden was elected by acclamation. Mr. Borden is not called upon to be magnanimous, only fair. Sir Wilfrid established a precedent that can easily be lived up to.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

Responsibility of office changes the point of view. It is easy to theorize when elaboration of one's theories do not involve any responsibility in respect of putting them into practice. During the recent Dominion elecions a stock argument against the reciprocity agreement was that it would reduce our transcontinental railways to streaks of rust, through loss of traffic, which would be diverted from east and west to south and north lines, and make national railways worthless. Yet, one of the first official acts of Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Minister of Trade and Finance in the Borden Government was to humbly approach an alien Interstate Commerce Commission, and ask leave to file special grain routes for Canadian wheat and thus relieve the situation in the West by taking out wheat by the southern route, through the United States. Political "patriots" on the stump cease to be patriots in office when the responsibility of protecting the public interests comes upon them. By frequent instalments comes the evidence of the hollowness of the many-tongued cries, used to give power to the Conservatives.

Canada can no longer travel on a child's ticket". This pithy, pointed, pregnant apposite remark, applied by Prof. Kylie to Canada's relation to the defence of the Empire, is commended to Rt. Hon. Robert Laird Borden, who abjectly surrendered to the Nationalist disloyalists, and has laid aside Canada's share in imperial defence, along with other abandoned policies.

A GREAT LESSON.

Hon. Dr. Sproule, Speaker of the House of Commons, is an example of what can be accomplished by earnest, honest and persistent endeavour. He is an example that while life lasts hope lasts. The most despondent spinster,, who sees no way open to the long-sought and greatly-desired path of matrimony, in spite of the legendary hopefulness that leap year inspires, can take new hope of a husband. A man, whose early educational opportunities have been lacking or unimproved, can take heart of grace. He may be a scholar yet, if he will have the revived enthusiasm, the energy, the persistence, the devotion to duty of Hon. Dr. Sproule, Speaker of the House of Commons.

The bilingual survival of the Treaty of Utretcht is accountable for the custom of reading the prayers that in this blessed Christian land very fittingly open the labours of Parliament; in due rotation to be repeated by the Speaker in the French language. By the irony of fate, by force of political expediency, in the balancing process made necessary by the Conservative-Nationalist coalition, Dr Sproule was pitchforked into the Speaker's chair. Now, Dr. Sproule is, or was, an Orangeman of the most ardent brand, at one time Grand Master of the Orange Order, the elected embodiment of undying hostility to "French domination," including, of course, the French language. But destiny dropped him in the Speaker's chair, and duty demanded that he read the prayers in the French language. Here is where the greatness of soul of Dr. Sproule comes out. Did he shirk the responsibility of duty that he put on with the Speaker's robes? Not at all. He buckled to his task; he hired a French tutor. He parlez-vous-ed in private and triumphed. On Wednesday, January 24th, Hansard tells us that "the Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock," and Dr. Sproule worked off the prayers in French. He must have done it well, for the solemn function finished, Sir Wilfrid Laurier congratulated Dr. Sproule "upon his reading of the prayers in French," and added that if he were sure of the soundness of his doctrine he would invite him to address a meeting in the Province of Quebec. And Hon. Mr. Monk,, the Nationalist Minister of Public Works, heartily joined in the congratulations upon the "manner in which you have read the prayer in the 'French language."

The triumph of Dr. Sproule furnishes a double lesson. It shows that while he may be hopelessly Tory, he has got one redeeming quality—Grit—determination, persistence, energy, and a lofty abnegaton that leads him to sacrifice life-long principles at the call of duty. One can hardly fancy the grimness of resolve, and the incidental tortures of conscience, that led him to overcome his hostility to the national bane, the national menace, the French language — to wrestle with the nasal tonals of a foreign lingo that erstwhile stank in his nostrils, to r-r-roll round his Tyrone tongue a language that erstwhile would have been "handled" with tongs. All honour to Dr. Sproule, who allowed nothing to stand in the way of duty. The other lesson is that the graces of a foreign tongue are open to all who have the energy, the determination, the industry, to master it. A man at three score years of age, who has to overcome the intellectual difficulties of the task, as well as the heart racking scruples of conscience to learn a new and abhorred language, gives a lesson in perseverance that has its sole parallel in Bruce's spider; shows a devotion to high ideals of duty that is a striking lesson in this venal age when surrender to political exigencies on the part of less great men, sores and saddens the heart.

SELF-CONFESSED HUMBUGS.

The vote (on the Lancaster bill) was useful in exposing the insincerity of politicians who made party capital of the ne temere decree in the Federal elections.—London Advertiser.

Will our contemporary have the courage and honesty to name the members of the House of Commons "who made party capital of the ne temere decree?"—London Free Press.

Was Mr. Sexsmith, of East Peterborough, not trying to make party capital of the ne temere decree when he brought the matter up in the House last year? (See Hansard, page 6269.)

Had Colonel Hughes no party motive in dragging the same question before the House last year? (See Hansard ,page 7,200.)

Had Mr. Taylor, of Leeds, no partisan purpose in badgering the Minister of Justice on the same subject? (See Hansard, page 8,585.)

Did Mr. Burnham, the member for West Peterborough, make no use of the ne temere decree? Here is an extract from the debates in the House in November last:

Mr. E. M. Macdonald inquired whether Mr. Burnham held that the Dominion Government had power to deal with it (the promulgation of the ne temere decree,) and legislate under the British North America act.

Mr. Burnham replied that it certainly had the power. It was a question in Ontario, and was one semblies and conferences had all taken up. It was a very important questio nin Ontario, and was one reason for the defeat of the Laurier Administration.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley asked if the question played a part in the speaker's riding in the last election and if it was used against the Government.

"Assuredly," was Mr. Burnham's reply. "The country demanded a Government strong enough and willing enough to enforce the laws of the country against all who would set them at defiance."

"May I ask the honourable gentleman," queried Hon Mr. McLean (Halifax), "if in his judgment this question played an important part in the campaign conducted throughout Ontario, and, if so, what proportion of the result was attributed to it?"

Hon. Mr. Monk said that the member from Halifax had no right to ask such a question, while Hon. Frank Oliver maintained that the question was quite in order, a warm exchange of words taking place between the minister and ex-minister. Mr. McLean meantime reiterated his question.

"I have no objection to answering it," finally declared Mr. Burnham. "The question certainly played a very important part in the election throughout Ontario. The people wanted the laws of the country vindicated and the people protected."

The Burnhams, the Hugheses, the Sexsmiths, and the rest of the tribe that snatched a party advantage from the agitation over the ne temere decree, voted against the Lancaster bill to save the Government, and proclaimed themselves frauds and humbugs.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Ontario Government cannot be blamed for not exploiting one form of agriculture in New Ontario. It has boomed the swine department—the blind pig industry—amazingly.

The party of Conservative bolters in the Ne Temere matters may be known as the House of Lancaster, with the red rose as their device. But the rest of the Conservatives can hardly adopt the white rose as their device—the white feather would be better.

Great Britain's decay is far away, if her shipbuilding capacity is any sign. Fifty-nine warships, with a tonnage of 295,555, were under construction for the Admiralty at private British yards on Dec. 31, in addition to eight warships, with a tonnage of 132,200 for foreign powers.

A PANIC VOTE.

Premier Borden and his colleagues have declared that the panic in Ontario over the ne temere decree is based on a false interpretation of the scope and effect of that decree.

Premier Borden, his Minister of Finance, and his Minister of Justice announce their agreement with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Allen Aylesworth that the ne temere decree does not affect the civil marriage law in Ontario or any other province.

Premier Borden and his colleagues owe their ascendancy to the panic over the ne temere decree that was systematically created in Ontario by their supporters — a panic that resulted in the almost complete annihilation of the Liberal party in that province.

The official reurns show that, omitting the Ontario vote, the Liberals had a popular majority all over Canada of 18,31. In Ontario the Conservatives had an abnormal popular majority, due ot the panic, of 82,952.

Having wrested the prize from their opponetns, the new Conservative government unakes a complete volte face, repudiates the anarchists who threw the bomb that gave it power, and takes on the cloak of holy righteousness.

"We are here, and you are there." —Ottawa Free Press.

BANK NOTES MAKE MONEY.

Congratulating the Dominion Government on the decision not to issue further $4 notes, the Toronto Star says, will be a benefit to the country in the way of additional currency, and also net a profit to the government.

The comment is well made. A thing which is sometimes not borne in mind by the public is that every bank note or money bill issued is a profit to the issuer, unless corresponding acpital has to be supplied or kept in reserve.

The banks make a big profit this way. Government authorizes them to issue bank bills to the equivalent to half their capital, without having to hold any proportionate amount of cash in reserve. For instance, a bank with $2,000,000 paid up capital can use that capital in discounts or loans, and, in addition issue two million dollars of bank notes, and use that amount also in business. In other words, the bank can get the use of two million dollars free equivalent at 6 per cent. to a profit of $120,000 a year for nothing. As a matter of fact, no bank does use this power to the full; as a matter of business caution. Most of them use it for from 50 to 75 per cent. of the possible amount.

This great advantage to the banks is granted on the theory that they are necessary institutions in the country's business and may reasonably be aided by a tax on the rest of the community. It is a question now whether Canada is not getting past that stage.

Similarly as in the case of the banks, every bill printed and issued by the government means a profit to the government. A million dollars of government notes sent out means simply a saving to the government of interest upon a million dollars.—Ottawa Journal.

A family can suffer no greater affliction than to have a child subject to fits or epilepsy. Many a father or mother would give their all to restore such a child to health.

I tried three doctors and one specialist but all of them said he could not be cured but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills made a complete cure. He is now hale, hearty and gay. It has been three years since he had the last spell. I shall give Dr. Miles' medicines praise wherever I go. THE FAMILY HEARTH

It is said that one night, when some English soldiers were shivering in the cold of a Crimean winter a band struck up the familiar tune, "Home! Sweet Home!" then they all burst out sobbing, because the air went straight to their hearts. Yes! "There is no place like home." One of the sweetest words in the English language is that little word, "Home!"

* * *

It does not make much difference whether you own your house or home but one little room in that house you can make that little room a home to you. You can furnish it with such beautifying thoughts, you can turn to it with such sweet fancies, that it will be fairly luminous with their presence, and will be to you the very perfection of a home.

* * *

Home is a harem of rest to a man after a hard day's work. Mother, you may be tired after a trying day with the children, but remember that others have trying days too. Father has been in the office all day poring over business perplexities or financial problems but now he locks the office door and with a sigh of relief he thinks of his loved ones and turns his face towards the rest and peace of home. Don't meet him at the door with a look on your face that would stop an eight day clock. Greet him with a smile, make him feel that home is the sweetest and most restful place on earth.

* * *

Be courteous in the home. Husband, treat your wife like a lady in the home as well as on the street. If you want your boy to be "a little gentleman" when he is away from home, he must have example as well as precept in the home. Example will do more for the boy and the girl than any book on rules of etiquette.

* * *

Don't forget that nine-tenths of the happiness you will ever have, you will get at home. We talk about being independent, but the independence that comes to a man when his work is over, and he feels that he has run out of the storm into the quiet of the harbour of home where he can rest in peace with his family, is an independence that is real.

* * *

Wife, your power in the home is unlimited. You are its queen. There at least, your sway is undisputed. There is nothing that can so lift a man up—that can inspire him to great achievement, as the feeling that he has at his side a woman whom he can truly love, whom he can fully trust, and at whose feet he may bow in highest respect. You intensify his joy and blunt the keen edge of his sorrow. It is true that it takes a grand woman to do this, but you can be that grand woman.

* * *

Young man, when you think of making a home and seek a mate, look for the permanent qualities. Beauty is only skin deep; character is eternal. The Madonna face is beautiful, but when you look closely you find that it is beauty of expression. It shows love, gentleness, self-sacrifice and sweetness. Here would be the womanly arms in which you would want to lay your head when all the world is fading from your sight. Her fingers may never have written a sentence that will live, but it is those fingers that you love and will want to close your eyes in the last sleep.

* * *

A BUNDLE OF PRECEPTS CULLED FROM THE PAGES OF AN ANCIENT BOOK

Honour the father and the mother; love the wife; reverence the husband; provoke not the children to wrath; be kindly affectionate to one another; tender hearted, pitiful, forgiving, forbearing one to another in love; showing mercy with cheerfulness; in honour preferring one another; rejoicing and weeping in sympathy; striving for peaceable living; not rendering railing for railing, but contrariwise blessing.

Careful observance of these rules would drive out all jealousies and janglings which rob the home of its peace and order.

TENDERS FOR NEW BUILDING AT THE C.G.E.

As will be seen from an advertisement in another column the Canadian General Electric Company is advertising for tenders for the erection of a brick building 325 feet by 80 feet, two storeys and a basement, the tenders to be in by Feb. 13. The new building which is contemplated will be a considerable addition to the already enormous plant of the company.

Conservatory Pupils Pass

Peterborough Conservatory of Music pupils have as usual been successful in the examinations of the Toronto Conservatory of Music. Miss Jean Hill, a pupil of Miss Newman, at the local Conservatory, is being congratulated upon passing her intermediate pianoforte examination, while Miss Laura Logan, a pupil of Miss Julia Choate, has successfully passed her violin examination.

TRADERS' BANK REPORT

Increases mark every one of the departments covered in the annual statement of the Traders' Bank of Canada, which has just been made public. The comparative statement published shows that for the year ended December 30th, 1911, the Bank increased its Rest account, its Deposits its earnings, its Cash Reserves, and total Assets. The net profits for the year amounted to $601,000 as compared with $524,000 for the previous year. The rest account was increased by $200,000, bringing it up to $2,500,000. The Banks deposits now stand at $40,000,000, having increased $4,000,000 during the year, which indicates increased confidence from the public's standpoint. The Bank's stock of gold, silver and bullion now stands at nearly $6,000,000, having increased from $4,300,000 at the end of 1910. Its total assets stand at $52,427,000 as compared with $47,125,000 for the previous year.

In other departments of its activities the Bank also made progress. Its note circulation was $4,373,000 as compared with $3,790,000 for 1910. Its bills discounted totalled $34,592,00 as compared with $32,810,000. The latter shows an increased activity and co-operation in the commercial and industrial expansion of the country. It also shows that the Traders' Bank is doing a continually larger share in developing the country's resources. Altogether the showing is a highly creditable one and reflects credit on the Management.

DON'T PULL OUT THE GRAY HAIRS

A Few Applications of a Simple Remedy Will Bring Back the Natural Colour

"Pull out one gray hair and a dozen will take its place," is an old saying which is, to a great extent, true, if no steps are taken to stop the cause. When gray hairs apepar it is a sign that Nature needs assistance. It is Nature's call for help. Gray hair, dull, lifeless hair, or hair that is falling out, is not necessarily a sign of advancing age, for there are thousands of elderly people with perfect heads of hair without a single streak of gray.

When gray hairs come, or when the hair seems to be lifeless or dead, some good, reliable, hair-restoring treatment should be resorted to at once. Specialists say that one of the best preparations to use is the old-fashioned "sage tea" which our grandparents used. The best preparation of this kind is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a preparation of domestic sage and sulphur, scientifically compounded with later discovered hair tonics and stimulants, the whole mixture being carefully balanced and tested by experts.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is clean and wholesome and perfectly harmless. It refreshes dry, parched hair, removes dandruff and gradually restores faded or gray hair to its natural colour.

Don't delay another minute. Start using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur at once and see what a difference a few days' treatment will make in your hair.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists. Special agents, Warne Drug Co.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

JAN. 28TH. 1912

(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

The Presentation in the Temple. Luke ii:22-39.

Golden Text—For mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people. Luke ii:30,31.

(1.) Verses 22-24—What was the law of Moses, in the matter of purification, for the mother of a male child?

(2.) What practical purpose did all this ceremony serve?

(3.) Why would it not be a good thing if all children were formally presented to the Lord in the church, in these days?

(4.) Why would Jesus not have submitted to all this form and ceremony, if he had at this time been of mature judgment?

(5.) Verse 26—Are there degrees of holiness in truly good men, and if so, how would you classify them?

(6.) Of which of the real children of God cannot it be said, "and the Holy Ghost was upon him"?

(7.) How would you describe the character of Simeon?

(8.) Verse 26—Do any good people to-day have revelations, or premonitions, similar to this concerning future events?

(9.) If some good people like Simeon have revelations concerning the future, why may not all good people have them?

(10.) Verse 27—What is the difference when a good man goes to a place "by the Spirit," and when he goes and is only conscious of his own judgment directing him?

(11.) Verse 28—What benefit was it to Jesus for Simeon having taken him in his arms and "blessing God"?

(12.) Verse 29—Why should it be thought wrong for a man in full health, but in great trouble, to pray that he might die?

(13.) If it was right for Simeon to pray for God to let him depart this life, why is it wrong for any aged and infirm person to pray the same prayer?

(14.) If a man is not always ready to die, why is there reason to think he is never ready?

(15.) Verses 30-32—What is the most glorious sight on the earth a Christian can see?

(16.) What effect did the sight of Jesus have upon Simeon, and what effect does it always have upon a penitent sinner?

(17.) What is to-day the greatest civilizing and spiritually uplifting influence in the world, and why do you think so?

(18.) Verses 33-35—Who are those that marvel most at the love and wisdom of Jesus; those who see Him for the first time, or those who have been acquainted with Him for a lifetime, and why is it so? (This is one of the questions that may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(19.) What exceptions are there to the rule that God hurts people only that He may help them?

(20.) Verses 36-39—What if any exceptions are there to the rule that when truly spiritual people of any faith hear and understand Jesus, their hearts are always drawn to Him?

CINEMATOGRAPHED A TIGER

Photographing the tiger in his native jungle must be an exciting sport, judging from the accounts of Cherry Kearton, who has just returned to London after visiting India and Borneo. Mr. Kearton gives the following account of how he cinematographed a large tiger.

"It took me twenty days before I could find the tiger, though tiger spoor was plentiful. The tiger I got had seized a bullock by the nose and had dragged him on all fours into dense jungle, forming a tunnel by doing so.

"I went on my hands and knees along part of this tunnel, and found one of the legs of the bullock newly eaten.

"So I returned and arranged a drive with 400 men, cleared a space in the jungle fifteen yards wide where the tiger was to be driven, put up a thin leaf screen to hide me from the beast and waited on the ground—not up a tree—for him.

"I had no firearms, but I had three spearmen lying on the ground beside me. Photographs taken from a tree would not give the true result.

"I waited there for half an hour. I knew that the tiger was approaching by the beaters(who were up trees, tapping like woodpeckers. The others were on the ground, making hideous sounds with every noisy thing they possessed.

"The tiger came down the tunnel and out into the open, and I photographed him. Directly he got half way across he gave vent to a number of most terrific coughs.

"When he had gone the gome ranger, a native, who was on the ground beside me, got up and said, 'That tiger is over eleven feet long, the biggest tiger I have ever seen.'

"The natives wanted to kill the tiger since it was about to become a man eater; stealing village cattle is always the sign that that is going to happen. They could not understand why I only wanted to turn a handle at the animal.

"Fifteen men, saying that they would be his next victims, got behind a bush with spears, and when the tiger was driven up to them three of the men rushed out with their weapons.

"The tiger leaped from the dense jungle, the man on the right and the man on the left bolted, the man in the middle turned to emulate them, but fell on his face.

"Upon him the tiger threw himself with his claws in his shoulder like a flash of lightning and put his head down to the back of the man's neck.

"I, six to eight feet up a tree, shouted, thinking he was going to bite through the man's spinal column. The beast looked up at me, gave another of his great coughs, growled savagely at me, and then jumped sideways and disappeared into the jungle."

WHEN UNITED STATES MONEY BARONS TRAVEL

The highest note in special train luxury in the United States was reached recently when the members of the American Bankers' Association left New York for New Orleans, on their way to visit the Panama Canal. There were 565 people in the party. The train was composed entirely of new cars, finished so as to be ready for the trip. They were of steel construction throughout, mahogany finished woodwork, individual electric reading lamps in each berth and electric fans in every room. In all other respects the cars were larger and roomier than the sleeping cars ordinarily in service. The train was run in three sections.

On each train were ladies' maids, barbers, valets, stenographers. Daily stock market reports were furnished and at every stop telephonic communication was made and long distance as well as local calls were made possible. The morning papers of each town passed through were on the train. In the libraries of every section were complete assortments of financial publications. The latest magazines and periodicals were in the rooms set aside for the so-called "clubs" of men and women, the ladies' club being the observation car where afternoon tea was served daily. There were concerts on board every evening after dinner by professional talent, supplemented by talking machines and mechanical pianos. Bridge, poker, and other card games had their special rooms.

The several sections of this train complete cost in the neighbourhood of a million dollars, and several of the cars cost from $30,000 to $40,000 piece. Between New York and New Orleans there were from 97 to 100 engines brought into requisition on different parts of the route, and more than a hundred conductors were on duty. There were 56 porters.

The fabled luxury of kings was surpassed in the daily life of these money barons while on board train. Each member of the party was provided every morning with a fresh new face cloth, enclosed in a sanitary wrapper, bearing his name printed upon it.

The table appointments were in the height of fashion, and the menu explains too how much of the time of the party was occupied. The breakfast alone included forty-one items, exclusive of breads and beverages. The luncheons and dinner cards were increased in due proportion.

It took the railroad company eight months to prepare details of the trip and get its special cars in readiness for the luxurious train.

WHEN CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE FAILED

A correspondent of the Springfield Republican contributes a story tending to show that the most convincing circumstantial evidence is not always to be relied upon. In the early years of the past century, writes the correspondent, Dr. John P. Sandersen was murdered in that portion of Barron, Kentucky, now known as Metcalf County. Suspicion soon fell on John C. Hamilton, a wealthy citizen of the neighbourhood. Hamilton was tried, convicted, and hanged. Wholly circumstantial, the evidence was, withal, so remarkable in character as to convince the jury and the whole surrounding population of the accused man's guilt, and this, notwithstanding the fact that Sanderson was his friend and fellow-traveller, the honoured and cherished guest of Hamilton's father.

RICHARD HALL & SON. LIMITED

CHURCH UNION

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The members of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches of this city will soon be called upons to vote for, or against church union. The vote will certainly be an important one, far reaching in its influence upon the uniting of churches in all coming time, and also upon the churches that may not see their way to unite at the present time. The spirit of union is, more or less, in all the churches, and men may as well try to prevent the wind from blowing, or the sun from shining, as to prevent the spirit of union from spreading and prevailing. Men do not all see alike in politics and religion. Therefore, I suppose it is too much to expect a unanimous vote on the union question. Such we have not had in any union that has taken place among the churches, but most have fallen into line and made it a grand success. It is sad to think of the waste of money in the erection of churches, and the waste of ministerial labour in this our enlightened day, while so many millions have neither church or minister. The persons opposed to church union remind me of some poetry that came under my notice not long since, which is as follows:

"I wonder why the women don't rise
And beat out both the devil's eyes,
Send him to hell with bitter cries,
And then we would have church union.
I wonder why the women don't moan,
And break the devil's back and bone,
Send him to hell with bitter groan,
And then we would have church union.
I wonder why the women don't shout,
And drive the devil's agents out,
And spread their principles about,
And then we would have church union.
I wonder why the women don't pray,
And chase the darkness all away,
And usher in the Gospel day,
And then we would have church union.

If the poet thinks that all the opponents of church union are under the influence of the evil one, I do not endorse his views; as I believe that many of the opponents of church union are as good and sincere as those who favour it, but it is with them, as with many others. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end—Amen.

For myself, I believe there should be one Church, on earth, as there is one in heaven, and the uniting link should be love to God and love to men.

Yours sincerely,
One Who Favours Church Union.

LETTER TELLS OF INCEPTION OF THE NEW ORDER IN CHINA

First hand information regarding some of the events of the Chinese revolution is given in an interesting letter to Rev. R. Burns, Omemee, from his daughter, Mrs. D. S. McKinley, writing from Chengtu, West China. The letter is as follows:

Chengtu, West China, Nov. 29.

On Saturday, Nov. 25th the Viceroy, Chao Er Feng practically handed over the government of the province of Sze-Chuen to the revolutionists, and on Monday, the 27th, it was formally done, peacefully and without bloodshed.

To-day (Nov. 28th) we are under the government of the Republic of Sze Cheun. Yesterday afternoon the Viceroy delivered over the seals of office to the president of the new republic (a man whom two months ago he had arrested and kept in prison until a couple of weeks ago, when he released him.) The first proclamation of the republic was put out this afternoon, stating that tomorrow at twelve o'clock all places of business, schools, residences, etc., will send representatives to congratulate and receive congratulations upon the new government, such representatives to come with queues cut, wearing a hat that will keep the sun off, a coat buttoned down the front, with long boots on. They must also wear a piece of white cloth two inches square on the left sleeve. All public buildings and schools must hoist the flag of the republic. I think the residences must do likewise.

The Viceroy will still retain control of affairs to a certain extent, although not at their head. There are several thousand Manchus in a walled city within Chengtu itself. They have been treated fairly well, receiving a tax, mostly of rice, from the Chinese for the past two hundred years. That is to be given them still until such time as they can be otherwise provided for, which practically means until they learn how to work.

Old Chao, the former viceroy, told the revolutionists there was no longer any reason to resist them, and is in the city to-day helping the new leaders to form a government to restore order. After that he returns to Thibet to resume his former office. He is a very clever old man and has handled things very well.

Heads or Tails.

This week it will be a matter of "heads or tails" for the Chinese have all been ordered to cut off their queues. I doubt, however, if the new party will go so far as to take off the heads of those who disobey that mandate, although the Manchus in their time, compelled the Chinese to have their heads shaved in front, on penalty of death by beheading. The queues, I believe, were there before, worn the same as by our ancestors in England a couple of hundred years ago. For a long time the barbers here were known by a Chinese name, signifying "one who carrier out the proclamation" with reference to the shaving of their heads. It seems strange to see so many people without queues and wearing imitation foreign caps, walking around the city. We expect to leave here for Shanghai, the first of next week, having been promised strong escort.

LADIES' LITERARY SOCIETY OF T.A.S.

Papers on Wolfe and Montcalm Were Given Last Night

The Ladies' Literary Society in connection with the St. Peter's T. A. S., held their regular meeting in the St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last evening, when a large number of its members attended.

The paper was read by Miss Ailene Sullivan on "Wolfe and Montcalm" and at its conclusion the Rev. Fr. McColl gave a short talk on Bishop Laval. The meeting was enlivened by a piano duet, admirably rendered by the Misses Doris, and a song by Mr. George Daly.

After dealing with the early history of the two great generals mentioned above, Miss Sullivan read of the famous seige of Quebec.

"On June thirtieth," she read, the Canadians attacked Monckton's force, inflicting a heavy loss. Two days later Wolfe occupied the Levis' Heights with five thousand men and siege guns. He was immediately attacked, but held his position. He attempted a movement up the Montgomery but was severely repulsed. Murray, who was sent up the St. Lawrence to make an attack above the town, was driven off.

All these and many smaller attempts of Wolfe, though initiated in secret, were noted by Montcalm with equal generalship, until the final grand surprise. On the morning of the thirteenth of September the French awoke to find the English at their gates.

Montcalm seems really to have lost the battle through his not being able to recover sufficiently from the unexpected appearance of the enemy. He was stupefied on perceiving before him, not a detachment, as he had expected, but the whole of Wolfe's army.

For a while good fortune seemed to favour him and he began to gain confidence. He passed in front of his regiments pointing out the enemy and telling his soldiers it was either victory or death for retreat was impossible. His command had not reached the foot of the ravine when its line conveyed to the English the idea that attack was being made in irregular columns. But while the Canadians were reloading on the second line, the English approached and fired from the height on which they stood. A cloud of smoke enveloped two armies, while both continued to advance and the fight was short but keen.

On the English side Colonel Carleton was wounded in the head. Montcalm was running from point to point trying to strengthen his disordered forces, while Wolfe was directing the attack in person on the right of his army. A ball struck him on the wrist and soon a second bullet inflicted a severe wound. Nevertheless, still faithful to his mission, which he so often quoted, to the effect that "While a man is able to do his duty and to stand and hold his arms, it is infamous to retire," he continued to advance. Not long afterwards a third ball struck him in the chest and he staggered. Seeing he was losing consciousness, he said to an officer of artillery who was near him, "Support me; my brave soldiers must not see me fall." One of the officers volunteered to go in search of a surgeon. "It is useless," sighed the general "I'm done for."

He was apparently unconscious when one of those supporting him cried: "They run! Then run!" "Who run?" Wolfe quickly asked, as if just awakened from a slumber. "The enemy," replied the officer, "they give way everywhere."

Then he sent word to Colonel Burton to cut off the retreat. He then turned on his side, murmuring, "God be praised, I die happy," and expired.

Next day Sept. 14th, Montcalm was trying to rally some companies in front of the St. Louis gate, when he received two wounds in succession. "Is the woung a mortal one," he asked. "How much longer have I to live?" "Not twenty-four hours," was the reply. "So much the better; I shall not live to see the English masters of Quebec."

The great Minister who had discovered the genius of Wolfe, made his speech of praise in the House of Commons and the gratitude of the English people raised him a monument in Westminster Abbey.

The name of Montcalm is inscribed on our monuments and public places History and poetry have joined hands to celebrate the national heritage of his glory. The magnificent tomb raised a century after his death is not less honoured than that of Wolfe at Westminster.

In talking briefly upon the life of Bishop Laval, Fr. McColl said:

"Bishop Laval was the first Canadian bishop and was appointed in 1654 or 100 years before Quebec was taken by the English. The early colonists made a great deal of money selling brandy to the Indians. This Bishop of Laval fought and fought hard, until at the present day no one is allowed to sell spirits to Indians. The distinguished cleric was a worker and a splendid organizer and at his death he left the church on a sound basis."

The sergeant-major and sergeants of the 57th Peterborough Rangers held their annual ball last evening in the armouries. The attendance was a large one and the evening a thoroughly successful and enjoyable one. The ball room was gorgeously decorated with flags and bunting as also was the refreshment buffet. The Opera House orchestra supplied the musical element which was thoroughly appreciated by the dancers, while Messrs. Coleman Bros. supplied refreshments.

Among the guests were Col. Clegg and Capt. McLean of the 57th Regiments Major Young and Lt. Fee of the 24th Field Battery, Lieutenants Carruther, Watt, Mills, Ackerman, Comstock and Loch of the 57th and Sgt. Watson. Lieut. Cleghorn of the 3rd Prince of Wales, was also present.

HIGHER PRICED POTATOES AND BUTTER FEATURE OF THE MARKET

The Humble Spud Brought $1.80 a Bag with but a Scanty Offering—Butter Went Quickly at the Opening Price and Some Farmers Took Advantage of the Strength of Prices.

MEATS FAIRLY PLENTIFUL

Those householders who bought sparingly of potatoes when the price began to soar, thinking it was but a temporary movement, will not exactly welcome this morning's price, of $1.80 a bag. The quantity offered was light, and several loads had been sold before 11 o'clock.

There has been some feeling in the city that throughout the country there are full cellars of the usually insignificant spud, and that farmers have been withholding supplies, in order to force prices to a higher figure. This opinion finds no support from those who travel through the country.

"It is not unusual these days to see farmers bringing home potatoes" said a Smith farmer this morning. "There is an actual scarcity, and many country people have to secure their supplies in the city. A few days ago I passed a neighbour, who had been into the city, and he told me he had to buy his potatoes in the stores, and instances similar to this are more numerous than is generally believed".

A farmer from South Monaghan said the crops in that township had been exceptionally light and although potatoes are usually plentiful, had been considerably below the average.

Sold Quickly.

"I had no difficulty in selling my load," said one farmer this morning. "They went like hot cakes". And in the meantime the city dweller thinks the farmer is making a mint of money and patented peelers will fall into desuetude until there is another plenitude.

When They Were 25c a Bag.

"It's the same with everything," remarked one of the market sages. "When anything is scarce, everybody wants it, but when they are in abundance you can't give them away. A year or so ago you could not sell them for more than fifty cents a bag and I know one man, who was so disgusted with the low market that he dumped them into a field rather than sell them at 25 cents a bag in the bin."

Condition is General.

The only consolation is the fact that high prices are not confined to Peterborough, but that the scarcity is general. In Ottawa, householders have been paying $1.90, for some time. It is generally believed that not a few farmers will even have to buy their seed potatoes and under such conditions it is but little wonder that the humble potato has been raised to the plane of luxuries, from the standpoint of price, at any rate. From the present outlook higher prices seem inevitable.

Butter is Aeroplaning, Too.

Butter opened at 35 cents to-day, and was grabbed up so quickly that those farmers who had been first wished they had been last to arrive, for some of the late arrivals held out for 36 cents, and some, even 38 cents. In regard to the latter, Ralph Hertz's lines may be applied: "What you want, and what you get, are diametrically opposite, don't you know". Thirty-eight cents was about the last straw, with eggs ranging from 35 to 38 cents, and prospective meals running into real money.

"Why, I can get butter for 32 cents, in the store," said a man, rather testily, but the woman with the baskets smiled an interrogating "yes," but did not waver from the 35 cent mark.

Boycott in New York.

In New York, butter is 50 cents a pound and the Housewives' League of Greater New York has declared a boycott on this dairy produce. Farmers who ask 38 cents a pound, are nearing the limit of many purses, and are inviting a boycott even here, prearranged, or otherwise.

Poultry Steady.

There was a fair demand for poultry, at steady prices, chickens receiving most attention. A few turkeys were offered. A prominent pedagogue was looking over a turkey that might have been inviting. "Two dollars for that," he said; "Why, I could eat almost half of that myself

Interesting Lecture At The Collegiate

Prof. Chant, of Toronto, Gives Illustrated Lecture Upon Planet "Mars"

To students of astronomy, and others less interested in the mysteries and discoveries pertaining to that well known planet Mars, the lecture given by Prof. Chant in the Collegiate Assembly Hall last night, proved a revelation.

Professor Chant is a well known authority upon astronomical matters having devoted the mature years of his life to its study. He also occupies the astronomical chair of the University of Toronto, and he is therefore thoroughly conversant with this particular branch of science.

The audience, while not large, was an attentive one, and judging by the favourable comment which was heard on all sides at the conclusion of the lecture, it was an appreciative one.

Dr. Marsh, who was present, introduced the speaker of the evening with a few brief remarks. The lecture was profusely illustrated and at the hands of Prof. Chant, received a lucid interpretation.

"Mars is of great interest to the world, from a geographical, mathematical and theoretical point of view" said the speaker, in as much as it dealt with the solar system. Pictures were then thrown on the screen, descriptive of the various telescopic observations taken in past and recent years. These were followed by a series of picures showing the relative position of Mars to the Earth, and the comparative size of the planet. Views were also shown depicting drawings taken by old time astronomers. These, with many other views, accompanied a very interesting and instructive lecture.

Conservatives Will Try the Australian Export Field

NEED SHIPS SAYS PUGSLEY

Ottawa, Jan. 27.—Two important announcements were made by Hon. George E. Foster at yesterday afternoon's session of the House of Commons. A proposition had been made in writing to the Minister of Trade and Customs of Australia, he stated, which he hoped would result in a conference on the improvement of trade relations between the countries, between members of the two Governments, or at least between special commissioners.

He also stated that a cable had been received saying that it had been decided that commissioners from the West Indies and British Guiana would come to Ottawa on March 27 to discuss improved trade relations and communications.

H. B. Ames (Montreal-St. Antoine), gave an admirable exposition of the case for "imperial reciprocity" with Australia, founded on the fact, that the seasons were mutually exclusive and the respective products of the two countries were mutually exclusive. Political conditions in Australia now made the time a good one to seek a preferential arrangement.

Postmaster-General Pelletier denied, in answer to a question by E. B. Devlin (Wright), that he had said at Eganville as reported in The Ottawa Citizen, that the Georgian Bay Canal was part of the Government's program. He had never even mentioned the canal.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "That is a sad commentary in the Conservative press."

Hon. L. P. Pelletier: "It has been degraded by the Grit press."

Hon. Wm. Pugsley brought up the question of improved trade relations of the West Indies, and Australia. He thought the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Foster) would have done well not to confine his attention to improving the West Indies trade by tariff reduction; but to have taken up as well the question of improvement of the steamship service.

There was a recommendation which he thought an admirable one for the establishment of a double service, a direct line of steamers from Halifax and another, running from Montreal with a call at St. John during the summer and running direct from St. John in the winter.

As to Australia, the late Government had been continually urging on the Government of the Commonwealth the desirability of entering into a preferential arrangement between the two countries, so far with no success.

Here again he thought Canada should move ahead regardless of the improvement of tariff conditions and improve steamship communications.

H. B. Ames (Montreal-St. Antoine), declared that, under the conditions involved in the recent reciprocity pact, Canada's proposition to the other parts of the Empire was "to send them round to the back door with a stranger's ticket, when we should take them in by the front door and welcome them as brethren."

In the last ten years, unstable political conditions in Australia had made their Government chary of touching the tariff. Now a frankly protectionist labor Government controlled both Houses, and the time was favorable for action.

If we were to get a slight advantage over the U. S. in the Australian market, said Mr. Ames, we would be able to divert a considerable part of the $30,000,000 annually sent by the United States to ourselves. The Americans sent shoes, ammunition and explosives, furniture, machines, railway iron, timber, fish, paper, etc.

Hon. George E. Foster declared that owing to the reciprocity of seasons and the reciprocity of certain products, there was a wide margin for successful trade between Canada and Australia.

It would be better not to tie ourselves to an arrangement of preference for preference, said the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and he announced that he had made a proposition in writing to the Minister of Trade and Customs of Australia that he hoped would result in a conference between members of the two Governments, or at least between special commissioners.

Sir Wilfrid complimented Mr. Ames on his speech. It was the clearest exposition of the subject ever made in the House. Australia, he said, had two principal products which she exported, wool and meat. He did not think anything could be done with meat, but under the proposed arrangement Australian wool, which we now imported through Great Britain, might come direct.

There was a wide market in Australia for Canadian manufactured goods. He thought, however, it would be hard for Mr. Foster to persuade the protectionists of Australia to allow Canadians to compete with Australian-manufactured articles.

"Let him try the job," Sir Wilfrid concluded. "If he succeeds I can assure him that he will receive the hearty approval of both sides of the House."

Missions to Resume.

New York, Jan. 27.—A cable message received yesterday by the Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church from the Right Rev. Logan H. Roots, D.D., Bishop of Hankow, who with a band of workers, has remained at his post throughout the revolution, announces that the mission schools, which had to be closed when the siege of the Wuhan cities began, are to be reopened on March 7. The bishop also requests that new teachers be sent.

Hankow and Wu Chang are the centre of a very important work of the Episcopal Church, which is under Bishop Roots's direction. The institutions to which he referred are Boone University, with 400 pupils, and St. Hilda's School for Girls with something over 100 pupils.

The fact that the bishop has planned for and set the date of the reopening of these institutions is regarded by the board secretaries as the most cheering news yet received from China. It will mean the return of all the missionaries of the Episcopal Church in that locality—about thirty in number. The bishop, in making his decision, it is thought by the missionary board here, must have felt confident of the immediate and peaceful outcome of the revolution, or at any rate to have satisfied himself that a permanent quiet has been sufficiently restored in Hankow to warrant a resumption of all missionary activities.

By Wireless to Spain.

Ottawa, Jan. 27.—Today the Marconi wireless communication between Canada and Spain will be inaugurated by the sending of the following messages between the Marconi towers, Glace Bay, C.B., and Aranjuez in Spain eastward:

Ottawa, 27 Jan., 1912, to Canalejas, Madrid, Premier, Spain, via Marconi towers, Glace Bay, C.B.:

"I am glad to have the privilege of extending to the Spanish Government and people the heartiest congratulations and good wishes of my Government, and of the people of this Dominion on the occasion of the opening of your first long distance wireless telegraph station.—Borden, Premier of Canada."

"Ottawa, 27 Jan., 1912, to Talveton, Madrid, Minister of Agriculture, Trade and Commerce, via Marconi towers, Glace Bay, C.B.:

"The successful completion of radio-telegraph communcation between Spain and this dominion marks another step forward in the development of scientific accomplishment, and it affords me much gratification to be able to extend to you the best wishes of my Department by means of one of the first messages transmitted to Aranjuez Marconi station.—Hazen, Minister of Naval Service.

INCIDENT SETTLED

Seizure of Ships by Italy Will Go to the Hague

PUBLIC FEELING RAN HIGH

Paris, Jan. 27.—The Franco-Italian incident arising from the seizure of the French steamers Manouba and Carthage, by Italian war vessels, was settled yesterday satisfactorily to both nations. This announcement was made last night at the close of a meeting of the Cabinet, which, after examination approved the terms of the note agreed upon by Camille Barrere, the French ambassador at Rome, and the Marquis di San Giuliano, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, and which will be published in Rome by the Italian Government.

The twenty-nine Turks, said to be members of the Turkish Red Crescent Society, who were taken off the Manouba by the Italians and sent to Cagliari, are to be immediately turned over to the French consul at Cagliari, who will send them to France where their identity will be verified by the French Government. All questions of law arising from the seizure of both the Manouba and the Carthage will be referred to The Hague.

Immediately the Cabinet adjourned Premier Poincare sent a wireless despatch to the captain of the steamer Ville Alger, which is now on its way from Tunis to Marseilles, instructing him to call at Cagliari and take the Turks on board.

The note is couched in terms of moderation and shows a spirit of conciliation. The preamble insists that it has been the desire to arrange the incident in a manner which would safeguard the dignity of both countries. The first paragraph is devoted to the case of the Carthage and the second to that of the Manouba.

The French Government is responsible for the Turks captured on the Manouba who do not belong to the Red Crescent Society and will see that they do not leave for the seat of war from a French port.

The settlement of the controversy comes in good season, for the long deliberation of the diplomats on the incident was beginning to provoke a spirit of exasperation on the part of both the public and the politicians. An instance of this was the intention announced yesterday to Premier Poincare by two members of the Chamber of Deputies that they proposed to interpellate the Government on the subject of Italy's dilatoriness. Their temper was only partially allayed by the assurance of M. Poincare that he had sent further instructions to M. Barrere, instructing that the matter be pushed to a conclusion.

The news received last night of the capture off Tunis by the Italians of the French steamer Tavignano, coming on top of the announcement of the settlement of the Carthage and Manouba incident, created an unpleasant sensation here, but public opinion is disposed to await further details of this seizure before discussing its probable outcome.

Another Seizure.

Tunis, Jan. 27.—The small French passenger steamer Tavignano, belonging to the Mixie Navigation Co. of Marseilles, and which takes the mails from Tunis to Sfox, Susa, Zarzis and Biban, all on the east coast of Tunis, was arrested Thursday night ten miles off Biban by Italian torpedo boats. The Tavignano was then taken to Tripoli, where she is held.

A TABLOID INTERVIEW.

Duke of Connaught Gives Out Remarkable Report.

New York, Jan. 27.—A remarkable interview was published here yesterday afternoon as having been given the press yesterday by the Duke of Connaught. The interview is more remarkable for its form than its substance, and was handed out to a small army of reporters from the steps of Ambassador Reid's home shortly after His Royal Highness' return from Washington, by Lieut.-Col. Lowther, military aide-de-camp. The interview follows:

"H.R.H. much pleased with visit to Washington and his reception by Mr. Taft. Speaking at the embassy after dinner in response to Mr. Knox's toast of 'The King,' he replied as per attached notes:

"Observed that at his last visit he attended the inspection of a battery of artillery on the ground where the embassy now stands.

"Was impressed with the workmanship-like appearance of the cavalry and escort.

"Thanks to Taft for his words of welcome.

"Regrets that his second visit has taken place so long after his first—which was over forty years ago.

"Full of admiration for the energy and progress on all sides.

"His brother, the late King Edward, often spoke with pleasure of his visit to the States in 1860.

"As Governor-General of Canada, he wishes to say that whatever political changes might take place in the Dominion, the sentiment of the Canadian people was now and always would be one of friendliness toward the United States.

"He has been delighted to have the opportunity of meeting the President by whom—as by the American public—he has been received in so cordial a fashion.

"In conclusion, he proposes the health of Mr. Taft."

Car Ferry Released.

Ashtabula, O., Jan. 27.—A craft, closely resembling Bessemer and Marquette car ferry No. 2, which became stuck in the ice of Port Stanley several days ago, floated past Ashtabula harbor, several miles out, yesterday. Only three men are aboard, the remainder of the crew of 30 having left the boat until the ice broke up.

Smallpox In Montreal.

Montreal, Jan. 27.—Two more cases of smallpox were taken to the civic isolation hospital on Moreau street yesterday, making seven cases now under treatment in this institution.

Probability of Riot in Belfast Lessens Every Day

A RACE TO RENT HALLS

London, Jan. 27.—Lord Londonderry, ex-Viceroy of Ireland, and one of the Unionists who are opposing the proposed home rule meeting in Belfast, yesterday sent a letter to Mr. Churchill in reply to the communication addressed to him Thursday by the First Lord of the Admiralty. In his letter Mr. Churchill informed Lord Londonderry that he would advise the Ulster Liberal Association that he would not insist on holding the meeting in Ulster Hall, but that he intended to deliver a speech somewhere in Belfast on Feb. 8.

"So far as the Ulster Unionist Council is concerned," said Lord Londonderry's reply, "its main objection, which lie in the interest of law and order, is removed, if you determine to hold your meeting outside the districts which passionately resent your action. • • • At the same time having regard to the intense state of feeling created by your proposed action, the Ulster Unionist Council cannot accept any responsibility with reference to your visit to Belfast, and they do not desire to give any assurance they might be unable to fulfil."

Trying to Corner Halls.

Belfast, Jan. 27.—Lord Londonderry's letter to Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, concerning Mr. Churchill's address before a proposed Liberal meeting here Feb. 8 in favor of home rule for Ireland denotes a cessation of active efforts by the Unionist leaders to prevent Mr. Churchill speaking. Both sides to the controversy are now engaged in an endeavor to create a "corner" in the available halls of Belfast suitable for political meetings, while the business community of the city is alarmed over the possibility of rioting if the Liberal gathering is held, and has petitioned the corporation to cancel all dates for gatherings in Ulster Hall.

Financing Dynamite Plot.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 27.—Facts about J. J. McNamara's expense in paying his dynamiting "crew" and in buying explosives to blow up "open shop" structures for more than two years before his arrest, were made available to the federal grand jury yesterday, through Leo M. Rappaport, formerly an attorney for McNamara.

Rappaport told the grand jury the names to whom he had entrusted all the checkbook stubs and cancelled checks, which showed McNamara's financial dealings from December, 1906, to the day of his arrest on April 22, 1911, and which also showed what disposition the dynamiter had made of the $100 a month allowed him in his capacity as secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers.

Training Camp at Barrie.

Barrie, Jan. 27.—On more than one occasion the large tract of waste land northeast of Alliston has been spoken of as a site for permanent training camp for the militia. The new Minister of Militia, Hon. S. Hughes, has taken the matter up and is making a personal enquiry into the situation.

To the County Council, assembled here yesterday afternoon, he stated that one of the main objects of his visit to Barrie was to confer with the military men regarding a site for the annual camp, which would be easy of access for a number of regiments. From what he had heard there seemed to be such a site available near Angus. If arrangements could not be made for this location, he believed others could be secured.

Muzzling Dogs In St. Thomas.

Aylmer, Ont., Jan. 27.—Owing to the appearance of symptoms of rabies in St. Thomas, the Aylmer council has thought it advisable to forbid the running of unmuzzled dogs on the streets, and the mayor has issued a proclamation to that effect.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

EVERYONE IS GOING TO LINDSAY ON TUESDAY

From all appearances everyone in Peterborough is going to Lindsay next Tuesday night to see the final battle in the district for intermediate honours. The Rooters' Club will be there several hundred strong, and there will be many others who do not belong to the organized club, who will be on hand to lend their vocal support to the Peterborough team. The locals are having their final workout to-day and will rest up until Tuesday. They have had a good hard week's work this week with two games and three hard practises and will be right on edge for Tuesday's game, which will be the hardest fight they have had this season. A special G.T.R. train will leave Peterborough sharp at 7 'oclock, returning after the game, with a round-trip fare of 75c. for adults and 40c. for children. There will be a special car for ladies and their escorts. Tickets on sale at the Grand Trunk up-town office, Ray's cigar store and the Examiner office.

Bear Cats Are Fit For Monday's Big Battle

The Bear Cats had a lively practice at Brock Street Rink, with all the regulars and spares in action, except Fred Denison, and the team will be in the best of shape for their last game in this district with Port Hope here on Monday night. Denison will not be used ni Monday's game, but will be kept in reserve for the second round battles, which will likely open next week, as the O. H. A. executive has given warning that group winners must be prepared to play at short notice, and every other night if necessary. Monday night's game here, should be well worth seeing. Manager Brundette of the Port Hope team, has assured the local management that he will bring the strongest team he has had this season to Peterborough and will give the Bear Cats a battle royal right on their own stamping ground. It took twenty minutes over-time to beat the Ontarios at home, and they will provide enough opposition to give the Petes an interesting game. The Bear Cats are going into the game determined to add another win and wind up the district without a defeat. To do so they will have to play hockey all the way and the fans will see one grand little game. There will undoubtedly be a big crowd on hand, as everyone in Peterborough is pulling for the Bear Cats because of their great work on the road. Show your appreciation by giving the youngsters a bumper gate on Monday night.

The Peterborough team will line up as follows:

Goal—Dwyer.
Point—Milloy.
Cover—Kennedy.
Rover—Weir.
Centre—Hall.
Right wing—Cook.
Left wing—Clancy.
Spares—M. Coughlin, Gilgore.

Rooters' Club For Monday's Junior Game Here

The Rooters' Club had another good rehearsal at Brock Street Rink last night with a large turnout and the Club will make its first appearance in public at the Port Hope-Peterborough Junior O. H. A. game here on Monday night. The members of the Club are asked to be on hand early and to occupy seats in the middle of the East side of the rink. Those who intend going to Lindsay with the Club on Tuesday night must be on hand at Monday night's game, when the organization will run through its repertoire to perfect the songs for Lindsay. There should be a big turnout on Monday night.

HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

REVENGE IS SWEET.

The C.P.R. hockey team came back after their old rivals, the G.T.R., at Brock street rink last night and trimmed them in a well played game of hockey by 6 goals to 2. After their defeat a week ago, the C.P.R. decided some new "equipment" was needed. A new fast train was added, with a mogul engine, and this proved to be too much for the Grand Trunk aggregation. Only two Grand Trunks succeeded in getting through on time, the balance of them being so far behind that they couldn't make connections. Shunter Sullivan did not play his usual sizzling, dazzling game but was off the track most of the time, and Referee White found it necessary to send him to the round house repeatedly. Long, the new addition to the G T R. team, fell away short of his reputation, and it is expected he will be released altogether with Martin and Merryfield. It is rumoured that these three near stars are wanted by the Suffragettes to play on their Stanley Cup team.

In the first half the play was very even, each team securing one counter, and although the C.P.R. were pressing hard this period closed with the score tied. In the second half, however, condition told, and thanks to the efforts of Trainer Bowes, the C.P.R. boys were in splendid shape and played their opponents literally off their feet, slamming in goal after goal until with five minutes to play the score stood 6 to 1. In the last few minutes the Grand Trunk tried hard, and Inside Home Harper managed to poke in one more, making the final score 6 to 2.

Elrick White handled the bell to please both winners and losers. The following is the indexed line-up:

Grand Trunk	C. P. R.

Open Switch Palmer
	Stop Block Holyman

At the Sacred Heart rink Friday night from seven to eigh o'clock, a very nice exhibition of hockey took place when the Armature assembly defeated the Meter Dept. by a score of five to one. Both teams were in excellent condition, but the Armature assembly had the best of the game from the start. The line-ups were as follows:

Arm. Assembly.—Goal, Russell; point, Fallen; cover, Mgr. Gordon; centre, Mahoney; rover, Turnbull; right wing, McGill; left wing, Condon.

Gordon for the Armature Assembly and Bennet for the Meter, were the stars for the night.

F. Neary gave satisfaction as referee.

The Armature Assembly challenge any team outside of the O.H.A. or Trent Valley League to a game on the Sacred Heart rink at the earliest possible date. Arrangements for a game may be made with Mgr. W. Gordon of the Armature Assembly.

To date the Peterborough Intermediates have yet to lose a game and have scored 70 goals against their opponents' eight in five games. This is "some" record. — Toronto Star.

The supporters of the Peterborough Juniors claim to have taken nearly $2,000 out of Cobourg when they defeated the Cobourg youngsters at home on Monday night. It was one of the biggest betting games of the season.—Toronto Star.

A Trenton despatch says of the Trenton game:

Trenton, Jan. 26.—In a fast, and comparatively clean exhibition of hockey, the local intermediates wound up the season here last night, with a 6 to 3 defeat at the hands of the fast Peterborough septet, who also led at the resting period by 5 to 1. True, the result of the contest was looked upon as a foregone conclusion, but the brand of hockey served up was deserving of better patronage than that which turned out last night.

It was twenty minutes of fine combination play on the part of both teams, mingled with a few brilliant individual rushes on the part of 'Art' Armstrong and Burtt, before the visitors located the net for their first tally, although they had hit the goal post three times. Park beat Pringle for a second one from close in a moment later by his tricky stick-handling. The locals annexed the third counter, but before the gong sounded for the "orange lunch" in the dressing rooms the "Petes" had corralled three more.

In the final spasm, with four goals to the good, the Liftlock City aggregation did not appear to exert themselves very much and were outscored 2 to 1, but still had a comfortable margin of three goals at the end and incidentally doubled the score.

In the middle of the second half "Bones" Reynolds and Bearss endeavoured to enliven the proceedings with an exhibition of the "manly art," but it developed into a "catch as catch can," both going to the ice, with a heap of players of both teams taking a hand in the fracas.

Only five penalties were handed out and Referee McCord had a comparatively easy time of it.

All Saints, playing without their regular goal-minder, were defeated in a Trent Valley League game at Campbellford last night by 8 to 2. The homsters led at halftime, 6-1. It was a harder fought battle than the score would indicate, the Saints putting up a hard fight, but their inexperienced goaler had troubles of his own. The game was clean and fast with Billy Whitty of Stirling handling the bell. The Saints lined up as follows:

Goal—Cook.
Point—Hatton.
Cover—Campbell.
Rover—Anderson.
Centre—Rose.
Right wing—McMartin.
Left wing—Elliott.

The All Saints' practice for Monday night is off on account of the Junior game.

CURLING

With the completion of the Consolation event, the last echo of the annual Bonspiel passes into history. That it has been a success from beginning to end, is the unbiased opinion of all who took part in it. The entries were large and the competition keen, throughout. The Consolation finals were played last night, with Skips Connal and Matthews in command of the contesting rinks. The former rink won out by a majority of seven shots, in a keenly-fought sixteen-end game.

The personnel of the rinks playing were:

W. Menzie	R. Carton
L. Dobbin	W. D. Campbell
J. F. Matthews	H. Foote
T. F. Matthews	J. H. Connal
Skip . . .11	Skip . . .18

Schedule games at the Curling Rink will be resumed next week, playing each night, except Saturday.

Skip Stevenson lost to Skip McFadden, of Lindsay, in the District Cup competition on Tuesday, by four shots, whereupon Skip A. Moore came along and retaliated by absconding with a 12-up score from Skip Terry, also of Lindsay.

JUDGMENT QUASHED

The appeal brought by Patrick Carroll, one of the wine clerks of the Oriental Hotel, against the conviction made by D. W. Dumble, K.C., dated the 20th of December, 1911, was this morning sustained, the conviction being quashed by His Honour Judge Huycke, Judge of the County Court.

The Judge handed out a written judgment covering the case and the law applicable to it, and it is expected that this will be printed on Monday.

G .N. Gordon appeared for the appellant and Crown Attorney R. E. Wood appeared for the respondent, Chief of Police Thompson.

A Thousand Miles Through Snowdrifts

A Trip of Three HUPMOBILE Cars From Detroit to New York in the Dead of Winter.

ALMOST immediately after the Hupmobile made its bow to the motor-buying public, in March, 1909, it earned a reputation for staunchness and sturdiness, for smooth, sweet running; and it exhibited in every quarter, qualities which at once gave it rank with the finest and costliest cars built.

As the first year of the Hupmobile's manufacture progressed, now and again the car was found performing some feat of endurance or speed, or both, that called forth fresh exclamations of admiration and served to enrich the good name which had already attached to it.

We knew what the Hupmobile could and would do; several thousand owners knew what their cars had been doing for them throughout the season.

Yet, as an object lesson to the world at large, we planned for the Hupmobile a task of titanic proportions—a task the like of which no car of Hupmobile type and size had ever before been called upon to perform.

This was no less than to send three cars over the thousand miles between Detroit and New York to the Grand Central Palace Automobile Show, early in January.

The trip was laid out several weeks in advance of the time the show would open.

"POLITENESS PAYS"

The Grand Trunk Railway System have issued a little booklet entitled "Politeness Pays," the contents of which were written by the well known litterateur, Mr. Elbert Hubbard, who has jotted down a number of thinks thought on a little journey over the Grand Trunk. The text is epigramatic in style, and interesting, as all this well known writer's text and epigrams are. It is printed in the Roycrofter style on hand made antique paper, with a four page cover, printed in a light blue and black on a sepia deckled stock. There is not only good advice in this booklet to the railroad man, but to the public. A copy of the booklet may be had free on application to any of the Grand Trunk offices.

THOUGHT COLD WOULD TURN INTO CONSUMPTION

LEFT LUNG GOT VERY SORE, HEART DID NOT FEEL ANY TOO GOOD.

Mr. Robert McLarnon, Shawville, Que., writes:—"I am writing to tell you an experience I had with a bad cold and a bottle of your valuable medicine. I was up in the lumber camps teaming horses, and I caught a very bad cold. I thought it was going to turn into consumption, for my left lung got very sore and my heart did not feel any too good. I came home and tried some different remedies but they did me no good. A friend told me about Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, so I tried it, and when I had taken two bottles my cold was gone. I think it is a great remedy, and will advise any one with a cold to use it. I can't praise it enough."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, which combined with Wild Cherry bark and other pectoral remedies, makes it one of the greatest known preparations for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

Put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Local people will recall with pleasure the entertainment of the Belmonts last year.

ARMISTICE EXPIRES

But Chinese Rebels Do Not Expect Very Much Fighting

SENATE HOLD SESSION

Nanking, Jan. 29.—The armistice, which has been in operation for several weeks past, expired yesterday, but no definite steps have been taken for its renewal. Neither Tang Shan Yi, the representative of Yuan Shi Kai, nor Wu Ting Fang, the Republican Minister of Justice, expects serious fighting. Dr. Wu said in this connection:

"There is no one to fight; all are our friends."

Chang Hsun, commander of the Imperial troops, has his central base at Suchowfu, in the northern part of Kiangsu province. Under his direct command are 8,000 of all sorts of good fighters, inured to the winter. The revolutionists' centre is at Linhwaikwan, in Anh Wei Province, about 100 miles from Nanking. The revolutionists number 15,000 men, eager for fighting, but not acclimated.

Gen. Chang now occupies a special car, from which point of vantage he directs his troops, but a significant fact is that an engine is attached at both ends of the car. His retreat, however, is cut off 100 miles to the north by the cities along the railway line, which turned over a few days ago to the revolutionary cause.

It is confidently believed here that abdication will come when Yuan Shi Kai is satisfied that the Chinese troops in Pekin are sufficient in numbers to control the Manchus.

The new senate was inaugurated here yesterday. It is made up of 42 senators, who appeared in foreign dress. President Sun Yat Sen, in his speech, urged unity. He said that it was proposed by the new regime to build up not to destroy. At the close of the President's address there was an impressive scene, the members, rising in a body and giving three cheers for the republic. The hall was handsomely decorated and a military band played popular airs familiar to the foreigners.

Bomb Outrages Increase.

London, Jan. 29.—A despatch from Tientsin to the Exchange Telegraph Co., says that the Imperial family met at the palace in Pekin yesterday to consider the question of abdication. Yuan Shi Kai has consented to the convening of the National Assembly at either Hankow or Haingtu.

According to The Daily Telegraph's Pekin correspondent, President Sun Yat Sen has sent a circular note to the powers through the Pekin legations, stigmatizing Yuan Shi Kai as the champion of the Manchus, and accusing him of repudiation of his pledges and agreements and of intriguing to secure the dictatorship for himself. The President declares that the Republicans have not changed their terms, but will insist on a guarantee that Premier Yuan will work solely for sound Republican government.

Bomb and revolver outrages are increasing in Pekin, Tientsin and Mukden. There has been 32 of these outrages in Mukden in the last five days.

A Shanghai despatch to The Telegraph says that the national convention at Nanking has unanimously resolved not to extend the armistice.

DOES NOT WANT IT

Roosevelt Will Take Presidency If Thrust Upon Him

NOT PERSONALLY ANXIOUS

New York, Jan. 29.—Theodore Roosevelt is not a candidate for the Presidency, but nevertheless will be nominated and elected, according to a statement issued Saturday night by Walter R. Stubbs, Governor of Kansas, who lunched with the former President Saturday at Oyster Bay. Governor Stubbs is the second governor within 24 hours to say that he is going back home to work for Roosevelt.

"There is no doubt whatever that Col. Theodore Roosevelt will be nominated by the Republican convention and elected the next President of the United States," said Governor Stubbs. "I say this knowing from his personal statements to me, repeated during a personal conversation to-day, that he is not a candidate and will not be a candidate for the nomination. I am fully convinced he means exactly what he says and that he honestly and sincerely feels that he personally has nothing to gain by another term as President.

"But Col. Roosevelt never has said to me nor to any other living human being to my knowledge that he would refuse the nomination if it came to him as the result of a genuine demand on the part of the American people.

"There is such a demand at this time. All the information that I have been able to gather from all parts of the country is that that demand will persist and grow and force the convention to offer him the nomination. His patriotic spirit, his courage and his keen sense of the duties and obligations of a citizen will forbid him to set his back against a task which the people demand he perform."

Fire Claims Four.

Butler, Pa., Jan. 29.—Four persons were burned to death or suffocated and five others are in a serious condition as a result of a fire early yesterday at the home of Curtis Hale, at Claytonia, a mining town ten miles from here.

A family reunion was held at the home of Curtis Hale Saturday night. The fire was discovered at three o'clock yesterday morning. An overheated stove or the explosion of a lamp is thought to have been the cause.

The dead are: Earl Miles, aged 35, son-in-law of Curtis Hale; Mrs. Pollie Miles, aged 35; Mrs. Belle Hale, aged 28, wife of James Hale; Scott Hale, aged 18.

Curtis Hale, his wife and children, David, James and Sadie, sustained burns about the head and body.

Men from a nearby coal mine, assisted by neighbors, extinguished the fire, provided for the injured and recovered the charred bodies of the victims. The damage to the house was less than $1,000.

Drastic Action Put an End to Insurrection In Ecuador.

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Jan. 29.—With the putting to death at the hands of a mob of Gen. Eloy Alfaro, ex-President of Ecuador, his brother, Gen. Flavio Alfaro, ex-Minister of War, and commander-in-chief of the revolutionary forces, Gen. Medardo Alfaro, who is believed to have been a brother of the two other Alfaros, and Gens. Paez and Manuel Serrano, the leading lights in Ecuador's last revolution, have been snuffed out. This revolution, although it had been a long time brewing, began in reality a few days after the sudden death on Dec. 22 last of President Emilio Estrada.

The first of the drastic measures taken by those who opposed the revolution were carried into effect last Thursday at Guayaquil when Gen. Pedro Montero, who was proclaimed president by the troops after the death of Estrada, was shot and wounded by a mob which later burned his body.

Eloy Alfaro and Gens. Paez and Montero were captured Jan. 22 at Guayaquil when Government troops under Gen. Leonidas Plaza forced the revolutionists who held Guayaquil to capitulate. Flavio Alfaro had been wounded in a battle a few days before the fall of Guayaquil. Medardo Alfaro was captured Jan. 25 as he arrived at Guayaquil on board a steamer with a body of royal troops.

Eloy Alfaro was proclaimed President of Ecuador by the populace in January, 1906, after he had defeated the Government troops at Quito. In October of the same year he was elected president of the national convention, and held the office of chief executive until 1911.

Caught In Ice Jam.

Cairo, Ill., Jan. 29.—Twelve persons are said to have been drowned when a rowboat crossing the Mississippi from Bird's Point to Cairo was caught in an ice jam. Searching parties have been unable to find any trace of the lost boat or its passengers.

The passengers were part of 135 who left a moon Cotton Belt train at Bird's Point, Mo., and were left without conveyance across the river because the railroad ferryman feared to risk his steamer in the ice and heavy fog.

Three boatmen were hired to carry the passengers to the side of the river. Two of them took five passengers each. Frank Jones, said to be one of the boatmen, permitted twelve to get on his boat.

Boatmen of the two lighter ferries were about 50 yards ahead of James when they heard shouts for help and, turning, saw James battling frantically with a monster floe which was sweeping his craft beyond control. A heavy fog then hid him and nothing has since been heard of the ferryman or his passengers.

Clergymen Fight High Prices.

New York, Jan. 29.—War on high prices for vegetables for the poor of New York, fashioned after the campaign of Mayor Shank of Indianapolis, was begun yesterday with the opening by a committee of clergymen and others of the first of what is proposed to be a series of sales places where products of the soil will be transferred from producer to consumer without a middleman's intervention.

Customer who flocked to the big room in which quantities of carrots, potatoes, cabbages, beets, turnips and other vegetables were stacked, quickly emptied it of its contents. The stock cost $27 and sold for $27.48. The man in charge gave two boys half a dollar for cleaning up, so there was no profit.

An old woman who keeps a grocery store across the way from the first station, offered to weigh the goods sold by the new station, and denounced the innovation as destined to hurt her business, while not benefiting purchasers.

Turks Repulsed.

Tripoli, Jan. 29.—The Turkish forces on Saturday renewed the movement against Ghargarish, the small oasis about twelve miles from Tripoli, which has been the scene recently of numerous engagements between the Turks and Italians, and at the same time another force of 3,000 Turks and Arabs delivered a determined attack on Aintara, some miles inland.

The fierce Italian artillery fire, however, compelled the assaulting forces to fall back towards the south and southwest. The Italian casualties numbered two killed and eight wounded.

Australia Is Willing.

Melbourne, Jan. 29.—The Australian Prime Minister, Andrew Fisher in an interview yesterday said that he had received no official intimation of the proposals for a reciprocal agreement between Australia and Canada which the Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce, George E. Foster, it said to have made. Consideration will be given to these, he added, when proposals in a definite form reach Australia.

Both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs, E. G. Fuller, say that the visit of the Canadian Minister to Australia would be heartily welcomed, as such a visit would greatly facilitate negotiations.

ULSTERMEN ARE WARM

Excitement Reaches High Pitch Over Home Rule

ARE PLEDGED TO REVOLT

London, Jan. 29.—Ulster is now the political storm-centre of the United Kingdom. Home rule has been discussed in England and Scotland by Nationalists and Unionists, but no great enthusiasm has been aroused either for or against. In Ireland, outside of Ulster, the people are firmly convinced they are to have home rule. Ulsterites, however, are up to their eyes in fight.

Several big demonstrations have been held in various parts of Ulster to protest against any change in the form of Government of the country. One of the demonstrations in Belfast was of the industrial workers; another in Omagh was largely made up of farmers, small holders and farm laborers, who showed just as strong opposition to home rule as did their city brothers. In the latter place again the Ulsterites pledged themselves to form a provisional government if the bill passed.

Every voter in Ulster, however, is not a Unionist. There is, in fact, a fairly large sprinkling of Nationalists. In many cases the Unionist members were only returned in the last elections by narrow majorities, the Marquis of Hamilton, for instance, winning by only 100 votes in Londonderry. One division of Belfast itself, is represented by Joseph Devlin, one of the Nationalist leaders.

Elaborate police precautions will be taken for the protection of Mr. Churchill. Should he be joined by Mr. Redmond, the drive from the residence of Lord Pirrie, where he is to be the guest, to the place of meeting with Mr. Redmond's usual escort of Nationalists, there is almost certain to be rioting.

Except for a visit of Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in 1906, and another by Mr. Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland in 1907, no Liberal statesman has spoken in Belfast in eighteen years, and when Mr. Churchill and Mr. Redmond appear, it will be the first time a Cabinet Minister and a Nationalist leader have spoken from a platform in the city.

Respects Protestants Right.

London, Jan. 29.—The correspondence between Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, and Lord Londonderry, regarding the home rule meeting which is to be held in Belfast on Feb. 8, has not yet ended. Mr. Churchill sending a second letter to the ex-viceroy, in which he explains that he had nothing to do with the local arrangements for the Belfast meeting, and reminds him that home rule meetings had been held in Ulster Hall recently. "I had no other idea," says Mr. Churchill in his latest letter, "than to discuss, according to the long established custom of British politics, matters which are serious to us and which we freely recognize are serious to you. The rightful interests of the Protestants of Ireland must be the deep concern of every British Government. They will be respected by all who faithfully strive to reconcile Ireland to the British Empire and end the hatreds which disturb the foundations of the state.

"Your letter forced me to refer to a personal matter. Your lordship has a claim, to which I bow, to remind me of the memory of Lord Randolph Churchill. You were his friend through evil, as well as good days. The Unionist party, who, within a few months of the very speech which is now on your lips, pursued him with harsh ingratitude, have no such right."

It was on the platform of Ulster Hall that Lord Randolph Churchill denounced Mr Gladstone's home rule bill, and at the same time declared "Ulster will fight, and Ulster will be right." It is to the mention of this by Lord Londonderry that Mr Churchill's letter referred.

Unionists are organizing a counter demonstration, but the First Lord of the Admiralty, in advocating a policy which his father with equal vehemence denounced, will be the centre of attraction.

Andrew Bonar Law, the Unionist leader, will go to Belfast on Easter Tuesday, April 9, to reply to Mr. Churchill and there will be another demonstrations so that Belfast has a lively time ahead.

The objections of Ulster have been set forth by the Rt. Hon. Thomas Sinclair, one of the leading merchants of Belfast, a former Liberal, who left that party on the introduction of Mr. Gladstone's first home rule bill in 1886 and has since been leader of the anti-home rule party. There are many objections to the measure, he said, but among the chief of them is that it would lessen the status of the citizenship of Ulstermen. Under the union they had the same civic status as a resident of England, the same control of local affairs, the same representation in Parliament and enjoyed the benfits of its legislation. To deprive them of this would be an unwarrantable degradation of their citizenship, especially as their forefathers were sent to Ulster 300 years ago by the state, for the purpose of assisting to hold, by their habits of industry and their loyalty, Ireland for the British nation.

Home rule would undoubtedly set prosperity back, if it did not entirely ruin the industries which Ireland had to thank for her present increasingly happy position, says Sinclair.

Champ In the Field.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Speaker Champ Clark in a public statement yesterday declared that he was a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, standing on his own feet "without leaning on any other candidate."

The speaker appeals for the support of a representative delegation of "loyal Missouri Democrats," who will stand by him as long as he has a chance for the nomination. Mr Clark is emphatic that he is in the presidential race on his own record and standing, and seeks no alliance with any other candidate.

"Governor Folk and his friends," said Speaker Clark in his statement, "may make combinations with other candidates if they wish, but they have no right to excuse such conduct by wrongfully charging me with like practices."

Italian Murderer Caught.

Sault Ste. Marie, Jan. 29.—Giuseppe Nardoni, the man who shot Mike Pappas here a week ago yesterday, was arrested by Chief of Police Vincent near Little Italy, at 8:30 o'clock Saturday night.

During the past few days the suspicions have impressed upon Italians the nature of the crime of barbering a murderer and it is believed that the latter who had him in hiding at length insisted that he take his own chance. The man seems remorseful and does not seem to realize the enormity of his act. He admits that he did the shooting.

Baron von Mueller, Chief of the Foreign Office, is performing the duties of the Foreign Minister, for which office no successor will be appointed during the lifetime of Count von Aehrenthal.

Tavignano Affair Just Ripple.

Paris, Jan. 29.—The Tavignano incident, involving the arrest by Italian torpedo boats of the small French steamer Tavignano, and her subsequent release, is expected to be settled without recourse to The Hague. In official circles the incident is held to be of quite minor importance, the arrangement of which will present no difficulty.

"THE SECRET OF PAUL FARLEY"

By JOHN MARCH

"Ah, you mustn't do that!" Paul said, pulling at the long-nailed fingers, and he was amazed at the strength of the frail bony hands.

Guy laughed a weird, tuneless laugh.

"I mustn't; but she may. She likes to. Wouldn't you like to? I'll let you, though I kick when she does."

"No," he said, tenderly; "I would rather kiss you."

"What's that?" he asked, puzzled.

"Put your face near mine, and I'll show you," he said, shocked and astonished at the question.

Guy held his face close and Paul kissed his soiled, tear-stained cheek and mouth with a warmth born of the sincerest pity.

"I like that," he said; "it doesn't hurt"

"I wouldn't hurt you for the world, Guy," he said, clasping him closer.

"Then I'll stay with you," he decided contentedly.

"I would that it were possible, you poor little, ill-used kiddie," Paul remarked fervently, setting him on his feet and keeping hold of his hand. "Come along," he said, wrapping the shawl around him, and letting the gate swing to. "We'll go back home."

"You won't let her hurt me?"

"Not I," he returned stoutly, with a boldness he was far from feeling, and he shivered to find the little figure run willingly beside him in fearless perfect faith.

Stung with secret fears, and not daring to trust himself to linger, he hurried along the drive, up the flight of steps to the entrance hall, and lifted the brass knocker.

There was no reply.

It was not to be wondered at; he had smitten so feebly, that the sound could hardly have penetrated the solid, handsome panelling. He knocked again, louder, three regular strokes, gently, but perfectly distinct, communicating some of his own terror to the summons.

The door was opened at last by a smart maidservant, who looked surprised at his small companion.

"Mrs. Wycherly at home?"

"Yes, sir; I think you must be the gentleman madame is expecting."

"Farley is my name; I think she will see me."

The heavy door clanged with a dull, leaden sound, and Paul felt he was practically alone, beyond all human aid.

"Will you leave Master Guy here, and follow me?" the girl said, with an upward knowing glance.

"No," he answered, clasping the little red hand closer. "I'll take him with me."

"Excuse me, sir," she said gravely, "it would annoy the mistress; the child is never allowed in the drawing-room."

The stubborn unbending will-power, the strange individual force which stood him in place of nerve, suddenly asserted itself together with a blind inexplicable feeling that he was safer with than without the boy.

"Nonsense," he returned coolly; "she won't object to his coming with me—will you please lead the way?"

Without further demur she turned, and Paul followed her up the white enamelled staircase, carpeted with broad crimson velvet pile, held in place by massive silver-plated rods, into a well-lighted, lofty, magnificent apartment. He drew a deep breath, as with eyes and soul he drank in the perfectability of the harmonious colouring, enhanced by a daring dash of Eastern gorgeousness. In all his late he had never felt as he did now. The beauty was all so glowing, yet so still, that it seemed as if the house stood in a desert, or must be by some spell made invisible to those who resided near or passed by it, so that any form of misfortune, accident or crime could happen in it without the possibility of attracting human aid.

A portiere of thick brocade swayed in an unexpected quarter of the room, and Rowena Wycherly advanced with outstretched hands, her lovely, bewitching face wreathed in tender smiles, her full rounded bosom heaving with pent-up passion. She stood before him in the glancing firelight, curtseying, beautiful beyond compare, a veritable bud of paradise, a lovely, wicked, wanton thing, utterly devoid and devastated of any corresponding comeliness of mind. She took the cold, nerveless shand, opened it, bowed over it, and kissed the palm.

"My lord, my king!" she said in soft reverential tones, curtseying low, and with her uprising she burst into a happy, joyous, ringing laugh, throwing her arms around his neck with a fierceness that made him stagger.

"I knew you would come, darling," she said childishly. "I knew—"

Her first bewildered paroxysm of love passed, she looked about her, beyond her idol, and there from the dark, voluminous folds of a curtain she saw Guy's curious peeping face. The expression in her eyes told Paul she was cognisant of the child's presence, and the sudden tightening of his arms about her might easily have been mistaken for a lover's warmth.

"Let me go," she said, struggling.

"Go" he asked in faint surprise, "without one little kiss, Rowena?"

"I can't bear it," she panted. "I can't enjoy you with that thing in the room watching me. How did he come here?"

"He came with me I found him truanting outside. I was sure he belonged to you from the likeness, and consequently he is dear to me. If he is going to be mine as well as yours I must know him, and learn to love him."

"You shall not!" she exclaimed defiantly. "Your love is all mine, all mine!"

"Well, like him, then," he said, feeling he had overshot the mark, "and be kind to him. You will let me be kind to him, Rowena?"

He let her go, went to the child, caught him in his arms, walked to a low couch, and sat down with him on his knees.

"You can't like him, Paul," she said, sorrowfully, going and standing close to him, her two hands crossed on his shoulder. "He's possessed! He will bite you, tear your clothes, kick you, and spit at you. He is nothing more or less than a demon; he has no business to exist!"

"As he is here we will make the best of him," he said, smoothing the rumpled curls, and glancing up at her with a look that set her nerves a-thrilling, and tossed her heart into the rise and fall of her white bosom.

"You won't be unkind to me, will you, chappie?" he asked, bending to look into Guy's bloodshot eyes.

"No, never," he said eagerly. "I only bite and scratch and tear her when I'm so," and he touched his head significantly with his red, bony fingers.

"Why, what's the matter with this little curly head?" Paul asked, smiling to keep back a sudden rush of tears.

"I don't know," he said with infinite sadness, "'cept it's a goat that mostly comes. I'm a goat. I run at everything and hurt it and try to kill it. Why does that goat come?"

"I wish I knew, sweetheart, then I would keep it away," he said, as the child nestled to him. "Poor little soul," he breathed into the shining, spun-silk curls; "poor, forsaken little soul!"

"Now, Paul, I've been very patient," Mrs. Wycherly said, the hand on his shoulder fluttering to his neck, and anon up and down the back of his glossy head. "Let him go, the sight of him sickens me. I shall strike him if you don't put him out of your arms; I can't bear it any longer."

"Very well," he said, readily; "good-bye, Guy. Will you remember me? Will you know me when you see me again?"

The boy looked at him long and steadily a pained expression in his inflamed eyes.

"Yes," he said positively. "I'll know you again, and I shan't hurt you, the goat won't come where you are!"

"A la bonheur!" he exclaimed, springing up with him in his arms; "good-bye, good-night; go to bed; dream of the angels, sweet," and he kissed him tenderly, and put him outside the door.

"I am fond of children," he said, apologetically, turning to the beautiful, heartless creature, jealously watching him; "I suppose you wouldn't let me have that boy for a day or two?"

"What would you do with the little fright at the Hall?" she asked, displeased.

"Tom and Harry would tuck him in somewhere, Mrs. Wycherly," he said, laughing; "they would see no end of fun in the visit. The little fellow wants a playmate, and the Hargrave boys are such jolly, wholesome, happy young pickles; to rub against them would be the best medicine in the world for Guy."

"Guy doesn't want any medicine; he is not right in his head, he is insane. At times he is raving mad. I hate him; I hated his father; I hated my marriage. I want to forget him; I want to forget the hateful past; I want only to live in your love, now and always. Paul, dearest, you do love me a little?"

"A very little," he said, with a smile which seemed to belie his words; "and, what is more, I have not brought the ring. That silly little bird was wrong, Rowena; I have not been to London, but with your kind consent I'll go to-morrow. Which shall it be?" he demanded, dropping into an inviting divan by the fire, "diamonds, pearls, or sapphires?"

She slipped gracefully to the leopard skin at his feet, laid a firm, white hand on his knee, and looked up into his dark face, her eyes sparkling, her bare neck and shoulders suffused with the rosy glow of the fire.

"None of them," she said, stroking his face. "I want you to get me two large rubies, cut heart shape, the hearts fastened together by a tiny, wee, diamond arrow. There's a good jeweller's in Piccadilly. I don't remember the name, but it's near a superb fruiterer's. I think you will easily find it."

"I shall find it," he said, confidently, "won't a ring like that be some long way out of a poor man's reach? Don't think me mean; I am really generously inclined; but, to tell the truth, I've not taken my salary yet, and I'm quite sure my bank deposit won't cover the price of such a ring as you describe."

"Let me give you a cheque for $200, dearest," she said coaxingly. "The ring won't cost quite that, but the surplus will pay your expenses. You are going entirely on my account, and you know I ought really to bear the brunt. Stay at the Cecil, darling; go to a theatre and enjoy yourself."

"You are most kind and considerate, Rowena," he said; "but I can't accept money from you; I can't let you buy your own engagement ring; the idea is preposterous! Choose something simpler, something more in accordance with my shallow pocket. May I bring you the prettiest and daintiest ring I am able to afford?"

"Bring what you like, anything; I have shoals of rings; I don't care what it is so long as you bring yourself safe back," she retorted, letting the crown of her head rest on his breast and tossing up her arms to clasp his neck. "Paul, when do you leave Welberne Hall for good?"

"Christmas, I expect; why?"

"Nonsense! I want to be married before then. What notice is usual to give?"

"Three months, to leave, then—"

"I won't wait," she exclaimed passionately; "I declare I'll elope with you first, Paul! I'll—darling!" she whispered, changing her tone with the sudden withdrawal of her arms, and turning her marvellous face to his, "if you do stay till Christmas it won't interfere with our marriage. It can't make any difference to Sir Thomas whether his secretary is married or single, how should it?"

"Do you mean bring my bag and baggage, take up my residence here at The Larches, and visit the Hall in the day?"

"Yes," she said, with a gleeful laugh, "that is exactly what I do mean. Promise you will."

"I can't promise to-night, I am not my own master, so it would be foolish to pretend I am. I will speak to Sir Thomas, and if he is willing to concede, we must wait the appointed time."

"In that case I should wait until my hair is grey; my knight would blow a kiss from his finger tips, and ride bravely and gaily away. Do you think I don't know you are demporizing, Paul? Do you think I don't know you are indifferent to me, that you would escape me if you could? Why, you have more feeling for that miserable imbecile of mine than you have for me. I watched you. I saw your face quiver with pity for that wretched, puny object, and yet you can contemplate my rare beauty, my exquisite surroundings, my wealth, my absorbing love, and not move a muscle. Paul, dear love," she hid her face on his neck, "you don't love me I know, but you will let me teach you? Will you try? Whether you love me or not I shall marry you, dearest; and I shall win your heart one day."

"I have never said that I did or do love you, Rowena, but I am willing to be taught; willing to learn. I am not naturally hard-hearted, I—"

A low knock at the door silenced him.

"Leonie with the coffee," she said, irritably, rising hastily from the leopard's skin, and arranging the soft ruffles of lace on her bodice.

The smart coquettish maid who had conducted him upstairs, entered, and looked curiously from one to the other.

"Sir Thomas Hargrave's man has brought a message, madame. Mr. Farley is wanted immediately."

"Thank you," Paul said, quietly without betraying his intense relief, "say I will come direct."

He rose as the girl shut the door, and held out his hands.

"Good-bye, Rowena," he said smiling, "wish me a pleasant journey and a fine day in town to-morrow."

"I wish you all the good the gods will send," she exclaimed, clinging to him. "Goodnight, I've half a mind not to let you go. Will you swear to bring the ring to-morrow night?"

"No," he said gravely; "some accident, some unforeseen circumstances, might crop up—a hundred things might occur to prevent."

"Will you swear to bring it if nothing save your own will and inclination stands in the way?"

"Yes," he said promptly. "I'll swear that," and with one last prolonged embrace she let him go.

The hall door stood open, and the bevelled hanging lamp cast prismatic colours over the stolid silent James waiting on the top of the steps outside. Paul crushed his hat on his head, caught up his coat, and with a brief "good-night" to the smiling maid he pinned James by the arm, leaped three steps at a bound, and ran down the drive like a hare.

"Hi! Hello, sir! Stop! You've taken all the wind out of my sails!"

Paul stopped, let go the panting James, and laughed a young, wild, free laugh.

"Let me help you on with your coat, sir, it's not so mild nor so muggy as it was earlier, and I daresay you've come from a warm room."

"Very warm," he said, with emphasis. "Anything wrong, James?" he added, quickly, buttoning his coat; "Sir Thomas never sent anywhere for me before."

"No, and he haven't now; it's just me, sir, humbly begging your pardon; but 'twas the Squire's doing. He says to me on the quiet like last night, 'Look here, James,' says he, 'Mr. Farley is making a call to-morrow evening up at The Larches, and he's young, James; he's got no grown suspicions about wimmin, and especially widders; will yer keep your eye on him for me while I'm in Lunnon? If he don't return in an hour from the time he leaves the Hall just you walk along the turnpike and meet him, and if in another fifteen minutes you don't see him, ring the widder's bell, and give an urgent message, and you wait for him, James, and bring him home."

"Thank you, James," he said heartily, touched by Felix's devotion and forethought; "if ever I can do you a good turn you may depend upon it I will."

"I'm obliged to you, I'm sure, sir," he returned gratefully; "but don't you go to think I want compensation for any chance turn I do yer. I'm pleased to wait on you, sir, and so are the maids; you gives no trouble, sir. There's no cleaning up after you; there's no cigarette ends; no tobacco ash, and no spent matches a-lying around the library of a morning; they're all as neat as wax on the bronze tray—very different to some gentlemen's ways as we get down for the shooting."

"I don't like giving trouble if I can anyway avoid it," he said affably, "I would rather by half wait on myself. You'll accept a trifle, James, for this damp unpleasant walk," he said, trying to slip half a sovereign into his hand.

Obliged to Quit Business

So Dreadful Was the Suffering From Itching Piles

After Twenty Years of Pile Torture Relief and Cure Came with Dr. Chase's Ointment

You take no risk and you make no experiment when you use Dr. Chase's Ointment for piles. Many doctors still cling to the idea that nothing but an operation will effect a cure. But operations are expensive and dangerous and often fail in their results. Some have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment after operations had failed.

Dr. Chase's Ointment truly has a wonderful record as a cure. Here is a case which was reported recently:

Mr. John P. Marshall, 14 Barnes road, St. John's, Nfld., writes: "For upwards of twenty years I was troubled terribly with itching piles; at times so bad that I was obliged to lay up unable to attend to business.

"I tried many treatments without benefit, until I accidentally read of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and found at last a cure by using this ointment. I only used one box and part of a second one when I was completely cured, and have had no return of the piles. That was eighteen months ago, and, needless to say, I attribute this cure to Dr. Chase's Invaluable Ointment."

Many sufferers from piles have tried so many scores of treatments that they cannot believe that cure is possible. In order to convince the skeptical we are always willing to send a sample box free to anyone who encloses a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

Why I Buy Oats in Packages

"One day I had the opportunity of going through the mills where Tillson's Rolled Oats are produced.

"I saw the grain being received, I followed it through the various processes, I watched the thin, delicate flakes being placed in the packages. And not once was Tillson's touched by human hands.

"I decided right there that I'd aways buy rolled oats in packages.

"I also decided that I'd always buy Tillson's Rolled Oats, because of the care I saw exercised in the selection of the grain; because the flakes are rolled so thin that they cook perfectly in 15 minutes, and because Tillson's exclusive pan-drying process retains the delicious flavor and aroma of the oats.

"I wish every woman in Canada could see Tillson's Rolled Oats made."

Oatmeal Griddle Cakes

To one cupful of cooked Tillson's Rolled Oats add one egg beaten light without separating, one cupful of milk and one cupful of flour mixed with two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Add a teaspoonful of melted butter, mix thoroughly and bake on a hot griddle.

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet

For Schools, Hotels, Banks and Private Residences

Heretofore it has been impossible to install a Sanitary System of inside closet without water works and sewage, and you will agree with us when we say that the present outdoor system of closets are not only very insanitary, but are at the same time one of the most fruitful sources of both moral and physical ills.

The "Parkyte" Sanitary Chemical Closet is constructed principally for families and public bodies who live in a district where it is impossible to have waterworks and sewage. It can be placed in any part of a Residence, Store, School, Hotel, Bank, etc.

We have secured the Agency for this valuable Sanitary Closet, and invite investigation of its merits.

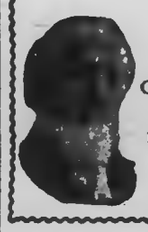
PEOPLE'S PULPIT.



Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

ALL MANKIND TO BE BLESSED

The Gospel of the Kingdom —The Glory of God Shall Fill the Whole Earth.

Singapore, Jan. 28—Pastor Russell's text for today was, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him" (Acts x. 34, 35). A report of his address follows:

Never before have I seen so cosmopolitan a city as Singapore. The swarms of Chinese, Malays, Hindoos, Javanese, Siamese, Singhalese, Burmese, Afghans, Madrassi, Tamils and many other nationalities are here interspersed by representatives of practically every nation in the world. Henceforth New York City must in my mind take second place as respects cosmopolitan population. The sight of these commingled peoples, only a few of whom know of, worship, or in any wise acknowledge "the Only True God, and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent," stirs my heart, and my head as well. My heart goes out in sympathy for them. My head inquires respecting God's provision for the three-fourths of humanity who have never heard of Him and the salvation which He has provided in Christ.

We recognize the clear statement of the Apostle that "Without faith it is impossible to please God" (Hebrews xi, 6); and his question, "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?" (Romans x. 14) and also the commission: "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness, and then shall the end come" (Matthew xxiv. 14). Properly enough we ask, What kind of an end is coming, and what will it mean to the twelve millions who know not God and to the thousands of millions of their ancestors who died similarly ignorant of Him?"

I am, of course, familiar with the diverse theories of the various denominations of Christians, voiced by their creeds. I defer to these to the extent of saying that many noble men are to-day and have in time past been associated with these Christian denominations and their differing presentations. On account of their piety and learning these men deserve respectful attention, but we cannot admit that they were inspired nor that their conclusions are infallible. It is our privilege, nay, it is our duty, to try their suggestions as we would test a good coin. First, we would ring it. If the ring were unsatisfactory, we would apply the acid test and thus demonstrate it. Similarly, no human creed should be accepted as infallibly correct without the application of tests. Does it have the right ring? Does its teaching comport with the Divine character? Is it reasonable, just, etc.? Secondly, Will it stand the acid test of the Word of God? If not, it must be rejected, even though its baser metal be covered with a plating of the gold of Truth.

It will not do for us to say what we guess or what is our opinion or what is somebody's else's guess, while at the same time we acknowledge the Bible to be the Divine Message. If the Bible be the Divine Message, as St. Paul says, "It is worthy of all acceptation." (I. Timothy i. 15.) If not worthy of all acceptation, it is not worthy of acceptation at all, and all Christian hopes based upon the Bible would correspondingly fall. The lesson of this is the solidarity of the Truth—the Bible. What does it say about the heathen? We ask the opinion of the various creeds of Christendom and hearken to their reply.

A considerable class of very good people by their creeds tell us that if God had foreordained the heathen to damnation He would have seen to it that the Gospel would be preached to them, and that their not hearing the Gospel signifies that God "passed them by" as "non-elect", that the "elect" are to be found only amongst those who have been favored of God and will accept that favor and are "sanctified by the Truth" and "made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light." (Colossians i. 12.)

Another class of people by their creeds, which no longer truly represent them, tell us that they believe as above, only that they add another element, namely, that "the elect," in order to be of "the elect," must be brought to a knowledge of water baptism—complete immersion—and must obey this teaching; otherwise they are not the truly "elect." Thus these agree with the former that the poor heathen masses are completely passed by, have no hope for the future, that they are lost—and by lost they mean en route for an eternity of fiery torture—most horrible suffering.

Another theory held by equally good Christian people denies that there is any "election" in respect to the matter, and denies that any particular amount of water is necessary, although it does recommend a little. This creed or theory declares God's love for the heathen, but says that He made faith in Jesus' sacrificial death a condition of salvation and that the responsibility for the heathen's not knowing, and consequently their going to eternal torment, rests with Christians themselves. They say that God did His part in providing the Saviour and that the carrying of this knowledge is wholly dependent upon Christians. One would think that with this view few Christians would be able to sleep a single night after once assenting to such a responsibility and realizing how little they have done or have been able to do to meet the responsibility.

Some dear people holding the views last mentioned have started a "Men and Religion Forward Movement." They propose to use about two million dollars in starting the movement and thereby to collect a fund of thirty million dollars (six million pounds). Dear people! How I love them for their zeal, even though it be as the Apostle said, "not according to knowledge"!—Romans x. 2.

If they could stand in Singapore's streets and journey with us a little the eyes of their understanding would be opened. They would begin to figure out that the sum they expect to spend in converting the world would be little over half a penny per soul! They must indeed think the heathens cheap when they reflect that the estimates on the work of the Rev. Billy Sunday a year after his meetings show a cost of about six hundred dollars per soul, with doubts entertained respecting the saintship of even these. The United States Government statistics and the British Government statistics show that a century ago the numbers of heathen were six hundred millions and that to-day the number is double that, namely, twelve hundred millions.

Whichever of the foregoing views might seem to us less objectionable than the others, surely none of them could satisfy our heads or our hearts. Surely the good men of the past who wrote these creeds in the light of the tallow candle, if writing them to-day in the light of the arc lamp, would amend them considerably, or else leave them unwritten and merely say, We know not the fate of the heathen.

Some, repudiating the creeds of the past as no longer tenable, fault the Bible with being the basis for those creeds and throw it away with the creeds. These are becoming Agnostics, Higher Critics, Evolutionists, Spiritists, etc. And because of their wordly wisdom and social standing these Higher Critics are rapidly undermining all faith in the Bible as an inspired Message from God to His people. They are adrift, some sailing in one direction and some in another—they have lost their Chart of the Ages and the great Compass of Divine Truth in the depths of the sea of human wisdom, which, from the Divine standpoint, is declared to be foolishness. Let us not take their course.

Let us, on the contrary, declare that the difficulty with the creeds of the past has been that they divided up the Word of God amongst them, and that each creed has a certain amount of gold as well as a large accumulation of dross. It would be too serious an undertaking for finites to put all the creeds into a crucible and separate the gold from the dross. Besides, all the sectarian prejudices of our natures would contend against us in such a procedure. Let us take the easier, the simpler method, to which all Christian people should be willing to accede, namely to wholly cast aside our creeds and go back to the Word of God—to the Bible—to the utterances of Jesus and His Apostles and Prophets. Thus doing many will find to their surprise that, while the creeds have gathered precious jewels of Truth from the Bible, they have given the precious settings by which they misrepresent the Truth which they profess to illuminate.

St. Paul's declaration is that the Word of God is sufficient that the man of God may be fully furnished. (II Timothy iii. 17.) His further suggestion is that we "rightly divide the Word of Truth" and that "it is able to make us wise unto salvation." Let us follow this course and allow God's Word to be its own interpreter—allow one passage to throw light upon another; and thus let us reject none of the Divine testimony, but, bringing the whole together, find therein the Wisdom of God, the Justice of God, the Love of God, the Power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to Jew and Gentile.

St. Peter, by birth a Jew, understood that the promise made to Abraham—that his posterity should bless the world—meant that the Jewish nation should have this honor. He did, indeed, know that in all the centuries from Moses to Christ the Jew was not accepted to the honorable position nor given the privilege of blessing the world. He realized that this was because, being imperfect through the fall, they could not keep God's perfect Law. He realized also what St. Paul expressed, saying, Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the election hath obtained it and the rest were blinded.—Romans xi, 7.

Peter supposed that the entire number of "the elect" would be Jews. He had overlooked the prophecies which declare that only a remnant of Israel would be found worthy and that Gentiles would be called in to complete the number of "the elect." Consequently, it was a surprise to him when the Lord sent him to preach the Gospel to Cornelius, a Gentile. He did not think of the Gentiles as being under condemnation to eternal torment, but he did assume that the privileges of being of the elect seed of Abraham to bless the world belonged to Jews only.

When, therefore, the Holy Spirit came upon Cornelius, begetting him as a son of God and a joint-heir with Jesus, the astonished St. Peter, in the words of our text, said, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." We have had evidences of this same Truth throughout this Gospel Age, for now more than eighteen centuries. God has been accepting people of all nationalities to be members of this "elect" class. To these, as soon as they are consecrated to God, on a basis of faith in Jesus' atoning work, the Holy Spirit is given. They become members of the School of Christ—"disciples." Incidentally they become co-laborers with God in searching out others who have the hearing ear and responsiveness of heart.

Under this arrangement the Lord has gradually been completing the foreordained number of His spirit-begotten children of the New Creation. Of these He declares, "They shall be Mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I make up My jewels." (Malachi iii, 17.) But when these jewels shall have been made up or completed—when the First Resurrection shall have ushered them into their promised estate of glory, honor and immortality, then will come the next feature of the work—the use of this class, "the Seed of Abraham," for the blessing of all the families of the earth. Natural Israel will be the first to receive the benefits, as the Scriptures clearly point out (Romans xi. 25-34.) They will in turn be used in extending the blessing far and wide.

As a result "the knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the sea." Then will be the trial or testing time to the non-elect world. So many as will accept Divine favor and seek to walk in the ways of righteousness will be helped and uplifted out of their weaknesses, physical, mental, moral, to all that was lost in Eden and redeemed at Calvary.

Finally, all the unwilling and disobedient will be destroyed in the Second Death—without hope of recovery. As St. Peter declared, they shall perish like the brute beast, hopelessly. On the other hand, the willing and obedient shall be blessed and "shall eat the good of the land." "They shall build houses and inhabit them. They shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them" "and long enjoy the work of their hands." Eventually, "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess," to the glory of God—in loyalty. (Isaiah lxv. 21, 22.) The earth shall become the everlasting habitation of saintly men redeemed by the precious blood of Christ and restored to human perfection during the period of His Reign.

As, therefore, I looked at the composite population of Singapore, I said to myself, Quite probably, from all these peoples, God has selected a few through the Message of the Gospel—a few saints to be joint-heirs with His Son in the Kingdom. But at all events, even if none of the elect class were taken from amongst the heathen peoples, surely the riches of God's grace is about to be abundantly manifested to all the families of the earth through "the elect"—through their administration of the Kingdom.

Ah! how much meaning there is in this expression, "The Gospel of the Kingdom!"—the good news that God will have a Kingdom under the whole heavens! It will not be a Kingdom merely in name, but in power, in influence. "He shall reign from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth." (Psalm lxxii, 8.) He must reign until He shall have put down all insubordination. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." (I. Corinthians xv. 25, 26.) And as for the elect, the Church, the Bride class, to her belongs the glorious promises—"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in my throne"; "To him that overcometh will I grant power over the nations." (Revelation iii, 21; ii, 26.)

One of the first works of the Kingdom will be the binding of Satan. Then will follow the scattering of the darkness of error, ignorance and superstition, which now beclouds mankind. Then the Sun of Righteousness and Truth will enlighten the world and fill it with the blessings and joys of the Lord. Well did the angels proclaim this same Message, saying, "Fear not! Behold, we bring you tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people!" a glorious message it is now to thousands who have the hearing ears and who make their election sure to the spirit plane and a share in the First Resurrection! A glorious message it will be by and by to the sin-cursed world of mankind, to learn of the blessings and privileges of restitution which will then be opened, with the broadest of free grace to every creature! (Acts iii, 19-21.)

Let me exhort, then, to choose earnestly the best thing, the privileges and opportunities of the present time. If you hear the Gospel, harden not your hearts, but esteem that you are living in the blessed time in which God is willing to accept your little all through the merit of Jesus. But if you cannot understand or appreciate all of my message, at least take this little to your comfort—There is a better day coming—"the day of Jesus Christ." And to the extent that you seek to live soberly and righteously, you will be the better prepared for that glorious Epoch and make the more rapid advances back to full harmony with God.

Insurance at Lloyd's.

Lloyd's, the queer English organization of insurance men, will insure you against any happening whatsoever, from an attack of housemaid's knee to a South American revolution. The Lloyd's is a loose knit organization of Englishmen who will underwrite any risk that may appeal to them as a good business proposition. They will even insure a poverty-stricken nobleman against being "sold up" by his creditors or will insure an already burdened family against the advent of twins.

A Beggar's Luggage.

A woman who described herself as "a poor lone Irish widow woman," arrested for begging at Wells, Eng., had the following articles distributed about her person: Tea, sugar, fresh cut beefsteak, piece of bacon, two bloaters, bread and cheese, four buns, bag of biscuits, cooked fagot, two apples, onions, two clay pipes, tobacco, cigarettes and snuff.

A Johnsonian Pun.

When Dr. Johnson visited the University of St. Andrews he took occasion to inquire of one of the professors as to the state of the finances, and, being told that they were not so affluent as many of their neighbors, replied, "No matter; persevere in the plan you have formed and you will get rich by degrees."

West Coast Crabs.

In California many food products grow much larger than they do elsewhere. That rule applies to crabs. On the Pacific coast these creatures are ordinarily four times the size of the Chesapeake bay crab. One west coast crab will make salad sufficient for six people.

Canada's Senators.

Canada's second chamber consists of senators who are over thirty years of age and each of whom has property worth at least £800.

Carol Makes Burglar Weep.

Some pathetic stories of Christmas time have been told by the G.O.M. of the Salvation Army, General Booth. One concerns an old burglar, who was so touched by the singing of a carol in the street by some Salvationists that he went to the General, wept like a child, and told him he wanted to turn over a new leaf.

He confessed that only a few days previously he had broken into a big house in the neighborhood, and had stolen a large quantity of valuable plate.

"I know it will mean seven years' penal servitude for me," he said, "but I will take the punishment. Then my conscience will be free." The gentleman whose house had been burgled by the penitent was by no means a supporter of the Salvation Army. In fact, he criticised its work, but when the G.O.M., with the ex-convict, visited him, and the confession was made, he changed his opinion, and another thing, he forgave the man who had robbed him. General Booth began his business career as a pawnbroker's assistant in his native town of Nottingham, and when scarcely sixteen young William was called upon to become sole supporter of his widowed mother.

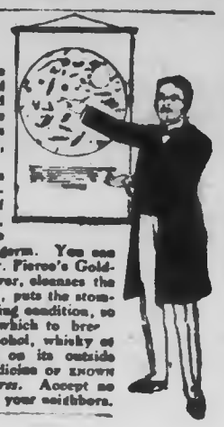
Afraid of Ghosts



Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine of known composition and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

To Avoid the Anomaly of a Second Generation of Children Being Born "Prisoners of War" the Government Is Preparing to Make Final Disposition of the Followers of the Bloodthirsty Geronimo—Closing Chapter in the History of the Apache Indians

BY LAWRENCE MOTT.

(Copyright, 1912, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reser. d.)

WAR prisoners, even to the second generation!

Such is the fate of the last of the Apaches who, under the leadership of Geronimo, took the warpath in '85 and '86 and whose name for many years was symbolical of terror throughout Arizona and New Mexico.

The United States War Department, appreciating the anomaly of a second generation of children being born prisoners of war under the American flag, is now making plans for some permanent settlement of the question, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has recommended that Geronimo's band—consisting of descendants of the original prisoners—who are still under the jurisdiction of the War Department, shall be freed

For military purposes the government is anxious to obtain the land that is now occupied by these Indians, and Colonel Hugh L. Scott, U. S. A., was recently assigned to inquire into the best method of removing them. He recommends that they be permitted to make their home among their relatives in the Mescalero Reservation, in New Mexico. Before this can be done legislation is needed that will provide for the purchase of their cattle and other possessions, and for the allotment of land to those who do not wish to go to the Mescaleros. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has taken the position that land should be allotted at Fort Sill to any who desire to stay there, and that the alternative should be absolutely voluntary with the Indians.

The prisoner band of Indians formerly lived in Arizona, the San Carlo mission at Fort Apache, in the Chiricuhua Mountains, and also at Warm Springs, N. M. A few of the tribe still live in Arizona, but their longing for their native country is pitiful.

At the time of Geronimo's surrender the tribe numbered over four hundred; now there are only 267 left, and owing to their reservation lines being drawn more and more closely together, and to the fact that they are not allowed to mingle with any other tribe, this number will rapidly decrease.

In 1895 the Rev. Frank H. Wright, himself half Indian, as his father was a full blooded Choctaw, went out to the prisoner band to see what he could do toward ameliorating their fate. Money was given by the Reformed Church to the Board of Domestic Missions for this purpose, and he says of their condition at that time:—

"The Apaches still maintain their rather high order of intelligence, but the closeness of their confinement is breeding disease and killing them. When one remembers their last battles one hardly knows which to admire most, the wonderful endurance of the American soldiers or the craftiness and generalship of those few warriors, beating a retreat to the far away mountains of Sonora in Mexico, carrying with them their women, children and all their means of sustenance.

"Geronimo, Naiche and Chihuahua were their leaders, and although Geronimo was not an hereditary chief, but a medicine man, he won the ascendency by certain shrewd prophecies in regard to the battles they engaged in

"When I first came in touch with these people they were still in camp on the north banks of Cache Creek, under the charge of Captain Scott and Lieutenant Allyn Capron, who was killed in the Spanish war. These two officers gave us permission to hold a camp meeting, and the church call was sounded.

"At this time the government was building houses for the prisoners in different villages, twelve in all. Each village was in charge of a scout, who was selected as the most prominent man in each village. In this way responsibility was placed upon the Indians and their villages extended along a six mile stretch of country.

"The way did not seem feasible to us to continue our work among them, so we turned to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes in Oklahoma and were successful in starting a mission there that was placed in charge of the Rev. and Mrs. W. C. Roe, at Colony, which has since that time carried on the work efficiently. Later we again went back to the prisoner band and found that from the standpoint of material progress they were well on the way to learning the art of self-support. They had a few houses, and the government compelled them to keep these and their premises in sanitary order; they had some small farms, and were raising corn, potatoes and garden vegetables; they had cattle and grew their own hay.

"But from a religious and moral standpoint they were degraded, were inveterate gamblers and were immoral. Some had gone East to school, but on their return they almost invariably relapsed into the old habits. Our greatest difficulty lay in reaching the women, for the squaws are more backward and much harder to turn from Indian customs than the bucks."

Throughout the tribes the mission work is the same. It consists primarily in religious instruction, the care of the old and the sick, and the teaching of the squaws how to keep comfortable homes in so far as this is possible.

The average Indian is by no means a fool, and those who state with confidence that there is "no good Indian but a dead one" are vastly mistaken.

Several Indians have come East, studied in two of our greatest colleges—Harvard and Yale—and have gone back to their people, taking with them tangible evidences of the white man's power, evidences that their people could understand and against which "medicine" (magic) had but little effect.

For it must be understood that "medicine" and the Indians' belief in it is not a matter of mere superstition, but a thing that is bred in the bone, a thing that is so securely fixed in an Indian's brain that the Christianizing of it is an almost superhuman feat. Yet it had been accomplished in a great many cases by the sheer force of kindness and patience.

Knowing these things, then, it is a great pity that we of the Eastern world, which to the Indian is symbolical of all power, should treat such of them that come to us for an education with scant courtesy.

There is the case of a full blooded Indian who had made up his mind that he would "obey the words of the white man" and gain an education, so that he might help in the work among his own kind

In this way and that, working on government roads, doing anything he could, he finally earned enough money to come East, and landed with his little cowhide trunk on the railway platform of one of our college cities. He did not know what to do next; all that he realized was that he had at last reached his goal.

A station porter saw a magnificent type of a man patiently sitting on the little trunk and directed him to the college registrar's office. He was assigned to a room, and he went there, carrying his all. It was a double room, and the other man was unpacking. The instant that he saw the Indian he told him that he would have to get out. So the Indian went back to the registrar and asked for a new assignment. After some demur it was granted. The same thing happened, but without a word the Indian went to the office for the third time. A long delay ensued, but he once more got an assignment.

This room was vacant when he went in, the other man having made himself quite at home and gone out. The Indian went to bed. When the white man came in and saw the swarthy face on the pillow he made a furore and told the Indian that he would have to "move on."

With all the stoicism of his race the Indian repacked his few belongings, carried them down to the street, and knowing that it was then too late to go any where else, he sat on the trunk all night, hungry, tired and cold, as he told of it afterward: "Feeling that my trunk was the only friend that I had in the white man's world."

Yet the East boasts of its charity, its broadmindedness, its ease of adaptation. The East seems to forget that such men as this Indian are worthy of all the education that it can give them, that these are the men who can do more toward the solving of the Indian problem than all the missionaries put together.

Dr. John R. Mott told the writer that the Rev. W. C. Roe was doing a wonderful work, and that his success among the Indians was remarkable. So it is. But when one sees such evidences of absolute narrowness in one of our greatest institutions of learning one is inclined to doubt the efficacy of the E Pluribus Unum theory.

Dr. Roe explains the situation as it is to-day in saying that by the treaty of February 17, 1897, the Kiowa-Apaches, within whose reservation the military post of Fort Sill was included, because they sympathised with the prisoner band, voluntarily ceded to the United States 26,897 acres, and later added 1,200 "for permanent settlement thereon of the Apache prisoners of war, and for military purposes."

This land, in addition to the 23,240 acres that constituted the Fort Sill reservation, was amply sufficient to provide 160 acres each to the members of the band, and was intended for this purpose, but because of the martial spirit that was revived by the Spanish War Fort Sill was enlarged, and the Indians, still captives, never had their lands allotted to them, and have grown discontented, beseeching that they get land and freedom.

At a recent council 137 of them decided to go to the Mescalero Apache reserve in the mountains of New Mexico, and the remaining 16, who are the younger and more educated men, and their families asked that they get the land given them by their friends and that their freedom be granted.

The real industrial work among the Apaches began in 1898 through a gift of $1,250 at one of the Mohonk conferences, and it has steadily broadened ever since

The Indians' occupation varies with their different allotments of land. In some places farming is the most successful, in others cattle raising, in still others working on government roads, for which the Indian gets about $.50 a day. But there are other allotments where the land is so poor that the Indians have great difficulty in making a living at all.

The present system of annuities, that is practically the only money that the Indian sees, varies from $2 a year to $60, and it is in an instalment plan payment for the lands that have been taken from the tribes and thrown open to homesteaders. This is all the help that the government gives. A earlier days there were "rations," but these have been cut off, except for the old and sick. In a tribe of 600 hundred, for instance, a very small proportion of them will have ration tickets.

In 1904 one of their chiefs came to New York and stayed with a mission worker. He could speak no English, but he was much impressed with the power of the white man. He said, by the sign of the Indian sign language, that he realized that the white man can make anything that he wished, but he doubted whether the white man is improving that one white man had many things to make about he was sagacious for them all, and that he hoped she go on all things like a mosquito, where the Indian had few things and spent much thought thereon.

The Indian's worship of Nature and commerce Medicine Bluff has been object of worship for generations. Its rock foams and eddies at its foot, its rock is bare, and at sunset the shades are mysterious and vague All these are the things that the Indian loves. I worships the material representation that which he believes to be immortal.

Concerning Anti-Typhoid Fever Inoculation.

THE comparative frequency of typhoid fever renders it necessary to seek some means of reducing the extension of this disease. As there is only a small proportion (about one per cent) of second attacks of typhoid fever, it may be assumed that an attack, even an attenuated one, assures an efficacious preservation, and people may therefore hope for a favorable result from a process of immunization based on an analogous principle.

To procure immunization in a general way, either the system should be inoculated by means of active microbes, attenuated or dead, constituting "active" immunization, or a serum derived from some immune animal should be injected in order to place the organism in a state of defence, this constituting "passive" immunization. The former is lasting, the second is transient and hence less desirable. For this reason bacteriologists have had recourse for preference to "active" vaccination, that is to say, they have used inoculations either of the typhoid bacillus or of extracts or "autolysats" of this bacillus.

From numerous researches made in many countries it results that:—

(1) Anti-typhoid inoculation confers a high degree of immunity against typhoid infection by reason of the power imputed to it "of reducing by at least one-half the number of cases of typhoid fever" in the instances where this mode of immunization has been tried.

(2) Under similar conditions of infection typhoid fever determines a general mortality four times less among those who have been inoculated.

(3) The typhoid fever is less severe and results in a mortality among the inoculated one-half that in other conditions.

As the conclusion of the interesting discussions which recently took place on this subject in the Paris Academy of Medicine that body was of opinion that "the optional use of anti-typhoid inoculation might be recommended as a rational and practical means of diminishing in marked proportions the frequency and gravity of typhoid fever in France and her colonies," that this recommendation is applicable to all those whose profession, habits or accidental conditions of dietary or residence, whose daily and frequent relations with patients or "carriers" of germs expose them to direct or indirect contagion by the bacillus of typhoid fever."

Putting into practice the resolution so definitely expressed by the Academy of Medicine as its indorsement of the report so conscientiously and enlightening established which he had presented to that body, Professor Vincent of the Val-de-Grace Hospital, in August last proceeded to Morocco, where, in the northern region of the borders of Algeria and Morocco, he practised inoculation in the case of 283 soldiers, rather more than one man in ten of the total force

Although these inoculations were made in the month of August on men who were fatigued and weakened by the terrible heat in a region already seriously infected by typhoid fever, none of the men suffered any inconvenience. On the contrary, three men who were already in the incubation stage of typhoid fever at the moment when they were inoculated, or who were attacked during the course of the immunization process, suffered from only a very mild form of the fever

The exceptionally unfavorable conditions in which the troops were then placed, says Dr Vincent, owing to the absence of local resources, the bad quality of the water, the extraordinary abundance of flies infected with germs, and finally the epidemic which prevailed in the region, had also no effect in reducing the efficacy of the inoculations. In order to assure rigorously exact results care was taken not to inoculate any man who had previously had typhoid fever or even a slight attack of gastric fever. Moreover, the Arab troops, with the exception of one native officer, were not inoculated.

The inoculated and the non-inoculated mingled indifferently, participating in the same fatigues, the same service and the same manifold causes of infection.

Out of 283 soldiers inoculated 125 were treated with Wright's preparation, a culture of typhoid bacilli in peptonized broth, and 154 were treated with Dr. Vincent's preparation, made with different species of typhoid bacilli.

Under these conditions the 2,652 men of the European force who were not inoculated against typhoid fever and not immune owing to a prior attack of typhoid, had, during the months of August, September and October, 171 cases of typhoid fever and 134 cases of slight gastric fever The number of deaths was 22. The proportion of cases of typhoid fever and slight gastric fever among the non-inoculated was 115.88 per 1,000 men.

The 129 men inoculated with Wright's preparation had a single case of slight typhoid fever or a proportion of 7.75 a 1,000 The 154 men treated by means of Dr Vincent's preparation had no case of typhoid fever, no case of suspected gastric fever and no deaths.

The soldiers who were inoculated and who did not become infected during the process of immunization were thus enabled to go through a violent epidemic without being attacked by the disease, which struck down an enormous proportion of the non-inoculated. These results are all the more convincing and all the more important, says Dr Vincent, because everything which could attenuate or annihilate the effects of the inoculation and all the most serious causes liable to produce an intense predisposition to typhoid infection were found combined in this instance

Accordingly, as a consequence of these facts, members of men who had not been rendered immune came spontaneously and begged to be inoculated. In one camp more than a third of the soldiers requested to be treated.

The anti-typhoid inoculations made in Morocco demonstrate the perfect harmlessness of the preparations used in the treatment. They likewise prove their efficacy. This method of immunization therefore appears to be a great advance in the struggle against typhoid fever, the attacks of which are so frequent and so serious both among civilians and in the army.

Odd Corners in Coins.

THERE have occurred from time to time in various countries all manner of "corners" in commodities of an almost innumerable variety of origin.

Some years ago an individual named Peterson established in a "boom" town of Oklahoma a bank that was a branch of a larger institution elsewhere As, for special reasons, the people of the new town would have nothing to do with the new bank the outlook for Peterson was a gloomy one.

After reflection he hit upon a happy expedient. He sent out men commissioned to go to all the stores of the place to get change for greenbacks and bank notes. In a little while he had all the coined money in the town, the result being, of course, that the good people of the coming metropolis were flush of greenbacks but had no "change."

Some one suggested that Peterson's bank might possess some of the coined pieces, and accordingly a rush was made therefor, where every one was deluged with silver. The ruse of the wily Peterson had the desired effect, as the next morning his bank was filled with depositors.

Superstition has frequently been the basis of a corner in coins of a particular denomination. A remarkable case of this kind occurred in Southern Russia in 1903. There appeared at Berdiansk, on the Sea of Azov, a person proclaiming himself a prophet, and as such he announced his intention of redeeming the world. Among the queer doctrines advanced by this individual was decided the decree that all his followers must remain all are hopeless pieces issued in the year 1861, the year of the emancipation of the serfs. They were by reason of that event held to be lucky.

It was not long before the ignorant peasants in the vicinity became convinced that all pieces of that denomination should be brought to the prophet for preservation. The heaven sent one further announced that should the fatherland get into difficulty every one of the coins in question would "turn to gold" and thus save the Empire.

And so it happened that over an area of three hundred miles Russian peasants were feverishly collecting the "holy" pieces and turning them over to the prophet. When he had gathered a goodly number of the coins he decamped.

In a way the Russian government may be said to corner its own coins of one denomination. Each year it mints a limited number of bronze pieces of the nominal value of one-fourth of a kopeck, about one-eighth of a cent. As these coins are practically not in circulation, only a few are issued. The remainder are sold by the mint authorities at almost double their value for use as card counters.

It is really an easy matter in small towns to corner a particular coin. At a Welsh holiday resort members of the local band became so indignant at the large proportion of halfpennies in their "silver collections" that they locked up every halfpenny received. The consequence was that in a few weeks there was hardly a halfpenny in the town. Then the band reaped a harvest of coins of higher value.

Cornering gold coins demands a capital that few men possess. Some years ago, however, at Dieppe, there occurred a sudden scarcity of ten franc and twenty franc pieces, due to the operations of an eccentric Britisher, who, for some cryptic reason, had the day before changed into gold. Laden with the coins, he left for Paris, and a week elapsed before the town regained its normal amount of gold.

An attempt to corner the Maria Theresa dollars, used in parts of Northern Africa, collapsed by reason of a queer circumstance. An Abyssinian, Ras Makonnen, conceived the unique scheme of collecting all specimens of these coins extant in his district. As they were old coins, he reasoned, they would rise in value. When he had possessed himself of about three thousand of them he found that the country was as well supplied with them as before.

While he had been busy collecting them modern Maria Theresa dollars, made in Germany, were being imported by the thousand. The result was that the coin fell in value, and the too astute chief lost half his wealth.

JOHN SMITH EVERYWHERE

THE good old name of John Smith does not suggest in England any great degree of aristocracy, but transferred to other languages it seems to climb the ladder, so to speak.

Thus, in Latin it is Johannes Smithus, the Italian smooths it off into Giovanni Smitti, the Spaniards render it Juan Smithus, the Dutchman adopts it as Hans Schmidt, the French flatten it out into Jean Smeet and the Russian says Jenieff Smittowski.

When John Smith gets into the tea trade in Canton he becomes Jevan Shimmit; if he clambers about Mount Hecla the Icelanders refer to him as Jahns Smithson. If he trades among the Tuscaroras he becomes Tom Qa Smittia; in Poland he is known as Ivan Schmittowski; should he wander among the Welsh mountains they talk of Jihon Schmidd; when he goes to Mexico he is called Jontli P'Smitti; if of classic turn he lingers among Greek ruins he turns to Ian Smitton and in Turkey he is utterly disguised as Yoo Soof.

A SMUGGLER

The Chief of the New York Customs—Captain Bryne—pressed the button of an electric bell and then began to pace majestically up and down his office.

The Chief resumed his walk, which was soon interrupted by the arrival of Curtis, a keen-eyed, clean-shaven man about 30, who respectfully saluted his superior officer.

"Inspector, I have just received this cable from Paris."

Curtis took the form in his hand and rapidly read the contents.

"Purvis has sailed by Lucania with $100,000 worth of diamonds. Look out for the champagne."

The inspector handed back the cable and looked inquiringly at the Captain.

"You must collar him this time. It is simply scandalous the way that Purvis has been escaping you. To my knowledge he has got through with his load at least six times."

"I will do my best, sir."

"Your reputation is at stake, Inspector!"

"I will have him this time. The champagne is a hint. I will keep my eye on that."

The Lucania was making a very rapid trip. There were not many saloon passengers and they were all inclined to be sociable. Perhaps the most popular man was Hon Cyril Pelham, who went out of his way to make himself pleasant with everyone.

Even the Chicago horse dealer did not get angry with him when Pelham won $500 from him at "draw poker."

"I guess it is a pleasure to lose to that feller. He is a gentleman! What!"

In addition, Pelham carried his own "wine cellar" with him. "The ship's wine is not always the best, don't you know," he remarked one day, with a drawl.

Hon. Cyril had a large stateroom to himself, and it was customary for two or three men to go there about 11 o'clock at night to sample his wine—and to play "poker." Invariably the host gathered a few hundred dollars from his guests.

Sandy Hook lightship appeared but too soon—from Pelham's point of view. They were just in time to be boarded that evening, and at 7 o'clock Hon. Cyril Pelham was seated in a four-wheeler. His dressing cases were beside him; on the roof of his cab there rested a large portmanteau and a deal case. Upon the latter was stenciled "Heidsieck Dry Monopole, 1893."

He gave his cabman directions to drive to the Hoffman House. He looked sharply around, but failed to see the keen-eyed young man who called a hansom and gave the same directions to the driver.

Upon arriving at the hotel he engaged a sitting room and bedroom en suite.

Send my baggage up," he said to the porter, "at once, please. I want to dress," he added.

"What about the case, sir?" he asked.

"That can come up, too," Pelham replied, carelessly.

He leisurely began to dress. The first white tie did not please him. The low was not good.

"Hang the thing!" he exclaimed, irritably.

Another was taken, when suddenly a knock was heard at the door.

"Come in," he called.

A young man, neatly dressed, with an air of a commercial traveller, entered hastily.

"How do? Glad to see you."

"You have the advantage," Pelham said coldly. "To what—"

"Just come to have a glass of wine with you."

"Eh?"

"Yes. I prefer champagne and—"

"Any particular brand, may I ask?"

"Heidsieck, preferably."

"Indeed. Any particular year?" Cyril drawled, languidly.

"Well, I think 1893 will do. It is handy," he rejoined, pointing at the case.

The two men faced one another. The visitor's expression did not change and at last Pelham turned away with a laugh. He rang the bell and when the waiter came he ordered him to open the case of wine.

"I've got you this time, Purvis," the Inspector said, with a chuckle.

"I fail to understand you. My name is Pelham," the other rejoined, quietly. "Who may you be?"

"Inspector Curtis—very much at your service and not anxious to drink your health."

"Very nice of you, I'm sure. I'm never loath to stand a policeman a drink."

With dextrous hand Pelham removed the wire. He then drew the cork, but there was no resounding "pop."

"Flat! That's strange," he murmured. "I'll try another bottle."

"Never mind; I'll drink that. Let me pour it out."

The Inspector took the bottle and quietly emptied the contents into the glasses. He peered eagerly and swore under his breath.

"I think I'll try another bottle," he said, at last.

Pelham took up another quart.

"Curious, isn't it," he remarked, when there was no "pop" to the second bottle. "Heidsieck ought to be good."

"Pour it out," the Inspector ordered.

The champagne was poured out. Again the Inspector was disappointed.

He emptied a third bottle himself, but with a like result. No "pop," no "fizz," no sparkle—not even of diamonds.

Bottle after bottle he opened, and he became angry as he held the twelfth and last.

Pelham still smiled sweetly.

"Now you've finished, perhaps you would like to take—the bottle with you?"

"Yes, I will," he rejoined, shortly.

Pelham again rang the bell.

"A quart of Heidsieck, '93, quickly," he ordered of the waiter.

This time there was a resounding "pop."

He quickly filled the tumblers.

"Better luck next time, Inspector," he said, genially, as he raised his glass to his lips.

* * * * *

Muffled in a fur coat, the Hon. Cyril Pelham might have been seen some few days later driving to a small house off Twenty-third street. He was quickly ushered into an office and an elderly man eagerly rushed in.

"Have you got 'em?" he cried, eagerly.

"You bet" was the laconic reply, from the pockets of which he drew, one by one, 12 champagne corks. With deft fingers he took his knife and sliced off the end of one, disclosing a small steel cylinder. A shake and two or three lustrous diamonds fell to the table. One after another the corks were treated in a similar manner until the table glistened with a wonderful display of gems.

"Well, I'm blessed!" the other ejaculated. "You're a wonder, Purvis."

"The Hon. Cyril Pelham smiled a calm but modest smile.—Philadelphia Evening Star.

WAS A GREAT SUFFERER FOR FIVE YEARS FROM DYSPEPSIA.

Dyspepsia is one of the most prevalent troubles of civilized life, and thousands of people suffer untold agony after every meal, for nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. Mrs. Wm. J. Boyne, Lepreau, N.B., writes:—"I thought I would write and tell you of the good Burdock Blood Bitters has done me and also tell you how thankful I am.

"For five years I had been a great sufferer from dyspepsia, and tried different doctors and proprietary medicines, but could get no relief. One day a friend told me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I did not have much faith in it, but I thought I would give it a trial. To-day I am completely cured, and I will always recommend it."

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for about thirty-five years and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Raised Me From the Grave"—Mrs. Taylor

This is a strong statement to make, but it is exactly what Mrs. Thomas Taylor, of Blum, Texas, said in expressing her opinion of this remedy.

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine raised me from the grave and I have much confidence in it. I can never say enough for your grand medicines. If anyone had offered me $100.00 for the second bottle of Nervine that I used I would have said 'no indeed.'"

MRS. THOMAS TAYLOR, Blum, Tex.

AT THE BASKETBALL GAME

Girl—Isn't this a large gym! My, I do hope our boys hold their own. It's perfectly terrible to have to play in a strange place like this, isn't it? Jack says they'd be sure to win if they were playing on their home ground. Oh! Look! Is that Tommy Parker?

Young Man—No, that's Pete. Now, please listen just a minute—

Girl—Good!. They get the other basket. We have this one and it'll be easier to see. What a big fellow their centre is! Oh, dear, we'll never in the world get around him. Mercy! That's the whistle. Oh, oh! Good boy, Sam! Oh, do look.

Young Man—I'm looking. Jack's clumsy, isn't he?

Girl—Oh, do you think so? I think he's just as graceful! Oh, get your man, get your man! Oh, why doesn't he? Wasn't that a splendid pass! Good, good; oh, good!! Get it, Pete, get it. Oh, take your time! Oh! how was that out? I'd like to know how that was out. Did you ever hear of such a thing? The referee last week didn't count it out. Oh, look, look!

Young Man—Jack fumbled badly, didn't he?

Girl—I'd like to know how anyone could help it with such a pass as that was. Gracious! That's an awful foul! Referee, that was foul. Oh, he saw it. Good for you, Harry! Now, take your time, take your time! Easy! Oh, it didn't go in. Wasn't that too bad? Get your man, get our man!

Young Man—They can't hear you over all this cheering.

Girl—Jack can. He says he always hears my voice. It helps a lot.

Young Man—You don't seem to care to help me much; you've scarcely spoken to me for ages.

Girl—Why, I've talked a lot. Oh, foul! He hit him!

Young Man—I don't call it talking to me to cheer the other fellows. It isn't very exciting for me. I'll bet you wouldn't call "good" to me if I were playing.

Girl—I might if you were good, but you never did shine at basketball. Oh, look! Don't let him make it, don't! Oh, don't! You can't put it in, you can't! Oh, he did. Isn't that dreadful? I think that's perfectly terrible. Look at the way they laugh! Isn't it mean? That's 2 to Oh! Good, Harry! Go it! go it! Oh, did he get it? Did he?

Young Man—Couldn't you see it? Pretty neat, all right.

Girl—No, I was so scared I shut my eyes. Wasn't it splendid? Good hit! Oh, what a pass! Did you ever see such a team! Mercy! Don't let him have it. Oh, it can't be their ball. Get your man! Oh, what's wrong?

Young Man—Time out. Your big friend twisted his ankle. Now, will you let me say just a word?

Girl—Certainly. I've been listening to you all the time.

Young Man—That's good. Listening all the time when you haven't even known I was here!

Girl—Oh, yes, I have. Oh, they've put in a new man. Good for Harry! Run! Oh, dear, there's the whistle. That's the half.

Young Man—They were so late before that they'll take only a couple of minutes' rest. Will you listen to me then?

Girl—I am listening. Wait till I toss Jack a fudge through the bars. I'm feeding the animals, Jack. Here you are. We're proud of you up here. Good work!

Young Man—You promised that you'd listen to me.

Girl—Well, you didn't say anything. Oh, here they come. My, their team looks bigger than ever. Our boys always do better the second half, but they're pretty well matched, here they go! Oh, they'll do it, they'll do it! Oh, they did, they did! Wasn't that grand? Wasn't it? I do love the shouting, don't you? Two all now. Get your man! Get your man! That's a foul! Oh, good! Careful, Jack, careful! You've got lots of time. Go slow, go slow! Oh, I knew he would! Jack never fails. Good, good, Jack, good! Oh, isn't he the dearest thing!

Young Man—Not in my estimation. I am afraid I don't enjoy being out out by Jack.

Girl—Oh, it's such a splendid game. It's so close and everything. Three to two. Oh, did he make that? I was talking to you and I didn't see. Oh, dear, isn't that too bad! Now they're one ahead. Goodness! Why doesn't somebody do something! I wish I was down there. Get your man, get your man! Why don't they stop him? Why don't they?

Young Man—They've got him, all right. The paragon, Jack, at last came to time and did something worth while!

Girl—Oh, run, run! Don't let them stop you! Oh, he got it! No, he didn't. Wasn't that too bad? They've got only two minutes more. Good, Jack! Good, oh, splendid! Oh, Jack, Jack! Don't get excited! Oh, he did, he did! Five to four! Five to four! Get your man! Oh, there they go! Don't let him make a basket! Oh, how stupid of Jack! Oh, they'll get it. I'm afraid they'll get it! Oh, thank godness, there's the whistle! Wasn't that splendid? I never saw such a good game. Didn't you just love it?

Young Man—I can't say that I did.

Girl—Well, we'll go now, and on the way home you can tell me what you were going to say. I don't see why you didn't tell me while we've been sitting here. It was an awfully good game, wasn't it?

SEEN AND HEARD

The short waist was just going out of fashion in 1812; skirts were almost as skimpy as to-day's. The ultra fashionable wore them of very soft, sheer, clinging material. These gowns were the subject of many a satire, a historian tells us. Fur muffs of a size even as they are now were liked so well that many women in muslin dresses, straw hats and fur muffs are preserved to us.

The stylish man wore tightly fitting trousers and went in for considerable colour, vying with the rainbow in that respect. Sideburns pointed toward an approaching bearded age. When he travelled he rode on top of a coach.

Boats plied between New York and Philadelphia upon which passengers "ran down" to either city in ninety-six hours; railway trains now make it in two hours. Freight rates were high; bad roads and high tolls made the average rate of transportation the country over cost $10 per ton per 100 miles. To haul a ton of freight from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, an all land route, cost $1.25; to move a bushel of salt 300 miles on any road cost $2.50; $5 to move 100 pounds of sugar the same distance. It cost $1 to get a bushel of 50-cent wheat from Ohio to New York. Canvas covered waggons, drawn by oxen and horses, did the freighting.

The cost of freight, together with the war in Europe, which cut off most of the American commerce, sent prices to such a height that poor people lived on the verge of starvation. In Boston flour cost $17 a barrel; salt, $3 a bushel; coffee, 63 cents a pound; sugar, 50 cents a pound; molasses, $2 a gallon; tea, $4 a pound. Everybody who had any spare change bought up all the foodstuffs he could and stored it, awaiting still higher prices. A paper of pins cost $1.

The average New England labourer got $7 a month and board during the winter, $10 in summer. Along the great lakes wages rose to the monumental figure of a dollar a day. Labour organizations were merely benevolent societies, and the thought of striking for higher wages had just taken root. The only occupation that paid big money was slave smuggling, which, despite all the laws, was carried on with little molestation.

The first steamboat went down the Ohio from Pittsburg. Prior to that they built boats in Pittsburg, floated them down to New Orleans, or to Nashville, and there abandoned them. That gave the boat building industry in Pittsburg a never ending stream of customers.

The Methodist Episcopal conference voted down a resolution prohibiting their preachers from selling whiskey and beer. The first American missionaries were sent to foreign lands, going to Asia. The army canteen was introduced. "A gill of rum, whiskey or brandy is made a part of the regular daily rations of each soldier."

Travellers did not send picture postals to the folks back home, postal cards not having been invented. There was no registered mail, and no special delivery mail. To send a letter composed of a single piece of paper forty miles cost 8 cents; if it went over 300 miles the postage was 25 cents. But if the letter weighed an ounce four times those rates were charged.—Milwaukee Journal.

CASCARETS WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

Salts, Calomel and Cathartic Pills Are Violent—They Act on Bowels as Pepper Acts in Nostrils

Take a Cascaret to-night and thoroughly cleanse your Liver, Stomach and Bowels, and you will surely feel great by morning. You men and women who have headache, coated tongue, can't sleep, are bilious with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have headache and feel all worn out.

Are you keeping clean inside with Cascarets—or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the decomposed waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels.

Remember, a Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning. A 10-cent box from your druggist means a clear head and cheerfulness for months. Don't forget the children.

Good Recipes

SPINACH WITH CREAM

Needed: Two pailfuls of spinach, two tablespoonfuls of salt, two ounces of butter, eight tablespoonfuls of cream, one small teaspoonful of pounded sugar, a very little grated nutmeg. Boil and drain the spinach, chop it finely, and put it into a stewpan with the butter; stir over a gentle fire, and when the butter has dried away, add the remaining ingredients and simmer for about five minutes. Boil the cream before adding, or it may curdle. Serve on a hot dish and garnish either with sippets of toasted bread or leaves of puff paste.

STEWED PEARS

Take six or eight pears, water, sugar, two ounces of butter, the yolk of an egg and one-half ounce of gelatine. Peel and cut the pears in any form that may be preferred and steep them in cold water to prevent them from turning black; put them into a saucepan with sufficient cold water to cover them and boil them with the butter and enough sugar to sweeten nicely until tender; then brush the pears over with the yolk of an egg, sprinkle with sifted sugar, and arrange on a dish. Add the gelatine to the syrup, simmer it quickly for about five minutes, strain it over the pears, and let it remain until set. The syrup might be coloured with a little prepared cochineal, which would greatly improve the appearance of the dish.

POWER OF HEREDITY

The power of heredity must be recognized. Only by intelligent breeding on systematic lines can it be maintained. The standard of utility is demanded, and to this supreme test must all classes of stock be brought. Nothing else will do or endure. No matter how choice the breeding, it will be of little worth unless backed by utility. This alone can determine the value of blood. Many a flock of hens condemned by the breeder would pay a good profit if given a chance. Utility covers the breeder as well as the breed.

USELESS LINIMENTS

For nearly fifty years a staple in every drug store in America.

If a case of cramps or stomach-ache turns up, Nerviline is ever ready. We use Nerviline for neuralgia, rheumatism and all kinds of aches and pains; it's good as any doctor."

Use Only "Nerviline"

Scores Recall of Judges.

New York, Jan. 29.—On the eve of his three-day visit to Ohio, his home state, President Taft spoke last night at the Waldorf-Astoria to the Ohio Society of New York, delivering probably the most impassioned speech he has made in many months, directed against the "nostrums of reform" and particularly aimed at the recall of judges.

In the efforts that have been made to reform legislation in this country, the President said, he saw much that was good. He saw the faults of government in the United States to-day and admitted that in trying to eradicate them much might be accomplished by reformers. But in the effort to make the judiciary responsive to every "whim" of the people, he saw destruction.

He declared that the conservative element of the nation must eventually "get together" to prevent a movement that would make the courts the creatures of popular will and might make the decision in every case, not accord with the law, but accord with what a majority of the people thought the law should be.

Bad Fire In Pittsburg, Mass.

Pittsburg, Mass., Jan. 29.—Flames that raged for six hours yesterday morning, destroyed three buildings in the business section of this city at a loss estimated at $250,000. The Academy of Music building, which contained the oldest playhouse in the city; the Miller building, which adjourns it on North street, and a storage building in the rear, were the structures burned. The fire started about midnight in the rear of the Outlet Clothing store, which was on the first floor of the Academy building. The police regard the origin of the fire as auspicious, and State Officer Thomas E. Bligh began an investigation.

The high wind with zero temperature hindered the firemen, who worked for hours in coats encased in ice. One fireman who had stood over a hose for a long time was frozen so severely that he could not move and was carried to a nearby hotel to be thawed out.

THESE ARE PLAIN FACTS

Now, when nearly everybody is coughing, it is well to know the plain truth about coughs and colds.

Since coughs are caused by irritation of the sensitive lining of the bronchial tubes, the only way to cure a cough is to stop that inflammation. The only way to do that is through the blood—by making it richer so that it will nourish and soothe the inflamed, tender tissues.

Instead of cough syrups we always recommend that sterling blood and strength renewer, Vinol. It is a delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil and actually cures coughs, cold and bronchitis by building up the whole system.

Mrs Bessie Mathes, Lynchburg, S. C., says, "I want you to know what Vinol has done for me. I have had chronic bronchitis for the past year, coughing, and losing sleep a great deal. Two bottles of Vinol fixed me up all right, my cough is gone and I am better in every way."

We give back your money if Vinol does not do all that we claim. Mr. Dermid and five druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store corner George and Simcoe streets.

STIRRING ADDRESS AT FIELD DAY MEETINGS

Mass Meetings in The Opera House Were Largely Attended Rev. Prof. Hallam Explains Workings of Present License System---How The Movement is Spreading.

Yesterday was field day for the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance. Seven public meetings were held at various points throughout the city, during the day, and practically all of the towns and villages in the country were touched, as well as the churches in the rural sections. Altogether about thirty services were held under the auspices of the Alliance, at which addresses were given by twelve different representatives.

The mass meeting held in the Opera House, in the afternoon, was largely attended, and close interest was manifested in the energetic temperance addresses given by Rev. Prof. W. T Hallam and Rev. Ben H. Spence, both of Toronto.

Mr H. B Cowan presided, and Rev. W. G Riddiford opened the meeting with prayer.

Rev. Prof. Hallam.

Rev. Prof Hallam, who was then called upon to speak, gave a short, but conclusive address, dealing principally with the inconsistencies of the present license policy, as adopted by the Ontario Government. Some people think because the Governments show their approval of the liquor traffic, by extending licenses, and otherwise stimulating the trade, that it must be all right. This is a misconception of the true situation. The Governments do not show their approval; their action towards the liquor trade is clearly one of disapproval. You grow barley, potatoes, and other products out of which liquor can be made; yet, if you attempt to convert your produce into intoxicating liquor you render yourself liable to prosecution, simply because you are doing what you like with your own stuff. Your next move, therefore, would be to take out a license, allowing you to manufacture your produce. You would then proceed to sell it, but before doing so you would have to secure another license, giving you power to turn your manufactured product into cold cash. The license law is one big piece of injustice from beginning to end, from the liquor man's standpoint, therefore, when the Government imposes such drastic restrictions on the traffic, it is doing nothing more or less than showing its disapproval. The bars are closed on election days because the Government says "When you are doing our business, please keep your head clear". They are compelled to close at seven o'clock on Saturday evenings, in order that the wage-earner may be protected from its evil influences, and temptations. The present license system disapproves of the barroom by introducing limitations. The Government is recognizing the prohibitory system by creating restrictions.

Dealing figuratively with the question and taking one hundred as a basis we find that in licensed districts there were, on an average last year, two hundred and sixteen convictions for direct violation of the liquor laws. In local option districts, with one hundred as a basis, there were only sixty-five, and yet the anti-prohibitionists will tell you that local option is no a success because the laws governing it are constantly violated. The model saloon only exists in the minds of certain editors of liquor journals, and in the imagination of temperance workers.

Rev. Benj. Spence.

The effects of the campaign conducted by the temperance workers of Ontario is incalculable, declared Mr. Spence. It is not a case of conducting an isolated campaign here, and there, but it is the result of concentrated efforts of the temperance workers and the Alliance throughout Ontario. It is not only local option we are working for, but a step to something better.

"In five years, five hundred and forty seven local option contests have been conducted; out of that number four hundred and fourteen were successful. On the first of January there were one hundred and seventy-eight places where a repeal by law could have been submitted to the electors, but one hundred and sixty-five of these could not secure up the necessary petition, and the fifteen who did try, were defeated. We have now, in Ontario, a clear majority of ninety-one, representing more than one-half of the Province. [illegible] to sell liquor cannot go forward to-day is along the right lines. If you will look over the past few years I think you will see that the local option by-law has met with approval.

There are, of course, objections. One might say that individuals will obtain drink elsewhere. Local Option is not responsible for that, it is caused by the entail of the bar-room. It will be a good thing when a person may enter an hotel without danger of temptation. Hotel keeping is one of the most honourable businesses I know of, and it is only the bar-room we are fighting. I look for the time when the hotel will be a home. The day is coming and is coming very quickly.

Mr. H. Arthur Barton.

Mr. H Arthur Barton said: I am not only for temperance, but for a specific sort of temperance, namely, prohibition, day and night, Sunday and week day, holidays and election days, tooth and nail. (Applause).

In travelling, I find the bar an awful nuisance, largely owing to the fact that you do not get the attention in hotels where there is a bar. It is often the case that when entering an hotel you find no clerk there to look after you.

We have nothing to say to disparage the splendid hotel at which we are staying in this city. One must look at one fundamental principle in this great question and one which occurred to me this afternoon when I listened to the addresses, was "universality of right". There is a striking difference between etiquette and ethics. What is permissable in Paris is not permissable in say, Butte, (Montana), but I say there is only one thing that is right in ethics, and that is universal right. As Lincoln says "If slavery is not wrong, nothing is," and thus it is with drink. If liquor is not wrong in every sense of the word, nothing is.

Rev. R. M. Hamilton.

Rev. R. M. Hamilton was the next speaker. "It is 360 years ago," he said, since Britain formed laws for the curtailment of the liquor traffic. From time to time the strings of these laws are drawn still tighter, and as they are drawn tighter, the better things become for the populace.

"I like the ideal set forth in one of Lloyd George's recent addresses, in which he said: "I long for a land in which you will see no drunken man staggering along the street, to this home."

Prohibition in the State of Maine was said to have been a failure. When we come to consider that if we drank as much liquor in Canada as in the State of prohibition Maine we should not consume nearly so much as we do at present, we shall readily see that Local Option at its worst, is better than license at its best.

I was speaking to the head of a prominent firm of financiers last week, and he told me that though he was not a teetotaler himself, he would rather employ a thief than a man who frequents the bar.

The Rev. Ben. H. Spence.

The Rev. Ben. H. Spence, on rising, said: We are in a campaign to try to get rid of an evil and to establish a good. We have in this movement a tremendous future, and this movement depends entirely upon you. I know of no investment that will give such good returns as a contribution to this movement.

It is said that in some places Local Option was not a success. We took the trouble to send a wire to the Mayor of every local option town asking the following questions:

"Is your town thriving?"

"Have you good hotel accomodation?"

"Is it better than under license?"

"Has local option hurt business?"

The speaker then proceeded to read several of the answers and also replies from towns selected by the audience, and each showed that the town in question was thriving, that the hotel accommodation was good, and better than under license, and that business had not been affected thereby, except, possibly, the liquor business.

In concluding, he said: The man that says that local option will not go in Peterborough is offering an insult to the citizens of Peterborough.

The Musical Element.

The proceedings were enlivened by vocal selections rendered by Mr. Howard Russell, who possesses a baritone voice of wide compass, and exceptional richness of tone. Judging from his performance last evening, the gold medal awarded at the Earl Grey competition was richly deserved. In the second song Mr. Absolon, he displayed great command over his voice and his articulation was almost perfect. He responded, also, to encores, and all were well received by the audience.

Here is a remedy that will cure your cold. Why waste time and money experimenting when you can get a preparation that has won a world-wide reputation by its cures of this disease and can always be depended upon? It is known everywhere as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and is a medicine of real merit. For sale by all dealers.

REASONS FOR DECISION

In the County Court of the County of Peterborough, between Patrick Carroll, Appellant, and Daniel Thompson, respondent. G. N. Gordon for Appellant. R. E. Wood for Respondent.

This is a so-called appeal from a conviction of Carroll, dated December 20, 1911, by the Police Magistrate of the City of Peterborough, whereby he was convicted and fined $25.00 with costs for that he did unlawfully sell, give, or supply, liquor to one Lavery, a person apparently (or to the knowledge of the said Patrick Carroll) under the age of twenty-one years.

I say, "so-called appeal," advisedly, for the statutes and practice provide in such cases, there must be a wholly new trial by the Judge. In this case there was such a trial; the evidence and line of argument being very different from that below, and probably for that reason alone a different result. The onus is therefore on the Respondent or Complainant the same as in the first instance. Carroll is a licensed bartender at the Oriental Hotel, in this city. Evidence was given to show he had been a bartender for 25 years and was never in that time convicted with infraction of the liquor law, which is in his favour, so far as it goes, but only so far. To convict him, the following must be proved.

1.—That he sold liquor to Lavery.

2.—That Lavery was to Carroll's knowledge, under 21, or,

3.—That Lavery was apparently under 21 years.

It is proved and I find that Carroll did on December 16th, 1911, sell liquor to Lavery.

I find also that he, Lavery, was then under 21, to wit, 19 years old. This was amply proved. It is not proved to the knowledge of Carroll that he was under 21. The contrary is the fact. The sole question therefore, is "Was Lavery then apparently under 21 years of age. If he was, Carroll should be convicted; if not the existing conviction must be quashed.

What does "aparently" or "apparent" mean and to whom must the "apparency" appeal, or to whom must he be so "apparent". Is it to Judge, or to the world at large, i. the bartender, or to the Magistrate or [illegible] men of ordinary observation, intelligence, reason and common sense, the public generally. I think it must be so to the ordinary reasonable citizen, the general public.

Further, does apparently here mean "probably," or "plainly, evidently". Several witnesses were called to testify to their opinion, or judgment, of Lavery's age. There was, of course, a large diversity—16 or 17, up to 23—this diversity largely varying with the view point of the witnesses. Some of the witnesses, as to the apparent age of two other young men present at the Court, proved quite inaccurate in their opinion. The learned Police Magistrate also found that in his judgment Lavery was under 21. I do not find fault with that judgment I quite agree with it.

But is that enough? I think not. The weight of evidence given before me was that in the judgment, or opinion of the deponents he was under 21 years of age, but there was quite a diversity in the opinions, even of those who thought so, as to his exact age, and more so, when compared with evidence given on behalf of the appellant, Carroll.

"Apparent" as clearly perceived Standard Dictionary as follows: "as judged by appearances," "without passing on the reality," seeming plainly evident to the senses.

"Apparent" is "clearly perceived or perceivable," evident; easily seen, or to be seen.

With such diversity of opinion undoubtedly honest, can it be said that Lavery was clearly, plainly, evidently clearly perceivable, or easily seen, or to be seen under 21 years of age? I cannot so find, and so failing to find the appeal must be allowed.

In addition to this, inspection by the Court is allowed as a mode of proof, when practicable to assist in forming a conclusion, but a Judge may not decide on his own view exclusive of evidence. London v. Lavelle 1901, 1 Ch. 135.

Here I had a view of Lavery and heard the witness in addition. I am asked now to adjudge him under 21, but I cannot say so plainly, as if evident.

I have found from general observation and especially in viewing witnesses' appearances are often deceptive, as a criterion of age, especially so, perhaps, at about the age of majority. Lavery is a stout, heavy, strong young chap, with character [illegible] very fully marked in his face—sensuality, probably, of youth; on the other hand, he is as large as the ordinary grown man, and has a substantial growth of hair on his face, quite visible, [illegible] clean shaven, as much as, or more than many young men [illegible] 25 [illegible] His appearances undoubtedly indicate a considerable age, and so

TORONTO CENTRAL Y.M.C.A. LEADERS CORPS ENTERTAINED BY THE LOCAL ASSOCIATION

The Toronto Central Leaders Corps, under the direction of Mr. Fred J. Smith, the popular Physical Director, paid the local Association a visit on Saturday night. Arriving 28 strong on the 7.50 train they journied to the local "Y" where they were the guests of the Senior and Intermediate Leaders Corps.

Here they dotned their 'Gym' togs and gave some fine exhibitions of gymnasium work, including dumb bell drill, high horse and spring-board and the sailors horn-pipe dance, each number being warmly applauded by those who were fortunate enough to be present. This part of the programme over, the local Leafers joined in the games, teams being chosen by Dr. Manning, D. Loomis, A. Hardy, F. Peacock, G. Hall and Smith. After some fast and close playing, Manning's, Peacock's and Loomis' teams got into the semi-final in this series, Manning again earning the right to play Loomis' team for the championship, which was won by Dr. Manning's team. Score 2 to 0.

After the gymnasium work, the Toronto Leaders sat down with the local men to a banquet in the boys reading room. After all had partaken of the good things, President P. M. McCarrell called on Mr. H. M. Gilchrist to give the address of welcome (in the unavoidable absence of Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., President of the Association.) This was followed by a few words of welcome by President McCarrell on behalf of the Senior and Intermediate Leaders Corps. Mr. Smith of Toronto, was then asked to say a few words, following which Mr. J. Brimsmead, President of the Toronto Central Leaders Corps, spoke.

The proceedings were enlivened considerably by the singing of club songs set to popular tunes, Mr. Howard Russell contributing three excellent numbers. Mr. Smith also gave a very humorous recitation. The gathering was brought to a close by the singing of the national anthem.

The Sunday programme was a very full one, all the Bible classes combining for the morning session at 9.45, when Mr. Allison, Asst.-Boys Work Secretary at Toronto Central, gave an address on the Compensation of Service.

The regular Gymnasium Men's Bible class met as usual in the parlour at 4 p.m., when Mr. Fred Smith gave a most helpful address on "Character and Athletics," at the conclusion of which Mr. Thompson called on Mr. H. M. Gilchrist, Wm. Hastie and A. Fitzgerald to come forward. Mr. Hastie read an address to Mr. Gilchrist who leaves Peterborough next Wednesday to become General Secretary of the Broadview Branch, Toronto from the members of the class expressing their regret at his departure and asking him to accept as a slight token of their esteem a volume of poetical works by the great writers, the presentation being made by Mr. A. Fitzgerald. Mr. Gilchrist was completely taken by surprise, but thanked the members most feelingly for their gift.

Tea was then served by the social committee to the Toronto men and other friends, after which a short song service was held until church time, when all attended George street Methodist church in a body.

The Toronto men left for home by special car over the C.P.R. at 5.26 a.m., high in their praises of the treatment they had received at the hands of the local men. The return visit will be made by the Peterborough men on Feb. 24th.

HOW OUR MEMBER APPEALS FOR POINTERS

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., for West Peterborough, has broken out in a new spot. He has addressed a manifesto "to the farmers of the West Riding of Peterborough," asking them how he shall vote—and, Lord knows, judging by recent exhibitions, he needs coaching badly enough.

The Government Mr. Burnham supports proposes negotiating for reciprocity with Australia, a proposal that makes Mr. Burnham shake in his boots. Australia, he says, exports "vast quantities" of chickens, butter and eggs, laid down in Canada at less than one half of Canadian prices for the same products. He thinks—"that is my opinion"—that reciprocity with Australia would "rob the farmer here of his protection, and almost ruin him." He doesn't propose to "discriminate against the farmer in favour of the manufacturers," who at the same time should be protected. But not one chirp in favour of the workingman and consumer. They must continue to struggle with the high cost of living, to save the farmer from the ruinous competition of Australian butter and eggs, shipped across the torrid zone, across 15,000 miles of sea.

Mr. Burnham doesn't know how to vote, and he has issued his manifesto to find out whether the farmers are afraid of Australian reciprocity and whether or not they wish him to vote for or against it. He appeals to the farmers to let him know "with all speed" how to vote on the subject.

But will Mr. Burnham vote as the farmers tell him? They told him how to vote on the Ne Temere decree, and he declared himself both for and against it. He has been voting and working all along contrary to what he was elected to vote for.

And now he comes with the childish proposal that the farmers should tell him how to vote on reciprocity with Australia.

If the electors have to be consulted by their member on how to vote on every little subject that comes up, it strengthens the growing conviction that obtains regarding West Peterborough that it might as well not be represented at all.

An army of farmers went to Ottawa to tell what they wanted. Mr. Burnham turned down an army like this, and now he wants to get the opinion of two or three West Peterborough farmers as to what he wants, for it the farmers pay as little attention to Mr. Burnham's manifesto as they paid to his celebrated prize to farmers in 1908, for the best essay on the worthlessness of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, which brought no replies, he won't get much light, and will have to vote, as he voted on the Ne Temere bill, both for and against it.

West Peterborough wants a representative with a spine with courage enough to take the responsibility of his position; one who won't shirk responsibility, and when he gets in a tight place, unloads it on the poor, long suffering elector.

West Peterborough don't so much mind being perfunctorily represented; but it hates to be made ridiculous.

THE WORLD MOVES.

For the first time in the history of Queen's Alma Mater Society, the lady students sat on the floor of Convocation Hall, Saturday night, prepared to vote on the question of introducing a uniform university pin, in the form of a gold "Q". The "Q" has always been much sought after by Queen's students, being awarded in athletics and debating only. Though the meeting approved by a small majority an amendment to the constitution permitting a "Q" pin for all students, there is no doubt that it will take such a form as to be readily distinguishable from the debating "Q" or plain gold athletic 'Q'. "The world do move," and to a higher level, when the ladies take a hand in making the men mind their P's and Q's, especially Q's. The spirit of the suffragette takes less beliggerent, but quietly effective expression, in the form of a college pin, than in the brick bats of the trans-oceanic sisterhood. The action of the male students of the college in admitting ladies ad eundem gradum, even in the matter of a pin is prophetic; it portends that feminine subordination, as represented by pin-money, is passing away, and that woman's full right to an equal share and interest, in the purse, will attend a wider recognition of her rights to live and move, and have her being on a plane level with the lords of creation.

IT CANNOT BE DONE.

It is stated in despatches from Kingston that it is the intention of the Dominion Government to push the Welland Canal enlargement with all possible speed, and to leave themselves unhampered they will refuse to look at the Georgian Bay Canal scheme and will drop Trent Canal construction. This may be put down as a ghost story. Whatever weakness the Dominion Government may show in other matters it has not certainly parted with its sanity far enough to entertain the idea of abandoning completion of an almost completed national waterway, whose services are so badly needed in the interests of national development. If the Borden Government had contemplated abandoning the Trent Canal it would not have adopted the estimates of the outgoing Liberal Government appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 for construction work on the Canal. Abandonment of the Canadian navy is no precedent. We ca possibly struggle on without warships, but it means a bigger struggle, as our crop production loudens its clamour for an outlet, to abandon the Trent Canal. Not only national, but distrct, interests, demand its completion. We owe the fact that his district has become a pivotal factor in the Ontario Hydro-Electric scheme to the work already done on the Trent Canal, and continued work on it will continuously develop its importance in this regard. If there is anything like abandonment of the Canal seriously entertained, local interests, especially in Peterborough, should organize effective and energetic opposition to such a suicidal and retrogressive idea as abandonment of work of the Trent Canal. It can't be done.

THE FACTS CONCERNING THE BUCKHORN BRIDGE MATTER

The Sequence of The Several Steps Taken to Relieve The County of $3000 Liability Duty of Present Government to Complete All Arrangements.

The following misleading and untruthful despatch, with the misleading heading, appears in Saturday's Review.

NO AGREEMENT TO CANCEL DEBT OF COUNTY TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Stratton Promised to Wipe Out $3,000 Indebtedness of Peterborough Council When Laurier Government Took Over Buckhorn Bridge.

(Special to the Review.)

Ottawa, Jan. 26.—A very awkward situation has arisen over the failure of the Laurier Government to carry out its promises to the county of Peterborough made at the time of the great celebration on the taking over of the Buckhorn bridge, on June 22 of last year. J. R. Stratton then promised the county to cancel its three thousand dollar indebtedness in regard to the bridge, but failed to carry out his promise. Now the present government can find no agreement of the late government to do so.

In the first place no "awkward situation has arisen" except what was created by a change in the representative of West Peterborough. The Minister of Railways and Canals would not have failed to carry out his promise, if the people of the riding and Dominion generally had not deprived him of the power to carry out his intentions. The people decided upon a change of representative and of government, and the "awkward situation," if any, has arisen through failure of the present Minister of Railways and Canals to carry out the arrangements made by his predecessor. The following correspondence will show how the matter stands. On Feb. 27th, 1911, Mr. Stratton wrote to the Minister of Railways and Canals, (Hon. G. P. Graham), as follows:

MR. STRATTON'S LETTER.

Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ont.:

Dear Mr. Graham,—At the January session of the County Council of the County of Peterborough, the question of the payment to the Government of three thousand ($3,000) dollars, promised by the County to the Government, to assist in the construction of a bridge over the dam at Buckhorn, recently constructed by the Government of the Dominion at an expense in the neighbourhood of seventy-five thousand ($75,000) dollars, was under discussion.

I was present at the Council during a part of the discussion and both in the interests of the County and of the Dominion, hearing the discussion, I was of the impression that it would be a far better course for the Government to forego any claim upon the County for the three thousand ($3,000) dollars promised for the construction of the bridge, than to insist on the original agreement being carried out, for the following reasons.

There is bound to be friction between the County and the Government that was not anticipated when the arrangement was made.

A look at the plan will easily show you that there is every reason that my contention be accepted by the Government.

The position of affairs is briefly this:

(1) The approaches to the dam are owned by the County and the concrete bridge situated on the top of the dam is also owned by the County.

(2) The stop-logs that have to be placed and replaced in the sluices, when lifted, are rested upon the bridge, owned by the County, on County property, and to a certain extent constitute an obstruction of the highway.

(3) Between the east end of the bridge and the swing, there is a piece of land filled in, owned by the County, before reaching the swing bridge, owned by the Government, and then there is the north approach owned by the County.

This condition of affairs is extremely undesirable from a Government standpoint and easily represents a breeding ground for trouble between the County authorities and the authorities of the Government.

The bridge is not kept clean, in proper condition, as it is a County bridge, with dual responsibilities as to its care.

The Government caretaker of the swing and dam has no right to touch the bridge, and as a consequence it is neglected.

The caretaker of the dam and swing bridge has plenty of time to look after and keep the bridge, (built on top of the dam) in proper condition, if he only had the authority given him.

I would suggest for your consideration that in view of the situation of affairs, which gives no one, either the County or the Government, full authority over the dam and bridge, and as the dam is a most important one, and is the key to the whole system of lake between Buckhorn and the Kirkfield Lift-Lock on one end, and Trenton on the other, that the matter should be placed in the hands of the Government, who would have absolute authority and undivided jurisdiction.

With your approval, I am satisfied that I would be able to convince the County Council of the County of Peterborough, at their first meeting in June next, to pass a by-law giving to the Government a conveyance of all their rights as to the land and bridge, which naturally constitutes a part of the Government property, conditional upon the Government surrendering any claim which they feel the County is indebted to them in their promise to contribute the three thousand ($3,000) dollars towards the construction of the concrete bridge situated on top of the dam.

I would further suggest, now that the County Council seem to be willing to approve of these suggestions being adopted, that it would be a good thing for the Department of Railways and Canals to procure a report upon the subject from the officials of the Government, and if satisfactory and approved, let me know, and I shall be glad to facilitate matters as best I can, with the County Council.

You will see from a little consideration of the whole situation that the affair, for a small one, is of an intensely complicated character, the County having little dabs of land to which they have a right, between the property owned by the Government.

Hoping to have a consideration of the matter and a reply at your earliest convenience, I have the honour to be,

Yours obediently,
J. R. STRATTON

MINISTER'S REPLY

To the above letter, the Minister sent the subjoined reply:

Ottawa, 2nd March, 1911.

Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P. House of Commons—

Dear Mr. Stratton.—Your letter of the 27th ultimo, in connection with the bridge over the dam at Buckhorn, has been received, and I will ask Mr. Campbell to give me a report in the matter.

Yours truly,
GEO. P. GRAHAM.

DEPUTY MINISTER WRITES.

A few days later the Superintendent of the Canal, Mr. J. H. McClellan, received the following letter from the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals:

Saturday, March 4th, 1911.

Dear Sir,—Prior to the construction of the dam at Buckhorn, there was a wooden traffic bridge, supported on top of the old wooden dam, which, we understand, was built and maintained by the County.

In the re-construction of this dam, no provision as being made for the highway traffic but after conference with the County, it was understood that a suitable highway bridge to take the place of the old one would be built on top of the new concrete dam, the County to contribute $3,000.00 to this work. It appears now that some of our works extend over the property owned by the County. The bridge was built about twelve feet wide, not suitable for passing vehicles as was the case in the old bridge; owing to the joint owner-ship and maintenance there is some conflict between those in charge, and that the bridge is not kept in as clean and as good condition as it might otherwise be.

Some arrangement might be made whereby the County would convey to the Government the lands now owned by them, and over which the dam extends, relinquish their rights in the bridge, the Department to maintain the bridge and relinquish its claims for the contribution of $3,000.00 and make the bridge free to the general public.

We should like you to look into this matter very carefully and make us a full report, together with any recommendations.

Yours truly,
A. W. CAMPBELL.

A short time afterwards, the Superintendent communicated with the Minister of Railways and Canals, recommending that the proposal in respect of the bridge submitted to the County Council by Mr. Stratton be acted upon. The letter is as follows:

14th March, 1911.

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 4th instant, with reference to the present position of affairs in connection with the Buckhorn Bridge.

The chief objection to the present joint ownership of this bridge is in respect of the joint responsibility as to maintenance and management. There is no doubt that, if the bridge were entirely taken over by this Department, it would be kept in a cleaner state, and more in keeping with the appearance of the remainder of the Dominion Government property at Buckhorn. In the regulation of the water it is necessary for our caretaker of this dam to go on the dredge and use a portion thereof to rest our stoplogs on, when they are taken out of the weirs. If, however, we should take over the bridge from the County, I do not anticipate a very great expense for the up-keep thereof, for the reason that the bridge is of re-inforced concrete, and will not likely require any repairs for a generation.

The County does, I believe, own a certain piece of land between the western end of the bridge and the eastern side of the lock. I think that it is desirable that the Department should acquire this piece of land. It is proposed that the County shall convey it to the Government, in lieu of our taking over the bridge. It will also be necessary for the Township to pass a By-law transferring to the Government all their right, title and interest in the said bridge.

If the Department decides to take over the bridge in question, it should be distinctly agreed by the County that, should the Department at any time decide to divert the roadway at the west side of the dam they may do so. The point I desire to make clear is, that at the present time the swing bridge at Buckhorn is over the lock. This, of course, interferes with highway traffic, when vessels are being locked through. It is quite likely that at an early date we may decide to have the location of this swing changed to a point immediately west of the upper entrance to the lock. In carrying out this plan it will be necessary to divert the roadway from the northern end of the main bridge to the west, to join the swing bridge over the western entrance to the lock. If the Government at any time decides to undertake this work, it should be distinctly set out that the County need not be in any way consulted in the matter.

If the County is prepared to convey to the Government the piece of land owned by them at this point, and here referred to, and is willing to agree to the other recommendation herein made, I would recommend that the Department relinquish its claim for the contribution of the $3,000.00, and make the bridge free to the public.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) J. H. McClellan,
Superintendent.

A. W. Campbell, Esq., C.E., Deputy Minister, Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ont.

ANOTHER LETTER.

After Mr. Stratton had seen the report by Mr. McClellan, the Superintendent of the Canal, of March 14, he again communicated with Hon. Mr. Graham, in the following terms:

Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Graham,—Regarding the three thousand ($3,000) dollars promised by the County of Peterborough to the Government, in connection with the construction of the bridge over the dam, at Buckhorn, or Hall's Bridge, as it is sometimes termed, and which has been under consideration by the Department, I should be glad, if your views accord with those of the County, that your Department would write the County a letter agreeing to the proposition.

Some members of the County Council called to see me to-day, with regard to the matter, and I promised them that I would communicate with you again on the subject.

Yours faithfully,
J. R. Stratton.

GOVERNMENT ACTS.

Two days after, on April 12th, the following letter was received from the Minister of Railways and Canals:

Ottawa, 12th April, 1911.

Dear Stratton,—I have your letter of the 10th instant. We are preparing an Order in Council at the present time in connection with the $3,000 promised by the County of Peterborough to the Government, in connection with the construction of a bridge over the dam at Buckhorn, as I believe upon investigation, that this is the proper arrangement to make. As you know, I cannot say positively that it will go through until Council has decided.

Yours truly,
George P. Graham.

Hon. J. R. Stratton, M. P.,
House of Commons.

COUNTY COUNCIL MOVES.

Nothing further could be done in the matter until the County Council met in June. At this meeting, on June 21st, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Moved by Mr. Breault, seconded by Mr. Russell: That this Council cede all claim to the Dominion Government to the Buckhorn Bridge and approaches, or right of way belonging to the County on condition that the Dominion Government cancel the County's liability to the Government, namely $3,000.00, and keep the bridge open in future for ordinary traffic. Carried.

And later in the same day a committee was appointed to deal with the matter, as shown by the following resolution:

On motion of Messrs. Maher and Breault, Messrs. Garbutt, Howden Porter, Shaw, Knox and the Warden were appointed a committee to make provision for all details in connection with the formal handing over of the Buckhorn Bridge to the Government to-morrow.

Mr. Stratton was not present on the occasion of the formal handing over of the county's interests in the bridge to the Superintendent of the Canal, and is not in any way responsible for what was said in connection with the matter.

The correspondence given also shows that so far as the Minister of Railways and Canals, (Hon. Mr. Graham), is concerned, he approved of Mr. Stratton's proposal, and had taken steps to give it effect. Had the Government become sustained there would have been no doubt of the result, and there is no reason for doubt now, unless some "prentice hand" interferes to bungle the job, or the present Minister fails to carry out the arrangement made by his predecessors, to relieve the County of responsibility in respect of the $3,000.

SOME MORE SONG HITS FOR THE ROOTERS' CLUB

Here are some more parodies for the use of the Peterborough Rooter Club.

Tune—'Make a Noise Like a Hoop.'

"Make a noise like a score and roll it up, roll it up, roll it up.
If Lindsay don't like it, just feed them up. Peterborough just for fun.
Win to-night boys and you'll win the cup, win the cup, the O H A cup
Score some goals so quick, they can't see the trick
And just roll, roll it up."

Tune—"What's the Matter With Father."

What's the matter with Clancy?
He's all right.
There's nothing the matter with Clancy,
Although he's light
He's the boy with the timely shot.
He's at his best when the game is hot.
What's the matter with Clancy?
He's all right.

Tune—" John Dough."

Cup Park, Cup Park,
Your accuracy aim to hit the mark
Don't stand them high, you shoot them low
And into the net they're sure to go
Cup Park, Cup Park,
No matter the goal-keeper's looking dark,
It's easy to see you have got his goat.
The original Cup Park

Tune—"I'll Make a Ring Around Rosie."

We'll Sally come rings around Stod-dard,
We'll Sally come rings around Ba-
Although he's supposed to be speedy,
If he don't like it he's standing still
When the Speed Boys all get going
Then it takes some class and some skill
We'll Sally come rings around Stod-dard,
We'll Sally come rings around Bill

ONE MILLION DOLLARS FOR A GOOD STOMACH

This Offer Should Be a Warning to Every Man and Woman.

The newspaper and medical journals recently have had much to say relative to a famous physician's offer of a million dollars for a good stomach.

This great multi-millionaire was too busy to worry about the condition of his stomach. He allowed indigestion to run from bad to worse until in the end it became incurable.

His misfortune serves as a warning to others.

Every one who suffers with dyspepsia for a few years will discover anything he owns for a low stomach.

Dyspepsia is commonly caused by an abnormal state of the digestive juices, or by lack of tone in the walls of the stomach. The result is that the stomach loses its power to digest food.

We are now able to supply certain missing elements to help to restore to the gastric juices their digestive power, and to aid in making the stomach strong and well.

We know that Rexall Dy-pepsia Tablets are a most dependable remedy for disordered stomachs, indigestion and dyspepsia.

We want you to try them and will return your money if you are not more than satisfied with the result.

Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in the community only at our store. The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

Regular Tickets Will Not Be Honoured On Excursion

In connection with the "special" to Lindsay for the big intermediate battle to-morrow night, it should be noticed that those who wish o come home on the special train to-morrow night, must go to Lindsay, on the excursion. Regular tickets will not be honoured on the special train on the return trip. The special train leaves at 7 o'clock, with a round-trip fare of 75c for adults, and 40c for children. The Peterborough team is in the pink of condition for the battle, and determined to add another victory to their already long string. A victory to-morrow night will give them the championship of the district, while a defeat will result in a tie-up, which explains the determination of Capt. Park and his men to take no chances. Tickets are on sale at Sam Ray's cigar store the Examiner Office and the Grand Trunk up-town office.

Urges Appointment Of A Competent Sanitary Inspector

Editor of Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Some, at least, of our more enlightened citizens believe in the old adage, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," as is evidenced by the spasmodic agitation for adequate sanitary protection, relating more especially to the removal of garbage, milk delivery and unsound meat exposed for sale.

This trend of public opinion impels me to reiterate what I advocated in your columns more than a year ago, viz., the appointment of a competent sanitary inspector.

When it is understood that such an official's duty includes the inspection of sanitary conveniences, dairies, bakeries, butcher shops, factories, schools, fish, fruit, vegetables, and every article of food submitted for sale, to procure samples of food, drink and drugs for analysation, etc., etc., it must be admitted that our sanitary inspector's office (save the mark) as at present conducted, is little short of farcical. With all its other natural advantages, when Peterborough possesses a decent sanitary system, we can conscientiously boost the city.

Yours faithfully,
SANITAS.

Wolves In South Harvey

Mr. Fred Johnston Trapped a Large One With Poison

BOBCAYGEON, JAN. 29.—While wolves are seldom seen in South Harvey these days, Fred Johnston recently secured one with poison, that he had set out for foxes. The latter had been seen around Allan's Landing, and a trap had been placed for them near Dr. McCumus' summer cottage. The wolf proved to be an unusually large one, with a hide worth from ten to fifteen dollars. The news of this "easy money" boosted wolf stock considerably, and the other roving ten dollar bills in wolf's clothing, will be kept busy during the next few weeks dodging traps and meat peppered with white powder.

FITZGERALD CONVICTED

TORONTO, ONT., JAN. 29. — An echo of Toronto's reputation as a prize fighting centre worse than Reno, was heard in the police court this morning, when Magistrate Denison formally convicted James Fitzgerald of the National Sporting Club for promoting prize fights. The case will be taken to the higher court.

PLUMBERS PROFIT

By The Trouble Caused to Water System During Recent Cold Snap

The recent prolonged spell of cold weather and consequent freezing of water pipes has caused considerable annoyance to those who did not take extra precautions to protect exposed parts. Some plumbers reported quite a busy time. Others claim, however, that the careful work of the present day trade considers the weather when installing a water system. However, some of the trouble caused by the frost is appreciated most by those who found a section of the ice bound.

CONGREGATIONS HAVE A DUTY

A notable sermon was recently preached in Montreal by the eloquent and well known preacher, Rev. Alvin Abbott of Hamilton. He urged that not only had the clergy a duty towards their congregations, but congregations had also a responsibility towards their clergy. Perhaps for 20 clergy who ran their congregations to the ground there were probably 40 congregations who ran their clergy down to the hell of discouragement and failure.

INDUCTION OF REV. MR. GROBB

The induction of the Rev. R. B. Brobb as rector of All Saints' church will take place on Friday evening, Feb. 16th, and will be conducted by His Lordship, Bishop Reeve of Toronto. JUSTICE MUST BE DONE SAYS "ONE WHO KNOWS"

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—A little over a month ago a certain Hotel Keeper in Peterborough sold liquor to one who was black listed. The "black listed," after having obtained the liquor, took it over to a place where another "black listed" was working, and the two partook of the illegal purchase. Shortly afterwards the purchaser of the liquor was brought before the Police Magistrate by one of the Police Officers of the city, and was fined $25 and costs for the offence.

At the trial it was stated to the Magistrate where the liquor was obtained and the quantity, so that there is no excuse for the License Inspector pleading innocence, to justify his neglect in not prosecuting the Hotel Keeper for the illegal sale.

The fine was not paid by the convicted. He spent his 30 days in gaol, and although I have called the attention of the public to this matter, the Inspector has done nothing to prosecute the Hotel Keeper for the illegal sale. The Hotel Keeper has been defiant, and says a whole lot of things very disrespectful of the Inspector, whom he particularly defies. Why should he defy the Inspector? Why should the Inspector allow himself to be defied.

This matter is not going to drop. Justice is going to be done, and I will hand all the particulars over to Mr Peck, the representative for the Local Legislature, or some other member of the Legislature, unless proceedings are taken to protect the public and the black listed.

I had intended calling the attention of the public to the great crime that was committed in supplying liquor to the bright young man who was frozen to death, while under its influence, but respect for himself, and his little family, that he has left behind, prevented my doing so. This unfortunate thing would not have likely occurred if the law had been rigidly enforced and Hotel Keepers filled with the fear of breaking the law and imperilling license life.

I intend keeping the matter in the press until such times as the paid servants of the law do their duty, and instil the wholesome fear of the law into the hearts of the Hotel Keepers.

By the way, is it not the duty of the Police, when the Inspector will not do so, for them to take the matter out of his hands and see that the law is enforced. What has the Chief to say?

Yours truly,
One Who Knows.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

ONE of my letter friends, who was particularly interested in the talk about "God's delivery horses," has sent me a most interesting little document along this line.

This document was issued by authority of the Police Department of New York and has been published in several cities. I do not think it can be published too widely or too often.

If you haven't seen it yet, I'm sure you'll find it much food for thought in regard to mans best animal friend.

If you have seen it before, look it over again. It's worth it.

Feed me, waters Prayer to His Master.

Horse and care for me, and when the day's work is done, provide me with shelter, a clean, dry bed and a stall wide enough for me to lie down in comfort. Talk to me. Your voice often means as much to me as the reins. Pat me sometimes, that I may serve you the more gladly and learn to love you. Do not jerk the reins and do not whip me when going up hill. Never strike, beat or kick me when I do not understand what you want, but give me a chance to understand you. Watch me, and if I fail to do your bidding, see if something is not wrong with my harness or feet.

Examine my teeth when I do not eat. I may have an ulcerated tooth, and that, you know, is very painful. Do not tie my head in an unnatural position, or take away my best defence, against flies and mosquitoes by cutting off my tail.

And finally, O, my master, when my useful strength is gone, do not turn me out to starve or freeze, or sell me to some cruel owner to be slowly tortured and starved to death; but do thou, my master, take my life in the kindest way, and your God will reward you here and hereafter. You will not consider me irreverent if I ask this in the name of Him who was born in a stable. Amen.

"Well, Miss Cameron, you may be just about perfect, you write against so many faults," a woman said to me the other day.

Although she was polite enough to say "you must BE about perfect," I was bright enough to know that she meant "You must THINK you are about perfect."

Just about once in so often, personal friends or letter friends present this point of view to me—that by talking against so many faults, I seem to set myself on a pedestal, and I feel as if I must say a word for myself in this matter.

Dear friends—near and far—if you please, I do not mean to imply that I do not possess a fault when I inveigh against it. Quite the contrary. For I'll tell you a secret—half the time when I diagnose a fault successfully and inveigh against it bitterly, I can do so because the fault is right in my own heart and life. You see, having it at such close quarters, gives me both the ability to understand it thoroughly, and the reason to hate it bitterly. Half the time it is myself more than any one else whom I am censuring.

And now that I've made this most humiliating confession, you will reward me by never thinking me a prig again, won't you?

A little girl went into an unlighted room to get something, and stood for a moment gazing intently into the darkest corner.

"What's the matter," said big sister, who had followed her, "are you afraid of the boogey man?"

"My no," said the little girl, who had reached the mature age of ten, "I'm too old for that. But I always look into the darkest corner once, 'cause then eevrything else looks real light."

I wonder if the little girl will take her philosophy of "looking into the darkest corner" in her grown-up life with her. I wonder if she will realize the analogy. For it seems to me there is one.

Look once at the dark corner, make yourself face and be prepared for the least cheerful possibility, and then turn your back on the darkness and look towards the bright side, and see how very bright it seems—in other words, be prepared for the worst but look for the best.

Don't you think that philosophy would be as good for life as for dark rooms?

Field Day At Mark Street

Several hundred people were away from Mark Street Church yesterday morning, with a new conception of the magnitude of the work undertaken by the Dominion Alliance. Rev. Ben. Spence, Secretary of the Alliance, occupied the pulpit, and to a large audience, delivered a stirring address on the Temperance movement. Mr. Howard Russell, of Toronto, the well-known baritone rendered a couple of solos during the service. He has a rich voice in which volume and clear interpretation are equally represented.

The collections for the service amounted to seventy-four dollars. This sum will be devoted to the propagation of the temperance movement in Ontario.

Complains Of The Dogs

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—It is astonishing how great the ever increasing number of dogs, that howl through the highways and by-ways of the city at will, is becoming of late.

These canine pets (?) seem to assemble in companies on the streets in the daytime, when, with their bow? wows and yap yaps! create quite a furore, and the space of ground they cover in a few seconds, when "chevvying" up and down side walks and around street corners, is colossal, creating a general nuisance. A typical case occurred Saturday, at the corner of Charlotte and George streets, when a squad of some eight or nine mongrels careered in and around the large number of marketing people and were a source of inconvenience.

But there is another view, and a more serious one. At night these canine brutes prowl hither and thither and form a menace to pedestrians. An instance of a day or two ago is recalled. A citizen was walking homeward, through one of the streets, when a dog, unprovoked, rushed at him, and not content with emitting numberless mustn't semi-growlers, followed the man almost a quarter of a mile. The animal then attacked him, and it was only the opportune arrival of a man, who had the bucket, which he carried, [illegible] that prevented [illegible].

A walk of certainty is not pleasant. [illegible] at any residence, to be [illegible] with a pair of glaring [illegible] and a quartette of formidable [illegible].

Large dogs, small dogs, good dogs, [illegible] dogs, white dogs, black dogs, dogs of uncertain temper, dogs of [illegible] all of these are allowed to meander about, chewing up what they will, and should one of these animals, with unclean mouth, bite a person, there is always a possibility of disastrous results.

There is unnecessary evil, for which, at present, there is apparently no remedy.

Yours truly,
"Hydrophobia".

Cow Testing Work Advancing

Reports from all parts of the District show that a great deal of interest is being taken in the Cow Testing movement and that a number of men who formerly were opposed to cow testing are making preparations to test their cows this year as they are beginning to realize that the only sure way to know what a cow is doing is by weighing the milk and having samples tested.

Many interesting things have been revealed during the past year. Take for instance the case of the farmer who told us last spring that he was "disgusted with his cows". When his June report was received we found that two of the cows averaged 1,230 lbs. of milk, which was very good, but the other four cows only averaged 547 lbs., and the six together averaged 775 lbs. Thus the good work being done by the two cows was being lost sight of, because of the poor work of the four cows. The two cows were producing more milk than the other four, and all were being fed alike. Many men hesitate to start testing their cows, because they think they are not very good, and are ashamed to let it be known; but they need have no fear on this score, as all the information obtained is private.

At a sale of grade Holstein cows, held in Norwood, on Jan. 26th, under the auspices of the Farmers' Club, the cows which had been tested during the past year, and the records of which were announced at the sale, averaged over $11 a head more than those which had not been tested.

THE NE TEMERE DEBATE

From the Toronto Star

Ottawa, Jan. 25.

Ne Temere certainly filled the galleries and the House. The word ran around town that Lancaster was up, and after dinner the decollette and diamonds, not to mention the rank and file of Ottawa citizenary, flocked to the scene. Even if it had not been Ne Temere it would have been a notable occasion, because seven hours' hot stuff at the end of a two thousand hours' hush-hush—which is what the present session of Parliament has amounted to—is a treat worth enjoying.

The evening's entertainment started as a possible tragedy, drifted into comedy, and ended a solemn farce—Lancaster being the chief actor all through. There was a great deal of sound and fury signifying nothing. Ne Temere is just about where it was before the seven hours' spasm took place. Although Lancaster and eleven other Conservative members including the Premier and three Cabinet Ministers, threw fits and foamed more or less at the mouth, Ontario is just as far as ever from settling the question: "Are we married or are we not?"

THE STORY OF THE PLAY

By this time the outlines of the debate are known, but the story of the play will bear telling. The moral of the play is that the Government made a mistake in leaving Lancaster out of the Cabinet. He is a painted lath. The Toronto Telegram can cheerfully add him to its list of broken idols. When it came to a final showdown, the member for Lincoln wasn't there with the goods.

Lancaster has the bewildered brow and the silky eye of the fretful porcupine. He mistakes his emotions for thoughts and his prejudices for arguments. The red, red rose of his Lancasterian anger mounts to his brain and plays the deuce with his common sense. You will notice the same thing in rivers as in men. When they are broad, strong, deep they flow peacefully; when they are narrow and shallow they make a lot of noise and don't like being crossed.

As Lancaster's speech progressed he showed plainly enough that he didn't like to be crossed. He was quite unreasonable with the other speakers and would argue only on his own terms. Any attempt to widen the syllogism he took as a personal insult. He kicked and struggled and scratched and hit all along the line. He wouldn't listen to Doherty, because Doherty would go outside the metes and bounds of the Lancaster bill to amend the Marriage Act. He wouldn't entertain Sir Allen Aylesworth's opinion of Ne Temere because it was not delivered in the House, and he wouldn't listen to the Hon. Tom White, probably because he objected to a young lawyer like the Finance Minister, albeit a gold medallist of Osgoode Hall, giving an old hand like him points. Lancaster is by way of giving himself airs as a great constitutional lawyer, but when it comes to a run-in with another lawyer he conducted his case with the restraint and moderation of a billy-goat chasing a small boy off his vacant lot.

Like many another man, Lancaster failed to live up to his brief hour of fame. When he came in it was "Bid me discourse and I will enchant thine ear"; when he backed out he looked like three times ten in one-cent pieces.

Everybody has read the debate and everybody knows what Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Premier Borden said and what stand each took on the matter. Premier Borden's motion to adjourn was admittedly bad tactics, but the good little god Billiken who looks after Premier Borden, ably assisted by the Honourable Bob Rogers, got Premier Borden out of the hole once more and cut off short at eleven hours a debate that had fever enough in it for seven years. Everybody would have smiled to see the Ne Temere Cabinet Ministers being vigorously interpellated by their own Colonel Sam. Yes Colonel and Honourable Sam was there with two questions—aye, and the answers, too, sometimes. It's a cold day when Colonel Sam isn't making votes in Victoria County.

Some of the Interludes

Doherty, the Minister of Justice, took half an hour to say what Sir Allen Aylesworth put in a twenty line interview. He talked enough like a Churchman to peeve Lancaster and enough like a lawyer to confuse the audience. It is simply wonderful how an expert lawyer can muddy clear water. Doherty hands out his technicalities in the most amiable way. He looked like an elderly cherub in distress, a sort of neat talcum powder pink, not unlike J. J. Foy endeavouring to explain away bilingual schools.

Whose Burnham Comes In

The denouement of the play begins with Burnham of West Peterborough. Burnham made a speech, a typical blundering Burnham speech, in which he came to the conclusion that he favoured both courses—Lancaster's and Premier Borden's. It was possibly Burnham's idea of a joke. Burnhams often rush in where angels fear to tread. Many a true word is spoken in jest. And other wise saws to the same effect. At any rate a great shout of laughter arose from both sides. It was considered a huge joke. Even Burnham looked at it that way. If he was the god from the machine he wasn't aware of it at that moment. If he was giving the cue to the down-in-the-dumps Cabinet Ministers, he was blissfully ignorant of it. If he was to be the means of unravelling the plot he wasn't wise to it. But that's the art of your good play—the pivotal remark is carefully disguised and bolstered up with misleading circumstances lest you smell the end of the story.

At any rate the gloom of the Cabinet began to lift after Burnham had spoken. The long, long faces began to shorten. Particularly did light dawn on the countenance of the Hon. Bob Rogers. He saw a way out.

Take it for granted that much, very much, dialogue went on that the parliamentary actors came and fretted and fumed their brief ten or fifteen or twenty minutes on the stage, that there were words and noise and electric lights and everything that goes with a good play. The real action of the drama centred around Lancaster's desk. To Lancaster came Major Currie, Chief Whip Stanfield, Captain Tom Wallace, and laboured with him in agonized whispers. They were trying to pull him off. Lancaster shook his head; pounded his desk; turned his shoulder on them—a most expressive pantomime. It was plain that Lancaster felt his part. It was plain that he was saying: "I'm the hero of this play, and you can't sidetrack me."

Here Enters a Doubt

Is it possible that like Hamlet he was only feigning? Was he protesting too much? Was he overdoing it. Cynical persons have suggested that Lancaster's stand on Ne Temere was a frame-up from the beginning of the session. But this gives the Government credit for too diabolical a cleverness. There's no need to go behind the manoeuvres of Monday night to explain Lancaster's back down. Lancaster is a party man first and a patriot afterwards. Give him what he wants and tell him how to save his face, and what more can he ask?

From here on the play moves rapidly. Lancaster is persuaded to leave the green chamber. Presently the Hon. Bob Rogers disappears, likewise Premier Borden. Presently, say ten minutes, they come back, one by one, at discreet intervals. Meanwhile, the Hon. Tom White holds the boards.

The last scene of the last act is now at hand. E. Gus Porter rises. The story runs that Major Currie was suggested as the gallant rescuer, but Lancaster insisted on Gus Porter. At any rate Guss Porter rises in his seat. Never did he look more judicial. His speech is judicial, too. It is so balanced that if E. Guss Porter had hair on the top of his head he would need to part it in the middle to remain impartial. E. Guss Porter examines Lancaster's bill. He examines Premier Borden's statement. He examines them jointly and severally, apart and together. He examines both of them, always with growing interest. A look of pleased surprise spreads over the member for West Hastings' face. His pleasure and surprise take up two pages of Hansard, but we come to the point more quickly. We allow the actors to speak for themselves.

A Moving Dialogue

E. Guss (with startled delight): Do I dream? Can it be? Look brothers! There is no quarrel here. Say ye not so, Master Borden?

Premier Borden: With my hand on my heart, I say it. There is no difference between my liegemen and me. We go to the foot of the throne together.

Lancaster (in a rage): My bill! My bill! Nothing but my bill! My bill as I have drawn it! I want my bill!

E. Guss: Fear not for your bill! We will refer it.

Lancaster (still raging): My bill I say! I want my bill, my own bill! I want no referring! I want progress! My bill I say! But (breaking down) what can I do? I am in the hands of the House!

Oh, what a falling off was there! Raving magnificently like King Lear one minute, gibbering like old Gobbo the next! Oh, the hateful anti-climax! Oh slush! Oh fudge!

The Epilogue is Delivered

Mr. Michael Clark of Red Deer, delivered what was really the epilogue to the play, although other set speeches intervened between him and the division bell which cleared the stage. No better man could have been chosen. He has the mocking spirit—a spirit that has and is given more chance in Opposition. The Tories archangelic nickname, which hints at the rath, vigor and flashing wit of him. A Captain Brazenhead for courage and a sort of high handed, turbulent, good humour. But these are not the Middle Ages, so Red Michael must needs use his sword of free trade and the Liberal party. When the Liberals come to their own again Red Michael's place is the Cabinet, where it is well, though moderate protection be our yoke, to have at least one free trader to remind us of the trade policy of heaven. Red Michael does not sit down under defeat—which indeed he deems nothing more than the beginning of victory. In which matter of dauntlessness let us remark that one member differs from another as the stars in glory.

But what was the epilogue? somebody asks. What did Red Michael say? Forgotten it? No, but why spoil it here? Enough that up to that time lawyers had been chopping straws, and then Red Michael came along and set fire to it—a fire that warmed his friends and roasted his enemies. It brought a smile to Geo. Foster's wan face. He joyed in it, though it grilled him. Takes one master of satire to understand another. Red Michael is Foster with the bitterness left out.

The Servant In The House

Tyrone Power is Coming to the Grand Opera House on Feb. 14th

Harper's magazine said, during the first week that "The Servant in the House" was holding New York the spectators in its thrall: "Occasionally the accused and often culpable public has a chance to show that it rather enjoys looking into its own soul, and is still able to appreciate an idea. To be able to entertain the public with ideas is no slight accomplishment, but to cause it to entertain ideas is in the nature of a triumph. "The Servant in The House" a drama by Charles Rann Kennedy, has had its effect upon New York. Happening upon Broadway in a doubtful time, it took a first step upon the stage and was a play found foothold, took another step and was a book; and at the present moment, stands quietly on the pedestal of New York success, a living thing, elegant, sunny and mysterious having something to say to the man on the street. Of a sudden "The Servant in the House" has become the thing to see and to read". This "sunny mysterious" play of to-day, with its fascinating suggestions of Oriental occultism, will be seen here at the Grand on Thursday, Feb. 14, presented by Mr. Power and his capable company of players, under the direction of Jos. M. Gaites.

EAST ASKS FOR RELIEF

It Must Have Immigrants if Not Reciprocity.

DEBATED WHOLE EVENING

E. N. Rhodes Introduces a Resolution in the House of Commons Declaring That Something Must Be Done For Maritime Provinces—Hon. Rabt. Rogers Talks of a Plan of Co-operation With Provinces.

Ottawa, Jan. 30.—The east wants immigration about as badly as the west wants tariff concessions and larger markets. Members from Lake Superior to the Atlantic seaboard chanted their jeremiads to Parliament yesterday. They joined their western fellows in urgent insistence that "something" should be done to make good the loss experienced by the defeat of reciprocity. The debate started early in the afternoon, when Mr. Rhodes submitted a resolution calling upon the Government to institute a policy of publicity and immigration designed to promote the more rapid development of the Maritime Provinces. It dragged on through the whole night sitting, while Ontario and Quebec raised their voices in unison with the sister provinces down by the sea.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when the orders of the day were called, asked whether the writ for the South Renfrew election had been issued, to which the Premier replied in the negative. There was some difficulty in regard to the lists.

This did not satisfy Sir Wilfrid, who pointed out that the vacancy occurred on Dec. 7, and the Ontario general elections took place on Dec. 11. The lists that were good enough for the Ontario election should be good enough now.

David Henderson (Halton) told the leader of the Opposition that there had been no contest in South Renfrew in the provincial elections.

In answer to a question by H. B. Ames (Montreal-St. Antoine), Hon. J. D. Hazen and the Premier both stated emphatically that the Government had no intention at present of making any change in the membership of the harbor commission of the port of Montreal.

To R. B. Devlin (Wright) the Premier stated that the order-in-council of Aug. 1, 1910, approving of the instructions for recruiting for the Canadian navy was still in force. He objected to a further question as to whether any representations had been made to the Government "by any member thereof" against this system of recruiting, as irregular.

E. N. Rhodes (Cumberland) declared that the Maritime Provinces had in the past received a "raw deal" at the hands of the Immigration Department, and he crystallized his indignation in the following resolution declaring: "That, inasmuch as the immigration policy of the Government and several railway companies has for many years past been almost entirely confined to the development of western Canada, and largely in consequence of this policy the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have not grown in equal degree with the rest of the Dominion, in the opinion of this House in order to promote uniform progress and prosperity throughout Canada, the Government should speedily inaugurate and carry out a policy of publicity and immigration designed to promote the rapid development of the said provinces."

Robert Richardike (Montreal-St. Lawrence) thought something was wrong with the immigration rule which kept out a good man because he had only $10 in his pocket and let in a bad man who might have $5,000. There should be some way of correcting this.

W. T. Carrill (Cape Breton, N.S.,) speaking to Mr. Rhodes' resolution, asked what good there was in bringing population to the northwest or the Maritime Provinces, if the grain were to be allowed to rot on the plains and the fish on the coast for lack of wider markets?

Hon. Robert Rogers declared that he would see that men acquainted with the needs of every province of the Dominion were placed in the Canadian offices in London. As Minister of the Interior he intended to invite immigration to the Maritime Provinces in the same manner and with the same hope, of results as he would to other parts of the country.

He had inaugurated a policy of co-operation with the provinces. He had invited every province to join with the Dominion in inaugurating this policy, which would deal equally with east and west. Conferences had been held with the Premiers of British Columbia and New Brunswick and with Hon. J. S. Duff of the Ontario Government. The work would not be duplicated, but they would work in harmony.

Hon. Frank Oliver said that the Laurier Government had tried to do its best for immigration to Ontario, but the provincial administration would not co-operate.

Mr. Rhodes' resolution was adopted and the House adjourned at midnight.

DARROW IS INDICTED

McNamaras' Lawyer Charged With Attempted Corruption.

TO BE TRIED ON THURSDAY

Celebrated Socialist Attorney Says He Is Glad the Suspense Is Over and Will Face His Accusers With Knowledge of Innocence — Two Indictments Returned Alleging Bribery of Two Jurymen.

Los Angeles, Jan. 30.—Two indictments, each containing counts of bribery and attempted corruption, were returned yesterday by the county grand jury, against Clarence S. Darrow of Chicago, formerly chief counsel for the McNamara brothers. The bills allege that he furnished the money out of the McNamara defence fund and bribed Robert Bain, a juror sworn to try James B. McNamara, the confessed dynamiter and murderer, and George N. Lockwood, a venireman.

Bert Franklin, a detective, who is alleged actually to have passed the bribe money to Bain and Lockwood, is accused of the same offences in informations filed some time ago in the Superior Court. Franklin's trial has been set for Feb. 27.

The maximum penalty that could be imposed on Darrow for conviction on all counts is thirty years' imprisonment and fines aggregating $10,000. He is under $20,000 bail, but last night the former chief defender of the McNamaras, said he was glad the suspense was over and that he would face his arraignment on Thursday in the Superior Court with an equanimity born of his innocence.

Darrow had several days' notice of the impending accusations, and on Saturday he retained Earl Rogers, an attorney, who directed the first work of unearthing evidence against The Times building dynamiters and who later, as a special prosecutor, had charge of the grand jury investigation which resulted in the filing of the first dynamite indictment against Bryce (James B. McNamara), Schmidt and Caplan, early last year.

Judge C. F. McNutt, formerly of the Indiana Superior Bench, and associate counsel in the McNamara defence, also was retained by Darrow. Yesterday an intimation of the district attorney's office reached Mr. Darrow that the charges against him would be reported, and he at once set about arranging bail. Mrs. Le Compte Davis, wife of one of Darrow's associates in the McNamara case, and Col. Charles S. Young, a friend of the accused lawyer, supplied the bail fixed by Judge N. P. Conrey, who sat for presiding Judge George H. Hutton.

When Darrow arrived in court, the formalities were brief.

Judge Conrey received the indictments and ordered bench warrants issued. The warrants were served on Darrow in the court room and the judge asked Deputy District Attorney W. J. Ford what he thought would be a proper amount of bail.

"This is a very serious charge," said Ford, "and I would suggest the highest amount compatible with its degree of gravity."

"Ten thousand on each indictment," said Judge Conrey.

Mrs. Davis and Col. Young qualified at once, and Darrow, apparently greatly relieved, left court with his attorneys.

"This is something I never had to do before," said Darrow as he shook hands with several friends, "but I think I can beat it."

Says Wilson Lied.

Washington, Jan. 30.—Col. Henry Watterson in a statement issued last night and intended to bring the "distasteful episode" to an end, so far as he was concerned, declared that the issue between him and Gov. Woodrow Wilson was solely as to which one had "lied." Col. Watterson said he "had engaged conclusively to show" that Gov. Wilson had lied and charged that the New Jersey executive "dared not face the facts."

Col. Watterson declined to make public any proofs in his possession. He denied that Thomas F. Ryan had ever been approached for campaign contributions for Gov. Wilson, but stated that the matter had been talked over with Gov. Wilson and the latter had "expressed the fear" that if the knowledge of a contribution from Mr. Ryan got abroad it might do more harm than good.

SCHOOLBOY FIREBUGS.

Eleven-Year-Old Lad Set Fire to R.C. Seminary.

Sweetsburg, Que., Jan. 30.—High Constable Boisvert yesterday afternoon held an investigation into the incendiary fire which destroyed the Holy Cross College at Farnham, Que., causing a loss of $90,000, and for which five of the students were arrested at noon yesterday. The high constable cross-questioned the boys and found three of them connected with the fire, of whom one set the building afire while the others acted as accomplices. The other two boys arrested were released, as there was no proof against them. The actual culprit and the two accomplices confessed.

The lad who set the fire is an 11-year-old lad of Montreal. His accomplices were aged 14 and 15. They come from the U. S.

The boys were remanded by R. J. Ladd, J.P., until Feb. 5, when they will appear before Judge Mulvena.

The fire was discovered about 6.30 a.m. and was beyond control when the firemen arrived on the scene. About one hundred and fifty boarders were in the building at the time, and all safely escaped. The loss will be about $90,000, only partly covered by insurance.

It seems that there had been plans to burn the college among the boys for some time. The investigation yesterday afternoon showed two former attempts and it was also learned that one of the boys had written a letter on Jan. 20 to a friend saying that the college would burn down on Jan. 25. One of the brothers opened the letter and learned of the plan. He informed the lad's parents, and the youngster was removed from the school. The brother, however, failed to notify the police of the matter, but a strict watch was instituted.

On Dec. 4 and again on Jan. 10 attempts were made to burn the buildings, each attempt being followed by the running away of a pupil.

High Constable Boisvert has the names of the boys who ran away on these occasions, and will have them arrested and questioned.

Can Kill 5,000 Seals Yearly.

Washington, Jan. 30.—The law to make effective the pelagic sealing treaties between the United States, England, Russia and Japan probably will not absolutely forbid the killing of seals for the next fifteen years on the Pribiloff Islands, as was first proposed.

The foreign affairs committee of the House will report favorably an amendment to limit the killing to 5,000 seals each year for the first five years, 7,500 for the next five years, and 10,000 for the concluding five years. The committee holds that the killing of American seals is not a subject of international agreement.

Jack Sheedy, Near Croesus.

Kingston, Jan. 30.—Ten years ago, Jack Sheedy, formerly of Cobden, Ont., well known here, left for the northwest with his two hands and a few shillings. Yesterday he returned from the Alaskan gold fields with $60,000 and deposited it in the local banks. He struck it rich, and intends to go back again.

Graduates of the School of Mining have raised $18,500 of the $20,000 necessary for the equipment of the Nicholl building and the rest of the money is now in sight.

Trenton Opera House Burned.

Trenton, Jan. 30.—About 3.20 yesterday afternoon fire broke out in the Grand Opera House. The high wind soon had the building in a mass of flames. The fire brigade quickly responded, but could do nothing towards saving it. The building is a total loss. The building and contents were valued at $15,000, partially covered by insurance. The cause of the fire is said to be the crossing of two live wires in the balcony ceiling.

Taft to Welcome B.-P.

New York, Jan. 30.—Lieut.-Gen. Sir Robert Baden-Powell, the "hero of Mafeking," and recognized as the leader of the Boy Scouts' movement throughout the world, will be given a hearty welcome by the Boy Scouts of America when he arrives here from Kingston, Jamaica, next Wednesday.

His first greeting will be from President Taft, who is honorary president of the Boy Scouts of America.

Frozen While Going to Sick Neighbor.

Guelph, Jan. 30.—The frozen body of Mrs. Jerry O'Brien was found in a field near her home at Aberfoyle. She had left the home of her brother on Tuesday last to visit a sick neighbor. When returning home across the fields she fell from exhaustion. A searching party found the body in the snow.

THE DUKE OF FIFE IS DEAD

Nobleman Never Recovered From Delhi Disaster.

BROTHER-IN-LAW OF KING

Husband of the Princess Royal Passes Away at Assuan in Egypt After an Attack of Pleurisy Lasting a Week —Was Born in 1849 and Had a Brilliant Career in South Africa—Associated With Rhodes.

Assuan, Upper Egypt, Jan. 30.—The Duke of Fife died here at six o'clock last evening.

He was taken ill about a week ago with pleurisy and congestion of the lungs and since Saturday has been very low.

It is thought that he never completely recovered from a cold caught when he and the duchess, with their daughters, were wrecked with the Delhi off Cape Spartel in December.

The Duke of Fife, brother-in-law of His Majesty King George, was born on Nov. 10, 1849, and was the oldest son of the fifth earl.

The Duke of Fife married Her Royal Highness the Princess Royal, eldest daughter of King Edward VII. in 1889. He was educated at Eton, and represented Moray and Nairn as liberal member from 1874 to 1879. In 1889 he went on a special mission to the King of Saxony. For nine years he was vice-president of the Chartered Company of South Africa, resigning after the Jamieson raid. He owns about 250,000 acres.

The tragic end of the Duke of Fife's ill-starred voyage to attend the consecration of the cathedral at Khartoum, erected as a memorial to Gen. Gordon, has given a great shock to the British public. Although he showed no effects of his experience in the wreck of the steamship Delhi on the arrival in Egypt, the duke's death is universally attributed to the exposure and shock resulting from that event. He contracted a chill at Wadi-Halfa, in the Egyptian Soudan a week ago and was unable to proceed. But not until a physician was summoned from London on Friday, was any alarm felt. Only yesterday, when it was learned that the duke had been removed to Assuan on Sunday, was a fatal issue feared.

The deepest sympathy is everywhere expressed for the Princess Royal, who accompanied her husband to Egypt. The duke's death will cause the curtailment or modification of all projected arrangements at Portsmouth and London for the reception of King George and Queen Mary on their return from India. It is probable that all the festivities will be shorn of military display and state ceremonial. The court functions in the early spring also will be modified.

The Duke of Fife was one of the pioneers with Cecil Rhodes in the early history of South Africa. He was greatly liked for his public spirit and his philanthropic and other useful work for the country.

Received News at Ottawa.

Ottawa, Jan. 30.—News of the death of the Duke of Fife was received at Government House last night. There was a large dinner party of over 100, and owing to the lateness in the receipt of the sad news, the dinner could not be postponed and Their Royal Highnesses received their guests in the usual manner.

It was stated by Col. Lowther, military secretary to the Governor-General, when asked if the household here would go into mourning, that a cable would be received from King George in connection with the length of mourning, if it were to be ordered. The Duke of Fife, however, was not of the royal family.

Woman Killed In Riot.

Lawrence, Mass., Jan. 30.—One woman was killed and a police officer was stabbed in the back by rioting strikers or their sympathizers, who gathered to the number of nearly 1,000 about the Everett mills, on Garden and Union streets last night. Police and militia were rushed to the scene and a free use of clubs and rifle butts resulted in the breaking up of the mob and the dispersing of the strikers.

The victim of the riot was an Italian woman. A man nearby was firing a revolver into the ground when the woman dropped. It is believed she was struck by a glancing bullet. An ambulance was summoned and the woman hurried to the Lawrence Hospital, but she died before reaching the institution.

Lake Superior Freezing.

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 30.—Lake Superior is believed to be freezing over its entire area. If so, it will be the first time in the memory of the white man.

The ice field is now so great that open water can be seen from only a few points on either shore. With February at hand, and its fame as an ice-making month, there is great reason for believing the entire surface will become solid.

Grain Growers for Ottawa.

Winnipeg, Jan. 30.—R. C. Henders, president, and R. McKenzie, secretary, of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association, left for Ottawa yesterday, to meet the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the grain bill now before the House. They were instructed by the recent convention to press for the requirement by the Government of all terminal elevators at Fort William and Montreal.

Low Supports Graham.

Eganville, Jan. 30.—Hon. George P. Graham, formerly Minister of Railways and Canals, and now candidate for election to the House from South Renfrew, opened his campaign here last night with a large meeting in the Town Hall. Eganville is the birthplace of Mr. Graham.

A feature of the meeting was an explanation by Thomas Low of the steps leading up to his resignation in favor of Mr. Graham and the alleged agreement of the Renfrew Conservative candidate, with having endorsed the agreement in the Conservative convention and then having broken it by announcing his own candidature.

P. McHugh of Eganville was chairman and other speakers included Dr. Connolly of Renfrew, Hon. Rudolph Lemieux and Hon. Mr. Graham.

OPERATION HER ONLY CHANCE

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindsay, Ont.—"I think it is no more than right for me to thank Mrs. Pinkham for what her kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. When I wrote to her some time ago I was a very sick woman, suffering from female troubles. I had inflammation of the female organs, and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend this medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and think they are fine."—Mrs. FRANK EMSLEY, Lindsay, Ontario.

We cannot understand why women will take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, without first trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"THE SECRET OF PAUL FARLEY"

By JOHN MARCH

"Not a farthing, sir!" he returned, resistingly. "I couldn't bear to take money for a thing I'd do for love, if you'll excuse my putting it so!"

"Bore a hole through it and hang it on your watch chain, James, as a little memento of me," he said, lightheartedly; "you see, when I am gone you will need a reminder."

"I don't mind doing that," he said, thoughtfully. "I'll keep it; perhaps, coming from you, sir, it will bring me luck."

"While you have it you won't want for gold, and there's some luck in that," he said, watching the man's serious face with amusement, and as James's ruminations were slow and profound the rest of the journey was completed in comparative silence.

On his return Paul went straight to the library to discover what business letters the post had brought in, and on the centre of the writing-table lay a telegram addressed to himself. He turned up the reading lamp, tore open the envelope, and read: "Come; bring handbag with change in case you need it.—Felix."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Austine Hare

It was a little after ten and the second train from East Weyberne was due at King's Cross in another five minutes. Felix Fleming and Hubert Graham were pacing the platform together. The barrister was speaking rapidly and impressively, while the squire smoked a cigar and listened with a smile on his handsome face.

"You see it came about in this way," he was saying, with his eyes on the clock, "young Hare was my office boy, did all my shorthand and type writing, and a sharp spruce lad he was, too. After a year or two, to my infinite disgust, he developed a mania for the stage—no use trying to suppress that sort of crank once it's got a firm hold, as I very well know to my cost; it's always better to give everyone a chance of finding out for themselves whether or no they've mistaken their vocation. Hare surprised me, he stuck to the footlights like a limpet, and one fine night he sent me a pass, with a polite note asking me to drop into the Savoy between the second and third act in time to witness his efforts as Lieutenant Jeffrey Stillchurch, an obstreperous ward in Chancery. I was rather taken aback at the fellow's clever conception of his part, and took him back with me to supper at my chambers. I was running on a bit prognosticating great things for him in the future, when he quietly told me in phraseology he sometimes affected, it was not exciting enough, and his present engagement completed he would just chuck the stage. I felt quite put out, on my word I did, but as soon as I could bring myself to listen to his reasons and his arguments, I thought Hare was a long way of being a fool. It appears somehow by accident, I think, he discovered he possessed a certain dormant power, a partial gift of ventriloquism which he was determined to cultivate, and so with his dramatic talent, his throat business, and art of making-up, he went and offered his services to Scotland Yard, and they, my dear Fleming, they literally jumped at him. He has done well, splendidly! He is quite young—but then these are the days of very young men, you know—slim, dark, clean-shaven, and rather aristocratic-looking."

"You think he's the man for the part?" Felix asked.

"I do. I am certain if we can get him, he'll act Farley to the life, for all he's worth—quiet, dignified, and reserved! At any rate as soon as the train is in we will drive around to his lodgings and ascertain. Hare has not entirely severed his connection with the Scotland Yard authorities, but he takes private cases and if he is specially wanted there—ah, here she comes!"

The train glided alongside the platform and Paul leaned from the window of his compartment, opened the door, and sprang out where the two men stood, a small light leather bag in his hand. A gleam of satisfaction came into the squire's eyes as he grasped his arm and marched him off to the cab standing outside the station.

"I'm content now, Farley," he said, looking at him with a brilliant smile, "and the rest may go hang. I had an attack of nerves last night for the first time in my life. I couldn't sleep for thinking you might be spirited away before I could get you safe here. By the way, I thought if I said bring your bag you would conclude you might have to stay the night, and I expect you will, because if we get this chap Graham wants he will go back with me this evening and I shall take him to Sir Thomas and explain matters. Did you arrange things before you left? I mean, did you lock up letters, money, jewelry, anything you don't desire looked over and meddled with by the man who will occupy your room? Of course, this Hare will be all right; still it's expedient and business like and ought to be done under any circumstances."

"Yes, thank you, I did," he answered; "everything I consider of any value or interest to me is under lock and key."

"That's all right, then, jump in!"

They drove three in a hansom to a street leading out of Russell Square, and drew up before a quiet, unpretentious-looking house. Graham then alighted, rang the bell, inquired for Mr. Hare, and beckoned to the others upon hearing that the gentleman in question was in and breakfasting in his room.

Austin Hare had finished his repast, and sat reading the paper in an easy chair by the fire, his slippered feet in close proximity to the ornaments on the chimney piece. He looked up in undisguised surprise at the little party invading his sanctum with an absence of ceremony quite appalling, and then catching sight of Graham ,he started up with a glad, impulsive, boyish welcome, that was reassuring and refreshing.

Hubert Graham introduced his friends and ascertained whether his time for the next few days or perhaps a week, could be placed at their disposal. Receiving a ready affirmative, he proceeded as best he could to disclose the why and wherefore of their visitation, and finally handed the narrative over to the others, who were better acquainted with the facts, and better able to piece together and make the story somewhat comprehensible.

"You want me," he said, looking up from his note book, where he had their explanation verbatim, "to personate that gentleman," bowing to Paul, "to play the part of secretary to Sir Thomas Hargrave, to court this Mrs. Wycherly without apparently much heart in it, keep Miss Hargrave at arm's length, and suffer myself to be kidnapped, married or murdered, just as the fates may decree; and moreover, you want me to-night? Very well, gentlemen, you need go no further; I shall be pleased to accommodate you. There is just sufficient mystery and danger about it to make the adventure attractive, but one question, an important one—is this Mrs. Wycherly, mad?"

Paul looked at Felix, and for the first time it crossed his mind as to whether that might not be the solution of the whole gamut of Rowena Wycherly's behaviour.

"I think she is perfectly sane," Felix said in a tone that admitted of no contradiction, "but self is paramount; self is carried to such an extraordinary excess that it positively amounts to a mania. No object is allowed to prevent her procuring and satisfying a desire, however illegitimate its object may be, provided her mind is seriously set upon its attainment. There is an unscrupulousness and a daring about her that is, to my mind, brigandish in the extreme. It would not astonish me to find the strain date back to an ancestry of outlaws and freebooters."

Austin Hare laughed, and his dark, violet eyes, black in certain lights, went back to Paul. They seldom left him ,except to glance at Felix when he spoke, in courteous assurance of his attention. He was unobtrusively watching Paul, studying every attitude and gesture, every trick of manner, speech and expression with the diligence and verve of the true artist.

"Superficially, the thing strikes me as being the most tempting piece of work ever offered me," he said, in answer to the Squire's sentiments respecting Mrs. Wycherly. "There is a pleasing dread in the unknown, Mr. Fleming, which has a real charm for me, and hence my profession. Figuratively speaking, a sail in a chartless sea, to wander in a maze without a clue, to walk blindfolded near a precipice, gives a sort of honey-gall zest to existence. Shorn of its mystery life would be a very disappointing theme to me. Do you smoke?" he asked addressing Paul "Are you musical? Do you sing, recite, conjure? Do you go in for any parlour tricks?"

"I can play the violin a little," he said, modestly, accepting a cigarette from Hare; "but as I don't possess an instrument, the Weybernites have never heard me."

"Will you stand up, and perhaps Mr. Fleming will give me the difference in our height, and will you also let me see you smoke that cigarette?"

They stood back to back, and the Squire acted as umpire.

"There is not much in it, Hare," he said, after some consideration; "if there is, Farley has the advantage. By Jove! your hair is several shades lighter, and so is your skin!"

"That's immaterial, they can easily be remedied ;it's the eyes that trouble me, Mr. Fleming," he said anxiously. "No one, let alone a man, ought to have eyes like Mr. Farley's. In addition to the size, the beauty, the wonderful gold glint in them, there's that haunting, spiritual expression which goes to give the uncanny impression that the soul's awakening is in perpetual progress. I hope you will excuse me," he said, smiling, when he became aware of the flush on Paul's face. "I'll try a pair of faintly smoke-tinted eyeglasses," he resumed, "and also a pair of magnifying ones, and let you judge of the effect. If Mr. Farley will step across to an old haunt of mine I will get my hair and skin touched up to the exact shade of his, and then I shall not need to trouble you gentlemen further."

The young men donned their hats and Hare let himself out, leaving Graham and Felix to a desultory conversation in the sitting-room.

"I say, Graham," the latter said, when the landlady had knocked for permission to remove the breakfast things and retired. "Farley must be put up somewhere for a night or two. I should like to leave him in your care; have you the accommodation in your chambers?"

"Not to-night, I haven't," he said, wheeling around and confronting him, "but to-morrow, if he likes, he can have my room. I shall be away I had thought of locking the place up, but if you have a fancy for him to stop there I can hand the key over to him. He would be more comfortable at an hotel, though, wouldn't he?"

"Very likely; I was thinking he would be under your practical and experienced eye." Felix returned, laughing, "but of course in your absence he might just as well be at an hotel. Are you off on business?"

"Pleasurable business, I imagine," he said, a trifle sheepishly.

He looked out of the window and watched an altercation between a hansom cabman and his fare, and after they had settled the dispute amicably, he twisted around with a heightened colour ,and took hold of the Squire by the lapel of his coat.

"I never intended to let the cat out of the bag until the performance was over," he remarked, smiling; "but here's an open confession. Fleming, my boy, I'm going to be married early in the morning, and by to-morrow night my wife and I shall be in Edinburgh."

"By Jove," Felix exclaimed, admiringly. "You are making up for the time, Graham, you wasted in courting!"

"That is how I put it to Patricia. I told her we ought to have been married twenty years ago, and, as neither of us was girl or boy, we did not want the regulation ceremony, the usual finery, tomfoolery, and paraphernalia . A quiet, solemn service in a city church without a gaping crowd of disparaging friends, is more in keeping with my feelings on such a sacred occasion, and I am glad to say Patricia feels the same. We shall amuse ourselves to-morrow evening sending cards and cake, and if anyone feels inclined to send a wedding present they're welcome, if not, we shall be none the worse. With the wedding ring on Patricia's finger I don't mind inviting spiteful animosity; a few snubs or adverse opinions will fall very flat and wide of the mark, once we are honeymooning."

"I wish you joy, Graham," Felix said, "and I won't anticipate the papers, they shall tell their own tale."

"I should like to return the wish," he said, beaming. "Don't put it off too long, Fleming," he added, growing suddenly sad; "the years pass so quickly, and presently we become aware there's nothing but grey hairs and furrows ,a dim veil of decay and loneliness betwixt us and the next world. Mankind instinctively pines after a home, and it's a delusion, a waste of substance and warmth to spend one's days alone. I've lived a quarter of a century alone in chambers, so I ought to know something of its proud pathos. I feel, Felix," he said, smiling again, "like a long silent harp that the magic of the musician's fingers has brought into the full sound of harmonious life!"

The Squire knocked the ashes from his cigar with his little finger.

"I've had a decade of loneliness," Graham, and it seems, thanks to Jack Hunter, I am in for another spell. Still, it doesn't do to croak because by nature my habits are not gregarious, and when once that sound gets into a man's throat, it is as ineradicable as sin. Shall I ever meet my affinity, my kindred spirit, my wife that is to be, or not, until I discard my fleshy tabernacle? I often wonder where she is. She must be somewhere, Graham. If I am going to have a wife at all while I am still youthful, she must now be living somewhere on the earth. I often think of her when I'm alone, and I—" he dropped his voice, and a light gleamed over his face—"I pray for her night and morning, though I have never seen her! It can't do her any harm, maybe it's a sympathetic link, a spirit clasp; it may, for all we know, act as an antidote to some of the evils, dangers and temptations of life, it—"

The door opened and two young men of the same height and build entered ,as like as two peas. Hubert Graham clapped Hare on the back, walked around, looked closely at his dark, glossy hair and clear olive skin, with its faint blue tracery about the temples, its shadows under the eyes, and deeper tinge upon the upper lip and jaw, and ejaculated, "Confucious!"

"A suit like Mr. Farley's, an Inverness, a low-crowned hat, and a pince-nez, sufficiently magnifying to give the correct size to the eyes will complete the likeness, eh?" he asked, smiling.

"You are progressing, Hare," Felix remarked cautiously, "but I'll tell you what I think of your artistic artifice when we meet to-night."

"Which train, Mr. Fleming?" he asked. "The five-fifteen, I think. That will land us there in time for the Hall dinner, and allow a good margin for your toilet, Hare."

"Right, you are, sir," he exclaimed, gaily, "I'll be there for a good quarter of an hour before time so you can haul me over and point out my defects that may strike you. What about the ring? Shall I, or will you, purchase it?"

"I will," Felix said, laughing, "I'll buy the ring!"

The quartette filed out to the pavement and there separated to go their different ways. Austin Hare started to walk to the West End, Graham hailed a cab and was driven to his chambers, while Paul and Felix sauntered in the direction of Southampton Row to secure a bedroom at the little private hotel, and afterwards, as the squire expressed it, to poke about. They brought a pretty little pearl and coral ring at the jeweller's in Piccadilly, and lunched at a restaurant close by. In the afternoon they strolled into St. James's Hall and listened to a ballad concert, though they were obliged to leave before the completion of the programme in order to reach King's Cross at Hare's appointed time. They came from a warm dazzle of light outside into a misty duskiness. The street lamps were lit, the shops a blaze of brilliance and beauty; and stepping from the curb into a disengaged crawling hansom, they were driven in a low-spirited way to the station to find Austin Hare already there reading a newspaper at the bookstall.

"Well," he asked, looking at the squire and throwing back his head with a little imperious gesture common to Paul, "how now?"

Felix looked slowly from one to the other of the two Paul Farleys, and remained silent.

"You are disappointed, Mr. Fleming?" Hair said equably, "what is wrong?"

"No, I'm not," he said, "at least, it is—well, it is so confoundedly good that I—I don't half like it, Hare."

"You could not have paid me a greater compliment, sir," he said, folding the paper; "but you noticed, Mr. Fleming, that however I pitch my voice, it still remains a semi-tone lower than Mr. Farley's? Would a slight cold in the throat be sufficient plea? A hoarseness engendered by travelling in the early morning fog and a chilly night mist?"

"I should think so. My ear is not so true as yours, Hare. Have you any idea, Farley, whether Mrs. Wycherly is musical?"

"Not any," Paul said smiling, "but I should imagine she is not. Mrs. Wycherly's suspicions are not aroused, Mr. Hare, therefore she won't be listening to every little inflection in your voice; she will take you as a whole and be thankful to have Paul Farley back again safe."

"I don't agree with Mr. Farley," Hare said, politely; "a woman in love is like a sensitive plant, all feelers. Every tone ,every breath, will find an echo in her heart, she—"

"Excuse me," Felix said laughing, "but it's blasphemy to call that woman's demoniacal infatuation 'love.' Love," he went on, growing grave, "is a spiritual force breathed by the angels into us poor mortals; it's selfless—it longs for another's happiness; it is chaste and pure; it is quiet, deep-flowing, lasting, unchangeable; it is the king of words, and carved on Christ's heart."

There was a slight pause, and then Paul turned to his double.

"I don't know whether you are fond of children, Mr. Hare, but if you come across the boy you will be gentle with him?"

"Is there a boy?" he asked; taking out his note book.

"Yes, Guy, a dear, crazed little chap; we made friends, he and I, and when he sees you he will expect a kindly greeting. A kiss, a little fussy attention—you won't disappoint him?"

"No, poor little man," he said kindly. "If I see him he shall not detect any change in his friend. Give me an account as near as you can of the conversation between you and the lady last evening; it may prove a material guide in conducting negotiations later."

Paul ran over the various and, which he considered, the most important points and items touched upon during the interview, and Hare wrote swiftly until an official order came for passengers to take their seats. The squire slipped into the compartment followed by Hare, and the door was banged after them. Felix let down the window and leaned out, his arms folded on the frames.

"Take care of yourself, Farley," he whispered; "keep good hours; keep good company, keep straight, and your friends will love you. If I don't find time to write to-morrow, I will send a wire. Good-bye; don't stint yourself; treat yourself well, and I'll pay the piper.

Paul laid a large white hand on his arm and fixed his great melancholy eyes on the kind handsome face.

"Promise to be careful, Felix," he said, earnestly, his voice shaking in unison with his hand. "If Hare fails and the truth leaks out she may revenge herself on you, and I should—I should not forgive myself if harm came to you through me."

"Bah!" he said, smiling into the dark, agitated face, "don't you let that idea worry you, Paul, my boy. I make no doubt the little cat will keep her paws off me."

"Promise, Felix," he reiterated, his mouth quivering, "promise to be cautious, promise—" he drew nearer and clasped the squire's brown hand, "promise me you won't drive alone at night, not for a time?"

"I'll promise it if it will be any comfort to you," the Squire said, pressing the trembling fingers. "What a fellow you are for your moods? Farley, you're nervous, in a regular sweat about me, and sometimes you're that cursedly cool—"

Many Years an Invalid—Untold Agony From Headaches

Dizziness, Sinking Spells and Excessive Weakness Disappear With Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Nearly every woman will read with interest the letter of Mrs. Geo. Bradshaw, quoted below. It tells of years of great suffering from nervous Headache and other symptoms arising from weak, watery blood and a starved and exhausted condition of the nervous system.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Cosy Nook, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I am glad to state that I received benefits from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food which I failed to get any place else. I was troubled for many years, in fact from my early womanhood, with weak, watery blood, and given to dropsy. I suffered untold agonies from nervous sick headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, in fact was a semi-invalid for many years. I tried many kinds of patent medicines and got no help, and tried every new doctor that came along ,but all failed to help me. Doctors told me I had no blood, and that my heart and kidneys were diseased, and that I had so many complaints there was not much use in doctoring up one or two. Four years ago I took six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and was glad to see I felt better, and then got six more, and they have cured me of many of my complaints. When I began taking Nerve Food I weighed 110 pounds and to-day I weigh 139, and am 45 years old.

THE RECALL

(Short Story.)

There was a rain-washed sky above, and the air was vital and heady, tasting like wine to the palate. Everything on the burgeoning earth seemed to leap and stir, and a mysterious haze hid the black holes of the brigalows at the edge of the swelling plain. Two turkeys rose in front of the mares as he rode, and battered over his head into the vault above him, but unheeding he galloped along with Boss rein, exulting in the sense of freedom in his soul that seemed to coincide with the day and the wide spaces of the cattle country he was going to leave.

"He who loves and rides away . . ." he thought.

But there was no room in his mind now for any shame or self-reproach. He would break it to her gently, perhaps lie a little to soften the edge of things, for he was one of those who have made love lightly from their youth. Round a curve came two teamsters with heavy loads of wool from further down the river, big men with sunburnt faces and the brand of the bush in their eyes. The first one reined up his sweating team and gave Lamont greeting.

"Selling out, Rod? They've got it along the road that you've closed with Grant's offer."

"Who said that?" said Lamont, quickly.

"Everyone. Mike Williams told me at the shanty. These things travel faster than a man rides."

A shadow flickered across Lamont's face.

"Well, it's true enough," he said curtly. "I'm cutting clear."

He jabbed the spurs into his horse and cantered off again. She would know, then, before he could tell her; she would draw her own conclusions. He ought not to have allowed it to happen like that, for it was due to her to be given the news first. His conscience convicted him of a course of action that was graceless, and cut across his ideas of honour. But that cloud did not remain long. His brain was inflamed just now with thoughts of a world of dress suits and the chatter of his equals in clubs and country houses—all the old, familiar life that was now his inheritance. Back along the road the teamster paused to straighten a loafing horse in the shafts.

"He's going to leave that little girl," he muttered, reflectively; "Well, there are better men . . ."

But Lamont, feeling the joy of life in every fibre, had no time to philosophise. He had liked this life passing well, but it was not part of him as was Boxley Hall and the intimate things of his boyhood. It had not the first call on his affections now. In time to come he would remember the long morning rides through grass that reached to his horse's withers; the noons of hot racing on the cattle camps along the creek, the camp fires and the starry nights, and the men, who had been his mates. Especially he would remember the white pisa homestead he was going to now, and the girl whose eyes had looked into his among the oleanders in the garden; but all this was already remote from the world that had given him his earliest memories and sunk its roots deep down in his soul.

"She belongs to these plains," he thought. "She could not be transplanted, even if she wished. It is Fate, and not I, who has made the decision."

His imagination could not connect her with Boxley Hall or in any of the ways in which he would walk familiarly, which called him back now. He let his horse fall into a rolling canter, and began flicking idly with his whip at the young mulga shrubs that grew beside the track. So preoccupied was he that he did not notice that the girl was riding across the plains to the right of him. They were within speaking distance before he heard the click of her horse's hoofs.

"Rod!" she said, as she joined him.

He started a little, and his mount shied away from her.

"I was just coming over to see you," he began.

His eyes took in her lithe beauty, her brown face, and the soft grace that enfolded her. There was just that poise in her every word and movement that came from her being one with the things about her, with the rough cattlemen as well as with the shimmering magic of the plains. It was that which had appealed to him a year ago; it was that which showed him plainly that she would not fit in with his visualised future now.

"You're selling out," she said. "The boys told me."

"Yes," he said. "I meant to have told you before, but things were mixed."

They rode for a while in silence.

"I'm glad it is Grant who is taking the place over," she said.

"He was there when the letter came," Lamont went on jerkily. "You know I've come in for property in England. Grant made me a good offer, and I closed."

He looked at her stealthily, but her face was as it had always been. How queerly he had misjudged her in thinking there might be a scene!

"I wonder if he'll put the bore down at the back of the run," she said slowly. "The place would easily carry another thousand head if there was anything like a decent flow."

"I was calculating on fifteen hundred," he said.

It was they together who had decided on the spot where the drilling was to be begun. He remembered that ride home in the twilight, their horses walking neck to neck, and the way his future seemed to lie in those brown plains and swelling foothills, aglow somehow with the dusky gentleness of her presence. Queer, the change of perspective a few months could bring!

"Grant's not very venturesome," she said. "He may not like to take the risk of putting it down at first."

He had a queer feeling that they were trying with difficulty to talk in a foreign tongue. There was an odd unreality about his own voice and the things that he said.

"She takes it well enough . . ." he thought.

And with this came a desire to endow the parting with still more grace and amenity. They rode on and on. The glamour of the coming dusk softened the outlines of the hills, and everything was zealously quiet under the blue sky; but their own silence had lasted so long that it seemed like a cord drawn taut. He said at last, with a jerky laugh:

"I suppose I'll be back in a year."

At once the impersonal look passed from her face. Her eyes flashed and her hands clenched a little more tensely at the reins.

"Why do you say that?" she said. "It isn't true. You know it isn't true."

"I'll be wanting to get back," he stammered. "It isn't easy to leave here, only——"

"Duty, of course," she said, with a twisted smile. "One must follow that path at any cost.

Her eyes had an ironic look now she could not bear the throbbing of her heart. Somehow the old charm had its fingers upon him; he sat still in the saddle, watching the blood come and go beneath the brown of her face, and of such metal was he made that she appealed to him more than if she had been crushed and utterly broken. A wave of emotion swept over him, and he said, thickly:

"Lexie! I was going, but—you have only to ask me, and I'll give it all up."

He leant towards her, filled with the glow of renunciation, and he saw something leap into her eyes. But it was only pride. The delicate fibres of her soul had been bruised so completely before that they were proof now against his weakness or his unstable strength.

"I?" she said, with a laugh. "Oh, no; it isn't for me to ask you. Besides—I should have told you before—I am going to marry Grant. Goodbye, and good luck."

She flicked the horse with her whip and cantered off, never once stopping to look back. Only when a grove of brigalows shut her off from his sight did she dismount and fling herself down to bury her face in the grasses. The dusk was kindly, and he would never know.

OLD-TIME REMEDY DARKENS THE HAIR

Gives Colour, Lustre to Faded and Gray Hair—Dandruff Quickly Removed

From time immemorial, sage and sulphur have been used for the hair and scalp. Almost everyone knows of the value of such a combination for darkening the hair, for curing dandruff and falling hair, and for making the hair grow.

In olden times the only way to get a hair tonic of this sort was to brew it in the home fireplace, a method which was troublesome and not always satisfactory. Nowadays almost every up-to-date druggist can supply his patrons with a ready-to-use product, skillfully compounded in perfectly equipped laboratories. The Wyeth Chemical Company of New York put up an ideal remedy of this sort, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, and authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

If you have dandruff, or if your hair is turning gray or coming out, don't delay, but get a bottle of this remedy to-day and see what a few days' treatment will do for you.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

A Man Of Business

(Short Story.)

(By Thomas Krafton)

"A footballer!" Mr. Daniel Burns almost dropped the cup he was raising to his lips as he stared utterly dumfounded, across the breakfast table at his daughter. Molly Burns met the gaze unflinchingly.

"He's well paid for it," she said, "and—and he's got a good business, too!"

"Business! Tch—ah!" her father burst out. "A footballer—a professional footballer! Molly, I'm ashamed of ye. I——". He paused, rose from the table and stood for a moment regarding the girl; then energetically: "But we'll talk no more about it. 'Tis quite impossible; as you well know. Never let me hear you mention such a subject again."

"But, dad——"

"I'm surprised at ye, Molly Ashamed! To think that a daughter of mine should dream of such a thing—a professional footballer!"

And, angry but dignified, Mr. Dan'l Burns left the room and went to the shop. For he was a business man, as he himself would have given you to understand. True, his business was rather a mixed one; you could buy drapery, or soap, or patent medicines at one counter, while at the little side counter you could obtain oil, a tin of paint, blacking, turpentine and sundry other necessities.

Yet Daniel Burns was proud of the business, and years ago it had in reality been quite a paying concern. Everybody in the village of Derrickburn had patronised it. But that was before the trolley had run from Stanboro', the big manufacturing town two or three miles away. Now, if Dan'l had been true to himself, he would have admitted that it barely paid to keep the shop open. Still, he was the only storekeeper of his kind in the district.

There was one thing Dan'l couldn't abide—people who wasted their Saturday afternoons on football. They were anathema to him. Stanboro' had a famous team, and enthusiasts abounded in Derrickburn. They would come even to Dan'l's store and speak of the prospect for the next Saturday's match. But they only spoke of it once.

From this you will easily understand his astonishment, his horror, when Molly, the pride of her father's eye, his only child, the centre of his hopes, told him, in a most casual manner at breakfast that she was keeping company with Frank Heberden. Even old Dan'l knew who Heberden was—Stanboro's left fullback, captain for three years of the team, and a man who had five international caps to his credit. A professional footballer! And for six months Molly, unknown to her father, had been meeting him of nights at the home of a friend; had been for walks with him; nay, had even confessed that she had on two or three occasions sat in the grandstand at the game and watched him play. It made Dan'l sick with mortification.

Nothing more was said that day. Molly went about the house seemingly resigned to her lot. Her father had spoken, and his word hitherto had been law. Her father knew that. At night Molly went out for a short time, and it was while she was away that there stepped into the shop a new customer. A big, upstanding man he was, youngish looking, clean shaven, and he strode into the place with the manner of one who owns the universe.

"Good evening. You'll be Mr. Dan'l Burns, I'm thinking?" And the stranger held out his hand. "Dare say you know me too. Heberden's my name—Frank Heberden. Perhaps Molly will have mentioned it. I'd like a word or two in private with you—and Molly, if she's about. Oh!"

The last exclamation came abruptly, for Dan'l had, in quite a dramatic way, drawn himself up stiffly; had deliberately scorned the proffered hand. "Perhaps Miss Burns did mention your name to me," he said. "But I'd have you to understand that I've no desire to make further acquaintance with you. I'm a man of business, Mr. Heberden, and believe in plain speaking. Neither my daughter nor me wish to be acquainted with a footballer—a professional footballer. We're respectable folk, Mr. Heberden. Good night!"

"But"—Heberden's healthy face had taken on a deeper glow—"I'm a business man myself, Mr. Burns; and as for my footballing—well, that's what helps my business. I've got one of the best athletic outfitting shops in this country; four assist——"

"A man can't be a business man and a footballer," Mr. Burns remarked quietly, and with dignity. Good night, Mr. Heberden; I'll be closing the shop now."

Heberden turned and went to the door. It was plain he had not anticipated this reception, and his pride had been touched. As he opened the narrow little door, however, he could not refrain from a parting shot. "Oh, very well—very well," he said. "I'll be showing you, perhaps, what kind of a business man I am. Good night, Mr. Burns. And just take a look some time at my place. You wouldn't call this a shop if you'd seen my establishment. This is only a marine-store, mum!" And with that unkind cut at the man he hoped to have for father-in-law, Heberden passed out. On the opposite side of the street was Molly waiting for him.

It was just about as much as Mr. Burns could do to make his shop pay, and he had very little capital to back him up. His trade lay chiefly among the poorer people of the village—folks who bought small quantities. When first the new store appeared over the way Dan'l smiled. Certainly a lot of paint had been spent on making it bright, and the big sign, "Walbrook & Co." looked more imposing than the almost undecipherable "Daniel Burns" over his own place. Walbrook & Co. were also dealers in many things and they proclaimed the fact by handbills distributed throughout the village. Moreover, they gave samples away—free! As much, in some cases, as you could get at Burns' for five cents.

They invited every housewife in the place to visit them, and they gave money. One by one the inhabitants called. The children preferred, when their mothers sent them for soap, to go to Walbrook's. Frequently Mr. Walbrook—for that was the gentleman's name—gave them candy.

A month went by—six weeks; Dan'l Burns somehow had grown older in that time. But as yet he had said nothing to his daughter. Somehow she had not invited his confidence. It seemed to him that she had no manner of doubt he could withstand all competition, and he could not bring himself to lower his pride by confessing that bankruptcy and ruin were perilously near them.

He left her in charge of the store one afternoon and, arrayed in his best suit, set out bravely; came back defeated, broken. That night he told her.

"I didn't tell you, Molly, but this afternoon I went to see John Fairclough."

"John Fairclough!" Molly echoed in surprise.

"Yes, Molly. And I asked him to lend me five hundred dollars. He always claimed to be a friend of mine. But he said it wasn't safe."

Molly looked at him; but Dan'l was staring at the floor, so that he never noticed how she blighted her eyes and forced back the tears.

"You may as well know all," he blurted out. "We're ruined. I—I could not stand up against Walbrook's, with their new-fangled ways. I'm bankrupt." Molly came over to him, then knelt by his side.

"Is there no way out, dad? Can't you fight them?" He shook his head. "Then, dad, let me help you. Shall I find someone to put things straight? Suppose Walbrook's closed, or you bought them out?"

"Molly—Molly! Buy them out? And they won't close. They've been on me."

"Not yet, dad. You wait." And before he quite realised it she had left him. Molly was away some little time. When at last she returned she came in gently, then turned to someone outside. "Come in, Frank!"

Mr. Burns looked up. With Molly was a tall, well-set man, wearing a light overcoat. "Good evening, Mr. Burns," he said, somewhat apologetically. "I was just having a bit of a turn at the lads' club when Molly came, so excuse the dress."

"Molly asked you? What for, Mr. Heberden?" Heberden took a deep breath. Then he sat down on the chair Molly had pushed forward. "It's purely a matter of business, Mr. Burns," he said, slowly. "You see, I've got a big place in Stanboro', but I can't extend. So I've been looking round for some other trade to put money in. And I found it."

"Well?" Dan'l could not yet see the object of the visit.

"I'm a business man, Mr. Burns, and sentiment doesn't pay in business. But I don't want to rob any man of his living. That's why I have come to talk to you. Walbrook's—you know Walbrook & Co., across the way? I thought so. I'm Walbrook & Co."

"Eh?" Dan'l started.

"So I've come with a business proposition, Mr. Burns." Heberden handed him a paper. "You'll find it all plain there, I think. There's room for both Walbrook and Burns in Derrickburn, if they're run on business lines. I've thought it all out. Look at it, Mr. Burns."

Dan'l took the paper. For five minutes he read every word, written in Heberden's bold hand, slowly and carefully.

"Ay," he said at last, "it's a scheme—businesslike scheme. But what's this condition?"

"Just this." And Heberden now spoke quickly. "We want it to be a family concern, Mr. Burns. I'll find the capital; but I'm a business man, and I want a partner for my other place. I'm building a house out here—I want someone to look after it. Do you agree to Molly coming in as my partner?" He waited, and presently old Dan'l murmured: "Very well—very well. It's a businesslike thing for a young man—and I dare say it's only reasonable."

"A change would do you good," said Frank the following Saturday morning. "Tell you what, Mr. Burns. Come and see how your partners shapes on the football field. It'll be a great game to-day against the Sparrows."

"I dare say—I dare say," Dan'l said, and then paused suddenly. "I've never been to a football game, but I'll come, Frank."

SEEN AND HEARD

The Three Bears

"Oscar Hammerstein," said an actress on the Cunard pier in New York, "entertained me at tea last week in his new opera house in London.

"The opera house is in Kingsway. It's a wonderful place, all but the statues on the top. They're hideous, but, being heavily draped, they will be sure to please the Londoners.

"Mr. Hammerstein at tea talked about his successes and his failures—his mighty successes as an inventor of cigar-making machinery and his 999 successes in opera.

"Then he mentioned his tremendous failure with his first opera house fifteen years ago—how he devoted it to opera and ballet and it wouldn't go; how he then turned it into a theatre, with Mrs. Bernard Beere as his star, and it wouldn't go; and how at last he turned it into a musichall and made a fortune.

"'Yes,' said Mr. Hammerstein, with a chuckle, 'that was the record of that place—first, Meyerbeer; then Bernard Beere; then lager beer.'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Waves His Nose

Senator Luke Lea of Tennessee, apropos of the operation for transfusion of blood that he so nobly underwent on his wife's behalf, said at a dinner in Washington: "Latter-day surgery is a wonderful thing, and I'm sure you won't think me at all disrespectful if I tell you a strange story about it. I have a friend named Jasper, and, meeting him the other day, I said: 'Jasper, you look somewhat queer!' 'I expect it's my nose,' said he. 'I fell down a coal hole and tore a big piece out of it.' 'Why, your nose seems all right,' said I. The surgeons, you know, grafted a piece of my arm on to it. But the shape is changed, and, besides, I can't go to the ball games any more.' 'No?' I said. 'Why not?' 'Because,' said Jasper, 'having a piece out of my arm in my nose, whenever I get excited over a good play, I start to wave it, and that makes me so deuced conspicuous.'"

Mrs. Stanton's Reply to Greeley

There was once a passage-at-arms between Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the eminent woman suffragist, and Horace Greeley on the occasion of a discourse by the former on the right of women to the ballot. In the midst of her talk Greeley interposed in his high-pitched falsetto voice:

"What would you do in time of war if you had the suffrage?"

This seemed like a poser, but the lady had been before the public too long to be disconcerted by an unexpected question and she promptly replied:

"Just what you have done, Mr. Greeley—stay at home and urge others to go and fight."—Westchester County Magazine.

Alibi

David Bispham, the famous singer, when crossing the Atlantic, once got into conversation with a ship's barber. "I 'opes," said the barber, "that we shall 'ave the pleasure of 'earing you at the concert to-night?" "No," replied the singer, "I've just finished a long and exhausting season, and within a few days I am to open in London. I have decided not to do anything on the voyage." "It's the same way with me," said the barber, sympathetically. "When I'm ashore I never looks at a razor!"—Tit-Bits.

Actuality

"The late Eustace de Cordova will be missed on the New York Stock Exchange," said a New York broker. "He had a caustic and yet kindly wit."

"I remember hearing Mr. Cordova reply to a toast at a lawyer's banquet. He said a lawyer's wife asked her husband, anxiously, as she was turning in one night:

"'Do you think it is better, dear, to lie on the right side?'

"'My darling,' the lawyer answered, 'if you are on the right side, it actually happens sometimes that you don't have to lie at all!'"—Washington Star.

WRONG BOTH WAYS.

"That young son-in-law of mine," said Mr. Cumrox, "says I'm unreasonable. And maybe he's right."

"What's the matter?"

"Before their marriage I objected to his attentions to my daughter. Now I'm objecting to his inattention."—Washington Star.

GOOD INFLUENCE.

Bishop William F. Anderson, of Chattanooga, was praising the value of a good religious influence on the home life of children.

"Even when this influence shows itself in comical ways," he said, "it is still an influence for good."

Bishop Anderson smiled.

"I know a little lad," he continued, "who lives with his grandfather, a deacon of the church. This little lad ran in to his grandfather one day and shouted excitedly:

"'Grandpa! Grandpa! Evans' cow is dead! God called her home!'"—

An Intimate View of the Daily Life and Lovable Personality of the Man Whose Simplicity Not Even His Elevation to the Cardinalate Can Change

Monsignor John M. Farley

Bishop John M. Farley
1895

Archbishop John M. Farley
1902

(Copyright, 1912, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

WHEN John Cardinal Farley returns from Rome, where for six weeks he has been the recipient of such honors as for quantity and quality rarely befall even the highest of the ecclesiastics of the Roman Catholic Church, he will go back into the same modest, quiet, retiring life from which as Archbishop Farley he emerged, by necessity, the evening that cables from the Eternal City to the press of this country announced it was the intention of Pope Pius X. to raise the head of the Archdiocese of New York to the cardinalate. At least such is what is prophesied by all who are nearest to him.

Probably the only difference in the daily life of Cardinal Farley from those of Archbishop Farley will be that he will have to travel more and receive more visitors. Owing to his new dignity Cardinal Farley will be called upon to attend and assist at big ecclesiastical functions, which when he was only an archbishop he might have been able to decline. Now he will feel it impossible to refuse. His being a cardinal gives him an international relation. The same will be true of his seeing diplomats of church and nations as they pass through New York. Still almost every prominent foreigner has long found his way to the archiepiscopal residence, which is at No. 452 Madison avenue.

"Although he is a cardinal he is also the Archbishop of New York," said Mgr. Patrick J. Hayes to our correspondent a few days ago, in speaking of Cardinal Farley's return.

"That necessitates his doing the work of the Archbishop, which is no easy task," continued Mgr. Hayes. "His life will not be changed one iota. And he will have no more time heavy on his hands than he had before, which is not any at all."

Mgr. Hayes, who is chancellor of the archdiocese and Mgr. James V. Lewis, his secretary, live with the Cardinal. Mgr. Lewis is abroad with him.

Cardinal Farley will still manage 962 priests, 344 churches, 154 parochial schools, with their 1,210,920 souls, under his spiritual care. Besides these there is the vast number of hospitals, orphan asylums, homes for the aged, refuges, day nurseries, institutes, cemeteries and special missions, of which he is the chief director.

There is a strong impression that Cardinal Farley will retire a little more from public view than ever just because of the added tax that will be put upon him with his new honors, if he allows his kindness of spirit to manifest itself.

The Cardinal is in his seventieth year, but he is in the pink of health. However, with the new drains on his time, it is a question whether he can confirm as many classes as heretofore. He sees callers from nine to twelve o'clock every morning, be is home, and these alone, with his vast correspondence, take the working time of an ordinary man.

The archiepiscopal residence will continue more than ever to be the Mecca for prelates. Among the Cardinals past and present who have been entertained there since Mgr. Farley became the host are Satolli, Vincenzo Vannutelli, Gibbons, Falconio, Logue, Bourne and O'Connell. Cardinal Farley is known as a charming host.

Garments of the Cardinal.

Perhaps, after all, the only visible change in Mgr. Farley will be in his manner of dress. He will never more appear in scarlet, except in Advent and Lent, when his robes will be the color of an archbishop.

When his earthly days are done he will be laid away in scarlet garb in the crypt for the archbishops of New York under the high altar of St. Patrick's, and his cardinal's hat, with its fifteen tassels, will be suspended from the ceiling over the altar beside what is left of the red hat of Cardinal McCloskey.

All of the new Church robes of Archbishop Farley were made in Rome by the Vatican tailor and were ready when he was created a Cardinal. But his house gowns or cassocks were sent to a New York firm to have the red piping and silk lining changed to that of scarlet. He has replaced his little red skull cap with a scarlet one. His stationery will be stamped "Cardinal's residence" in scarlet.

The only change in Cardinal Farley's cathedral will be in the upholstery of the chair in his throne, which is to the left of the chancel, and in his coat of arms in the background. The dark red velvet of the chair will be replaced with scarlet, and a new coat of arms showing the fifteen tassels to the hat instead of the twelve will be hung there. At his titular church in Rome, the Santa Maria Sopra Minerva, his picture and coat of arms will hang in the sacristy.

In time, when it can be afforded, there is a plan to refurnish his drawing room entirely in scarlet. The main parlor in the old fashioned stately residence of Cardinal Gibbons, in North Charles street, Baltimore, is done entirely in scarlet. In the see house of New York the walls, the window draperies, the rugs and the furniture will be of cardinal red.

Although in Rome the custom of ages requires a prince of the Church always to ride about the city in a coach drawn by coal black horses, Cardinal Farley, when he gets back to his home town, will walk about the streets quite as democratically as of old. In short, he will be the same simple man, of plain habits, as he has been for forty-one and a half years of his priesthood.

When Cardinal Farley comes home he will continue to go to confession once a week, say his "office" every day, fast on holy days, and keep all the other rules the humblest priest observes.

Mgr. Farley is known for his calm, quiet self-possession. He can be counted on to master any situation. Perhaps at no time was this so clearly shown as when he was expecting a verification of the newspaper reports from Rome that he was to be made a cardinal. When the letter from Cardinal Merry del Val finally came bearing the glad tidings the Archbishop broke the envelope containing the Vatican seal quite as deliberately as he would break that of his telephone bill. Even Mgr. Lewis, who had been down town, did not know for hours that the official verification of the press despatches had come.

Loves the Poor.

Cardinal Farley loves the poor. One of the first persons he saw after the news came from Rome of his election to the Sacred College was a poor man from St. Gabriel's parish who had little more than the clothes on his back. The Cardinal loves children, and there is no occasion that he looks forward to with such pleasure as Holy Innocents' day, when he goes to the foundling asylum to bless the children. He loves old people and likes to impart his blessing to the aged. He loves animals. The only pet in the house is a canary, but if he had time he would have more.

Mgr. Farley loves to read. He reads nearly all the New York daily papers. He does not want to miss a speck of Catholic news.

All the time he has over and above keeping posted on the questions of the day Cardinal Farley likes to spend on books of travel and historical books just so far as they tell of people. The Cardinal loves his fellow men and they interest him more than things. Whenever he goes on the train he fills his handbag with books of travel or history. He believes in improving the time even when travelling.

There is only one thing which Cardinal Farley does not love, and that is tobacco. He does not smoke or use it in any form.

The Cardinal has his hobbies. He will not officiate at the wedding of any non-Catholic to a Catholic. He insists on every city church having a parochial school, believing this is the way to keep the children in their faith.

One of the institutions Cardinal Farley has founded, and which he loves the best, is the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, of which the Rev. John J. Dunn is the director, and which last year sent $100,727.32 to foreign missions. Another pet institution is the Catholic Bowery Mission, which he has recently placed in the hands of Father William J. Kafter. Still another is the Chinese Mission, at No. 108 Park street, under Father V. H. Montanar, a French priest. The thing which distresses him about the Chinese is that they have not been baptised.

Cardinal Farley has many friends among non-Catholics. New Year's Day when he receives his priests and other visitors there are always many Protestants and some Jews among his callers. He has the good will of his Protestant brethren in the ministry, and nothing pleased him more than the kind words they said when he was made a Cardinal.

The New York Cardinal is known for his fairness in placing his priests. Every time a pastor dies Mgr. Farley has the difficult task of choosing his successor. The question is whom to promote. Such problems take up far more of his time than performing the public functions of a Bishop, directing the establishment of a new parish or anything else.

"As the years go by," said Mgr. Hayes, "I grow in my admiration for Cardinal Farley." He is a master in church government. He is so keen and right in his judgments of men. He picks out the man for a place not because of a personal liking, but because he sees in that man one who will make a success of the work in question. And he seldom, if ever, makes a mistake."

Perhaps in nothing is the simplicity of the life of Cardinal Farley so evident as in his eating. He never drinks any coffee. He does not like it. Instead he takes tea. His breakfast as a rule is made up of one kind of fruit, a cereal, a cup of tea and either one lamb chop or a small piece of beefsteak.

Dinner is served in the middle of the day, and as the Cardinal takes a walk daily from twelve to one o'clock he usually has a good appetite for this meal. It consists of soup, which Mgr. Farley greatly likes; one meat—usually a roast—several vegetables, a simple salad and either a custard or some dessert quite as plain.

There is no supper. Tea is served at six, and as the Cardinal walks again from five to six one might think he would want another hearty meal. But he takes scarcely more than a cup of tea, and some breadstuff. He eats meat never more than twice a day, and frequently only once. He observes very strictly every fast of his Church.

When the Cardinal has time he walks again from eight to nine o'clock in the evening. It is to walking he attributes his health. He is always accompanied by Mgr. Hayes or Lewis or some visiting priest. The Archbishop takes off his hat whenever he passes a Catholic church and follows out the ordinary practices of the Catholic laity.

While the home of Cardinal Farley is comfortable it does not compare in the least degree with the elegance of the residences which surround it. And still there is not the air of extreme plainness which marks the rectory of the average Catholic priest.

All the rooms on the first floor have hardwood floors and are covered with big rugs. There is a churchly appearance throughout. This home runs very smoothly, and it is like a benediction even to enter its portal and more so to come into the presence of its gracious, dignified, devout host.

At the left of the entrance there is a series of framed resolutions under carved ecclesiastical arches. These were presented to the diocese by the Common Council of the City of New York on the death of Archbishop Hughes.

On the same side of the hall across from the drawing room door is another set of resolutions in much the same kind of frame. These were presented to Cardinal McCloskey by the Bishops of the New York province, his clergy and laity on the completion of fifty years as a priest and twenty-five years as a Cardinal. It was like the double jubilee Cardinal Gibbons observed this fall.

Copies of Famous Paintings.

In the reception room, which is to the right of the front door, there are copies of three famous masterpieces which Cardinal Farley loves. They are "The Madonna of the Eyes," "The Madonna of the Fish" and the Madonna presenting the Child to St. Francis of Assisi. The only other pictures in this room are an old painting of one of the saints and a large pen sketch of St. Joseph's Seminary, Dunwoodie, the latter being over the mantel.

In one corner by a front window of the reception room hangs, in a thick gold frame, a set of illumined resolutions presented by the clergy to Mgr. Farley on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate. At this time he was pastor of St. Gabriel's Church and vicar general of the diocese. Between the two windows there is a like frame containing illumined resolutions presented to Mgr. Farley when he was made Archbishop of New York, after the death of Archbishop Corrigan. In this room the chair, and sofa are upholstered in green leather and there is an oblong table in the centre. The dining room, also simple in its furnishings, stretches across the back of the house.

The drawing room, eventually to be scarlet, now has red for its predominating color. The sofas and chairs, which are large, are upholstered in dark red, with the coat of arms of Archbishop Farley in relief. An immense portrait of Pius X. hangs between the two large front windows, taking up all the intervening space. This is in front of a background of dark red.

Facing each other on the other walls of this room are lifesize portraits of Leo XIII. and Pius IX. and the bishops and archbishops of New York. Cardinal McCloskey is sitting on a scarlet chair clad in the full robes of his office. Near him is John Hughes, the first Archbishop of New York, founder of the Cathedral. Not far away is Michael A. Corrigan, his successor and predecessor of Cardinal Farley. It is the general belief that had Archbishop Corrigan lived one year longer he would have been a cardinal. The others are Bishop Luke Concanen, the first Bishop of New York, who was consecrated for this see but died before he reached these shores, and Bishops John Connolly and John Dubois.

Just under the mantel is a white marble bust of the Christ. There are busts also of all the bishops and archbishops. Under the painting of Pius X. on a table is a very small bronze bust of Archbishop Farley, which was executed as a labor of love by one of his priests. When the news came from Rome of his elevation to the cardinalate some one put two scarlet peanuts upon this on each of which was printed in gold "Cardinal Farley." They have remained.

In the centre of the drawing room is a large round table with heavily carved legs and a top of inlaid marble. This was a gift of Pope Pius IX. to Cardinal McCloskey. In the top is a piece of every variety of marble made at the Vatican. In the centre of this table is a small electric lamp. And it is a familiar sight to see Archbishop Farley standing or sitting under this lamp, which he invariably turns on when he wants to take any notes or to read a line or two.

Another conspicuous article of furniture in this room is a most highly carved desk made in Damascus and presented to the present archbishop by the Maronites of New York, whose friend and spiritual adviser he has ever been.

Office of the Cardinal.

On the second floor the front of the house is taken up with the office of Cardinal Farley, which is over the drawing room, and the offices of Mgr. Hayes and Mgr. Lewis, over the reception room.

He hopes to die. Cardinal Gibbons has never been willing to have either a carriage and horses or an automobile; but of late years he accepts the hospitality of his friends often by riding to and from his visitations in a motor car.

Back of the office of Cardinal Farley is his sleeping apartment. In the rear of the third floor, overlooking the Cathedral, is his private chapel. Here he says mass every morning at quarter past seven, assisted by Mgr. James V. Lewis, his secretary, with boys from Cathedral College serving him at the altar. There is a large library, said to contain about the finest collection of ecclesiastical books in this country.

Cardinal Farley loves his home, and soon after he had really been invested with the red hat his friends here began to detect the homesick note in his talks and letters. He dislikes to travel except when necessary and he particularly abhors staying at hotels because by his very dress he is conspicuous.

Not only is this simplicity of life natural to Cardinal Farley, but he has the example of none other than Cardinal Gibbons, who for a quarter of a century has been the only member from the United States in the Sacred College. The venerable Cardinal of Baltimore is perhaps the most familiar figure on the sidewalks of the city where he has long lived and in which he has said time and time again Mass. Cardinal McCloskey, North America's first and New York's only other Cardinal, set the example for simplicity of princes of the Church in this country.

Cardinal McCloskey, who died in the house where Cardinal Farley now lives, once had a carriage and horses, but because of the expense of keeping them he sold his carriage and gave the money to St. Patrick's Cathedral. Cardinal Farley was the twelve years secretary to the first Cardinal, third of whose brothers of brief and plainness of habit the present prelate imbibed.

Time and time again the priests of the archdiocese of New York have begged to be allowed to present their beloved archbishop with an automobile, but Mgr. Farley has always refused, saying he did not afford to keep it. So he goes without. He has a coach given him by a layman, but this he keeps at Yonkers and uses only to go from the train to Dunwoodie Seminary.

Still, with all the persistency against keeping an automobile, the Archbishop of New York rather shuns public conveyances. This is because every eye stares at him. Each priest knowing this and also wishing to insure his easy transportation, sends a rented carriage or automobile for him when he is to come to that particular church for an ecclesiastical function. Once in a while the Cardinal rents a taximeter. When a call is sent there is always a "taxi" in front of his house within five minutes. But the Archbishop will never learn. He prefers to walk even from the Grand Central Station. Sometimes he has to go often because his diocese extends more than one hundred miles up the Hudson, including Westchester, Putnam, Dutchess, Sullivan and Ulster counties.

Baltimore

I have known personally for a great number of years, His Eminence Cardinal Farley, when the Holy Father has recently honored by elevating him to the Cardinalate, and I have always admired in him those qualities which go to make up a true and zealous Prelate. During his long career, first as a priest in the Archdiocese of New York, then as Auxiliary to the late Archbishop Corrigan, and lastly as the Archbishop of the great Archdiocese of New York, he has at all times served the greatest zeal in all things that pertain to the welfare of the Church and of his fellow-citizens. At all times he has enjoyed the esteem and affection of those who labored with and under him; his clergy love and esteem him, and all, clergy and laity have reasons to rejoice that he has received from the hands of the Holy Father such a well-merited honor, for, in honoring him, the Holy Father has also honored the great Archdiocese over which he so ably presides. May he live for many years to enjoy the great dignity which has been conferred upon him.

A Sunday Morning Visit to All Saints' Anglican Church

(By Roy Gilray.)

In a general way the Church's function is the salvation of the world, but as to the process of salvation, or the operation in bringing about salvation, there seems to be a difference of opinion.

If every church once a year were to undertake to study the community in which it actually exists for the purpose of discovering its moral and religious needs, and were then to ask itself how best it could be operated to meet those needs, organized Christianity would be wonderfully more efficient than it is to-day. Just as those business organizations, which do not constantly attempt to readapt themselves to changing conditions, find themselves outclassed and waning by their more active competitors, will the Churches who are pursuing a "let alone" policy find themselves of decreasing significance.

The attachment of members to a church should be in proportion not to what they get from it, but to what they give to it. This is the kind of congregation with which working people should be identified—one where their services will be claimed and their gifts exercised. They can begin to exercise these at once; because one of the most profitable services they can render is to fill the place of worship by taking along their friends or companions. There seems to be an erroneous opinion that the Christianization of the world is to be the work of an ordained and salaried class.

If the experience of the last 2,000 years counts for anything, its inevitable lesson is that with a waning Church soon a waning morality and spiritual life set in. The human soul withers without prayer and worship and contemplation of God fully as sure as the body weakens without light, air, exercise and food.

The ministers must preach and build up the Church if they desire to have any. They should educate every child under their care for the Church. They should make every child consider the Church just exactly as natural a part of his your... his choice of a trade or profess... They should set the young people at work in the Church as soon as they join. They should talk more about the Church—its origin, its wonderful history, its triumphs, its great saints and leaders, the transformations it has wrought, and show how all good and holy principles and institutions have been born of it. They should spend much thought on making its services attractive and helpful. Above all, they should try to make their congregation love it, and make it the centre of the people's life, the home of the soul.

Last Sunday morning we worshipped with the people of All Saints' Church. The rich, full, familiar tones of the old bell, as it called the congregation together, reminded us of the years gone by as it performed a similar service in the tower of St. John's. The vision of St. John's carried us back to the early days of Peterborough, when the Rev. Samuel Armour administered to the spiritual requirements of his first flock as they gathered in the little log school house that stood on Sheridan Street, behind the old Union School.

In 1831 tenders were advertised in the Cobourg Star for the erection of an edifice to be known as St. John's Church. The contract was awarded to Joseph Scobell.

This Rectory was one of the 57 created under the administration of Sir John Colborne. It comprised four acres of ground north of Hunter, east of Water and south of Brock Streets.

At the time of completion, 1846, a large clock was placed in the tower, but on account of the trouble and expense attending its regulation and supervision it was neglected.

In its place we now have the People's Chimes, a type of civic, social and religious unity of the citizens of Peterborough.

Many alterations and changes have brought the Church to the form we now behold as we pass down Hunter Street. Changes have taken place in our city as well. Population flowed in locating, for the most part, south of Charlotte Street. Recognizing the need of providing for those who claimed the Church of England as their home, the workers of St. John's received permission to use the little building on Dalhousie Street between Stewart and Rubidge, which was erected as a mission of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church.

Rev. Mr. Armitage was the first Rector, and was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Major, who prized a tower of strength to the new congregation. It was during his rectorship that the plan for the new edifice took form, and it was largely due to his splendid executive ability and great enthusiasm that the project became such a success and reality during the rectorship of Rev. Mr. Trumpour, who in turn has been succeeded by Rev. R. B. Grob, M.A., a young man who hails from Toronto, where for the past two years he has been Curate of the Church of the Epiphany, Parkdale, assisting Rev. Canon Bernard Bryan. Before leaving Parkdale Mr. Grobb was presented with a purse of gold and an illuminated address thanking him for his services, mentioning especially the great hold he had obtained of the congregation, and for his splendid work in connection with the Young People's Association. He is a product of Wycliffe College, where he was very popular among the student body, having been president of the Theological Literary Society.

To meet him and feel the strength of his friendly hand-clasp is to admire him for his manliness. While leading his congregation in their devotions he speaks with becoming deliberation, clearly enunciating as he proceeds, leaving out that ultra-ecclesiastical tone so characteristic of some of the Church of England clergy. It may sound all right in England, but in this democratic country it seems out of place. All Saints' are to be congratulated in securing the services of Rev. Mr. Grobb.

Their Church is a splendid structure of stone, awaiting the erection of the chancel and the completion of the tower. These, however, will be proceeded with as soon as the financial condition of the Church warrants the work. They have a pipe organ fitted up temporarily in the north-west corner of the main body of the Church, which adds greatly to the effectiveness of the service of praise.

The sermon was thoroughly enjoyed by the large congregation present, and partook of an exhortation to greater missionary zeal. Rev. Mr. Grobb's... the keynote of the whole situation, when he intimated that the true test of the progressiveness of any Church is the condition of its work for missions.

The text was taken from Acts 16: 9, "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying: Come over into Macedonia, and help us."

This is the great missionary call from the West to the East, from Europe to Asia. Is it not very strange that the call does come from the East to the West; even to-day, is it not a strange fact that the call comes from India, China and Japan, to America, England and Europe?

At the beginning the gospel was given a westward trend. The hope of the East is to receive the Gospel as it encircles the globe in its conquering march.

Paul was the first great missionary. As he lay asleep in the City of Troas, in Asia Minor, dreaming, perhaps, of the journey he was about to make into Bithynia, a vision appeared unto him; a Macedonian from Europe stood before him, saying, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us."

The gospel arose in the East. It might have been expected to spread east; it might have spread to Arabia, the stronghold of Mahomet; to Central Asia, with its sacred Ganges; to China, the land of Confucius. Had it done so, we would have seen missionaries coming to us from China and Japan to tell the story of the Cross. God conferred on the West the great priority; Paul, instead of proceeding as originally intended, set out in the direction of the setting sun to the western nations.

Is it not strange that Macedonia should make the appeal to little Judea? The one had so much, the other so little.

The European might have said, "What have you got that we have not?"

Paul might have answered, "We are very poor; we have no home; we work for our living, my companion and I, by making tents; we press on from town to town living on our friends; many nights we spend in the common jail; hunger, thirst, cold—yea, stripes—are ours; we are very, very poor."

The Macedonian might have replied, "We have a great land, neighbours to the south of us, the Grecians, with a temple on every hill, and every temple full of gold; our countries are noted for their magnificence, their beauty, their poetry, and their literary works, scholars and teachers abound, culture and refinement are manifest on every hand; in short, we have everything but Christ."

To which Paul replies, "We have nothing but Christ."

"Then come over and help us," is the pathetic appeal of the Macedonian.

This is the call of the workaday world to a man with a great faith to impart; representing the eternal need that the world feels for itself. The secular world cannot live without the help of Jesus Christ.

No man can perform the duties of the hour without the light of the hour. Take away the light of to-morrow and there will be no light for to-day. The student works for a prize; the clerk works for promotion. There is no joy for to-day if there is no hope of to-morrow. The coming light casts a halo over the present.

Some writers claim that the religions of the East are adapted to the Oriental mind, that Christianity is not so adapted. So different is the Oriental from the Westerner that the land of the East has been called "topsy-turvy land." In Japanese paintings there is no perspective, no depth; one would almost think that the Japanese eye was different from ours. In fact, almost everything seems different. But there is one thing in human nature that is the same the world over, the heart is always responsive to the same emotions. The heart of the Chinaman, of the Jap, of the Hindoo, is no different from ours.

The call took the form of a beckoning—"Come." We hear the Lord's command, "Go," but as the centuries roll on it gets fainter and less distinct. The great call to the world to-day is a call from the earth, from a man, from our flesh and blood.

The call comes from China, India, Japan, not an audible call (we have never received a delegation from the heathen nations), but a silent, mute appeal—the strongest of all. It arouses in us the greatest sympathy.

The speaker used a very effective illustration to impress the mute appeal, the soul hungering for light, by referring to Helen Keller. Miss Keller, now a young woman, is a graduate of Harvard University, a writer of many books, a contributor to magazines, probably the greatest genius of the present generation, the possessor of a marvellous mind, she was born blind, deaf, dumb, and with very little of the sense of smell. All she got from the world was conveyed to her by the touch of her teacher's lips. One after another ideas were conveyed from soul to soul until she stands to-day the most wonderful phenomenon in the science of mental philosophy.

Hers was a mute appeal. She knew nothing of the world; she had never seen the flowers, had never viewed the fields in the spring and autumn, her soul had never been stirred by music; yet the appeal was there and was answered.

In like manner the appeal of man to the One above him, with that hungering of the soul after light, was a mute appeal, and was answered by the sacrifice on the cross.

If we are going to be Christians worthy of the name, if we are going to be missionaries spreading the gospel tidings, we need a vision of that life which gave the world a hope and promise which never can be taken away.

Some are saying, "Will not God, in His goodness and mercy, save these people Himself, since they never had the opportunity of hearing the gospel?" To this the reverend speaker answered, "I do not know; it is too big a question; I do not know whether they will be lost for eternity or not; but this I do know, they are lost now; their life is a soulless life, a life without comfort."

The gospel of Jesus Christ is spreading westward in the direction of the setting sun—the direction in which light always travels—carrying joy and peace wherever it goes, when the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of Christ.

Suffered With Nerve Trouble For Two Years.

IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE FOR HIM TO SLEEP.

Diseases of the nervous system are very common. All the organs of the body may be sound while the nervous system alone may be diseased, therefore it is necessary for anyone suffering from any nervous trouble to procure a remedy which will at once quieten the nerves and build up the system.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will do this for you, providing you give them a fair trial.

Mr. Chas. W. Wood, Montreal, Que., writes:—"For two years I had suffered with nerve trouble, and it was impossible for me to sleep. It did not matter what time I went to bed, in the morning I was even worse than the night before. I consulted a doctor, and he gave me a tonic to take a half hour before going to bed. It was all right for a time, but the old trouble returned with greater force than before. One of the boys, who works with me, gave me half a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took them and I got such satisfaction that I got another box, and before I finished it I could enjoy sleep from 10 p.m. until 6 a.m., and now feel good."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The Quickest, Simplest Cough Cure

Easily and Cheaply Made at Home. Saves $20.

This recipe makes 16 ounces of cough syrup—enough to last a family a long time. You couldn't buy as much or as good cough syrup for $2.50.

Simple as it is, it gives almost instant relief and usually stops the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. This is partly due to the fact that it is slightly laxative, stimulates the appetite and has an excellent tonic effect. It is pleasant to take—children like it. An excellent remedy, too, for whooping cough, croup, sore lungs, asthma, throat troubles, etc.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water and stir for two minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16-ounce bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

Pinex is one of the oldest and best-known remedial agents for the throat membranes. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the other natural healing elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this recipe have endeared it to thousands of housewives in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

SPAGHETTI ROMAN

Half a pound of speghetti is sufficient for four persons. Have a large saucepan full of very fast boiling water; into this throw one dessertspoonful of salt, one ounce of butter and the spaghetti, sliding in the latter so that it will not get broken; keep this boiling so fast that the macaroni is constantly moving, an occasional stir with a wooden spoon will prevent it from burning to the bottom. Boil for half an hour till tender, then strain (the water should form a basis for a good white soup). Return the spaghetti to the saucepan and with two forks mix two ounces of butter, in small pieces, a cupful of grated cheese sprinkled in gradually, and a cup of tomato puree. Dish up very hot, reserving a little of the tomato and cheese for decorating the top, serve at once, handing with it additional grated cheese.

TOMATO PUREE

For making the tomato puree take one-half pound of fresh tomatoes, put them in a small stewpan with one ounce of butter and a slice of bacon; fry for 10 minutes, then stew gradually for an hour or so till pulpy, then work through a sieve with a wooden spoon. It is then ready for use, or it can be kept a day or two.

SEMOLINA GULOCHI

Quarter of a pound of semolina, one pint of milk, two ounces of grated cheese, two ounces of butter. Boil the semolina in the milk, then draw it from the fire, throw in a dessertspoonful of salt, half the butter, half the cheese, and eggs. Heat it thoroughly again, but do not let it boil; pour it on to a flat dish till about one inch thick, or as the Italians say, a finger and a half thick, cut it into diagonal pieces or rounds, one and one-half inches across. Place these above one another in a fireproof china dish, sprinkling each with the cheese and little pieces of butter, reserving more for the top. Brown in a quick oven and serve very hot, either as an entree alone with grated cheese, or as an adjunct to a dish of meat.

VEGETABLES—ANOTHER WAY.

Put the vegetables into boiling water with plenty of salt, and boil fast without the lid until tender; strain and wash carefully under the tap, replace in an enamel saucepan, with fat or butter, pepper and salt; heat and serve very hot, either with the meat or as a course by themselves.

Brussels sprouts, new young carrots or potatoes, etc., will be much improved served in a sauce made of one tablespoonful of grated cheese, pepper and salt, and half a pint of ordinary white sauce, all heated together.

UOVA PARMIGIANS, BAKED EGGS

Have ready four very hard boiled eggs, cut in halves, lengthways, place them in a fireproof dish. Make a white sauce with two ounces of butter, one tablespoonful of flour, two ounces of grated Parmesan cheese, half a pint of milk, pepper and salt; boil thoroughly and pour over the eggs and brown them in the oven. Serve in the same way very hot.—Knickerbocker Press.

SPINACH PUFF

Chop spinach very fine, add a tablespoonful of butter, melted after measuring; salt and pepper to suit, and to a pint of vegetable use, a cupful of cream, the beaten yolks of two eggs and the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs, mixing the latter carefully in after all other ingredients; turn into a buttered dish and bake twenty minutes in a hot oven. Serve in the dish in which it is cooked.

Would Not Meet Duke.

New York, Jan. 30.—The World gives prominence to the fact that Cardinal Farley declined several invitations from Ambassador Reid to meet H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught during the recent visit of to New York.

It is suggested that the cardinal, being an Irish Catholic, regards the present royal family as unfriendly to Catholic Ireland and to the Roman Catholic Church. This seems unlikely in view of the modification of the coronation oath, largely brought about through the personal influence of the present sovereign.

Another theory for the cardinal's apparent unwillingness to meet his Royal Highness is based upon the fact that the latter is the grand master of the Grand Lodge of the Masonic Order of England.

C.N.R.'s Plans For Year.

Winnipeg, Jan. 30.—Sir William Mackenzie arrived yesterday morning from the coast and spent the day at the office of the Canadian Northern. Beyond the fact that the Canadian Northern will spend $25,000,000 west of the Great Lakes, employing 20,000 men on construction this year, he had nothing to say other than confirm the report that the company would shortly have to double track its line between Winnipeg and Port Arthur. Work on branch lines in the west will be pushed in all directions.

Yesterday the Canadian Northern drove the last spike in the 96-mile extension from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing. Work is to be started at once on the new station at Calgary.
